CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

CONTAINING

THE PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES

OF THE

FORTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

VOLUME XIII.

WASHINGTON:
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

VOLUME XIII, PART VI.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

FORTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

Mr. GORMAN. I offer the following for reference to the Committee on Rules:

In the absence of the Vice-President the Senate shall choose a President pro tempore, who shall have the right to name in open Senate, or, if absent, by writing, a Senator to perform the duties of the Chair; but such substitution shall not extend beyond an adjournment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This will be referred also to the Committee on Rules.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I believe Senate bill No. 1492, which was passed over the other day without prejudice, is the first in order on the Calendar.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator from Nebraska kindly yields to me that I may renew a request I made to the Senate some time ago in pursuance of a notice given previous to that, to take up two bills for substantially one purpose, the object being to permit the Oregon Short Line Railway to go on with its work. They are House bill No. 5004, to ratify an agreement with the Shoshones and Bannocks about crossing their reservation, and Senate bill No. 972, which is a bill giving the Oregon Short Line Railway the necessary permission.

Mr. McMILLAN. Does that require unanimous consent?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate by a majority can take up any bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move to take up the House bill.

Mr. HOAR. How long will that take?

Mr. HAWLEY. I am not aware of a possible objection. Somebody, of course, may raise one here.

Mr. FERRY. It is only to last until two o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is all. The motion is to set aside the Anthony rule and take up this bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. A large number of citizens in different parts of the country are interested.

Mr. McMILLAN. I certainly have no objection to the passage of the charter.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move to take up the two bills in question, first the House bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY.]

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 5004) to accept and ratify an agreement with the Shoshone and Bannock Indians for the sale of a portion of their reservation in Idaho Territory required for the use of the Utah and Northern Railroad, and to make the necessary appropriation for carrying out the same.

Mr. McMILLAN. So far as this bill is concerned, I am not aware of any objection to it; but that I desire to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs whether the rights of the Government and of the Indians have been properly protected in regard to this right of way.

Mr. DAWES. This bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs. The Interior Department sent an efficient officer out there to negotiate with the Indians, and all the proceedings of this officer with the Indians are reported back to the Department. He made an agreement with the Indians by which this right of way could be obtained upon the payment of a given sum of money, which we thought and the Indians thought was fair, and the Interior Department has approved of it. This bill is in the form which the Senate has adopted several times.

Mr. McMILLAN. From the reading of the bill I think it refers only to the right of way through this Indian reservation.

Mr. HAWLEY. The bill is strictly, or it is entitled "to accept and ratify an agreement with the Shoshone and Bannock Indians for the sale of a portion of their reservation in Idaho Territory for the use of the Utah and Northern Railroad," &c. It gives them a right of way.

Mr. DAWES. I will say that this bill goes no further than to obtain the right of way through the Indian reservation. It does not touch the propriety of any particular railroad having a preference.

Mr. McMILLAN. So I understand.

Mr. HAWLEY. The treaty is a liberal one in my opinion, is so adjudged to be by the Interior Department. Full report is made of the whole correspondence in House Executive Document No. 18 of this session, a pamphlet which I hold in my hand, which gives every detail of the negotiation with the Indians, and the arrangement is liberal, giving $7.70 an acre. There is no sort of objection on that account.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OREGON SHORT-LINE RAILWAY.

Mr. HAWLEY. Now I move to take up Senate bill No. 972. That is a shorter bill than the other, and will take but a moment to read.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 972) creating the Oregon Short-Line Railway Company a corporation in the Territories of Utah, Idaho, and Wyoming, and for other purposes.

Mr. McMILLAN. I should like to hear the object and purpose of this bill explained.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is a report in the case, not a very long one, but I think I can perhaps state the matter even more briefly than that. I desire to explain the necessity for this action.

The Oregon Short-Line Railway proceeds from the southwestern corner of Wyoming diagonally northwest across the northeast corner of Utah and across Idaho, toward Baker City, in Oregon. Once over in Oregon it takes care of itself under the State laws. It has articles of incorporation in Wyoming, a copy of which I hold in my hand. I have examined the joint-stock law of Wyoming, and it appears to be modeled upon the best forms of the older States. This company has duly registered and associated itself under those laws. It desires to go on across Utah and Idaho and across the Bannock reservation. Utah has I believe no general railroad law and the Utah Legislature is not in session. Wyoming has no general railroad law and the Legislature is not session. The governor says he has to get the President's permission to call it together. It would make a very considerable expense for them, and he suggested to the railroad company and urged them to get Congress to extend the Wyoming charter across those two Territories.

That is the substance of what is asked for. The road is to cross the Shoshone and Bannock reservations. That has been attended to properly, wisely, generously by the bill and the precedent treaty to which you have just given attention. You have passed the bill ratifying the arrangement made with the Indians.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Permit me to ask how often do the territorial Legislatures in those Territories sit?

Mr. HAWLEY. Once in a year or two. The Idaho Legislature will sit next winter; but to wait for that will delay the operations for one year of this railroad company. It is now engaged in building, and it has made every arrangement in the world except that one. To wait for the Territorial Legislature to act will put it over until next spring if it is compelled to wait for that assent, that regular charter from the Territory of Idaho. This road will open up a wide region to settlement and make a line of communication extremely valuable to the Idaho and Wyoming people and the Oregon people beyond.

I have made every inquiry of the Interior Department, of the Land Office, of the Indian Office, and of every person who could be supposed to know of anything concerning it or have any legal charge about it, and everybody says that the thing is in due form. The railroads ask nothing in the world of the United States but this bare permission and charter and its rights under the general act of 1875, which give it the usual 100 feet right of way, with a little more at the stations.

Mr. McMILLAN. In line 21 of section 1 of the bill, I move to strike out the word "of," after "railroads," and insert "in;" so as to read "subject to all the laws and regulations in relation to railroads in the United States;" not "of the United States."

Mr. HAWLEY. "Subject to all the laws and regulations in relation to railroads in the United States." Does that mean in all the thirty-eight States, all State railway laws? What does it mean?

Mr. McMILLAN. It means that this company or corporation which is proposed to be created here shall be subject to all the laws and regulations which exist in regard to other railroads in the United States, as I understand.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does it mean the laws of the United States?

Mr. McMILLAN. No, sir; just what it says. I suppose there is no object perhaps in this bill to secure any very peculiar privileges to this proposed organization that ought not to exist in reference to others. The bill as it reads is:

That the said corporation shall at all times hereafter be subject to all the laws and regulations in relation to railroads of the United States, or of any Territory or State through which its line of road may pass.

There are no railroads "of the United States," nor are there any railroads "of the Territories."

Mr. HAWLEY. Allow me to make a suggestion right there, which will cover the Senator's whole point. Let there be a transposition of the words "of the United States."

Mr. McMILLAN. I prefer the amendment I suggested, to insert the word "in" in place of "of," after "railroads," in line 21, and also before the words "any Territory," in the same line, to strike out "of" and insert "in."

Mr. HAWLEY. I should think it would be a misfortune, an unnecessary meddlement, if I may make a word, to adopt that amendment. I did not draft this bill myself. I see that it has made some confusion in the Senator's mind. The line reads now:

Subject to all the laws and regulations in relation to railroads of the United States.

If it should read "all the laws and regulations in relation to railroads" it would be just what the company desire and what everybody means. It wants a simple transposition of those two phrases.

I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota in this way, that the words "of the United States" shall be taken from line 21 and inserted after the word "regulations," in line 20.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment is in order. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut to the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Now it reads:

That the said corporation shall at all times hereafter be subject to the laws and regulations of the United States in relation to railroads, or of any Territory or State through which its line of road may pass.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GROVER. I will state the emergency for the passage of this bill at this time. It is that the road is under rapid progress, and within one year will be completed entirely across these two Territories.

Mr. McMILLAN. This is a bill proposed here for creating a local railroad corporation. Congress has not been in the habit of creating corporations of this character. It is true we have great transcontinental railroads which have been the creatures of and have been regulated during their continuance by the Congress of the United States. That is not this case. Here is a mere ordinary railroad company asking Congress to grant it an act of incorporation, and it is said as a reason for this that the Legislature of the Territory through which a portion of this road is to pass will not be in session until next winter. I do not regard that as any sufficient reason for invoking this great power of Congress which, in the minds of very many at this time, and perhaps in the minds of many more eminent statesmen in the past, has been denied. It is a very serious act to be performed by the national Congress, and if it were not in the interest of great wealth and corporate power it could not be invoked with any hope of success.

Why has this corporation not procured its rights from these Territories before? It has gone into one of the Territories; it has organized under the general law of that Territory authorizing the creation of railroad corporations. Why did it not, as it must have known its purposes at that time, procure all the rights that it required from those Territories? They are the authorities to grant these charters; they know what rights had better be conferred upon railroads within their own jurisdiction.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question for information?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of two o'clock has arrived.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move to proceed with the consideration of this bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. I do not ask the Senate——

Mr. INGALLS. I hope the Senator from Connecticut will not make that motion, because it would displace the unfinished business, which I should be very unwilling to have done.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not think it is possible to have long debate on this bill.

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator will ask that the unfinished business be informally put aside for a brief space until this bill can be considered, with the understanding that the bankruptcy bill is then to resume its place, I shall not object, unless the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] does, who desires to speak this afternoon.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think the Senator from Massachusetts will consent to let this bill be disposed of.

Mr. HOAR. May I be allowed to say a word? When the bankruptcy bill is taken up for consideration I desire to do what will be rather unusual and under ordinary circumstances might seem discourteous. I desire to offer a substitute for it, and to make a brief argument in favor of that substitute before the original bill is discussed by the Senator who introduced it. I do that because it is more convenient to him that I should make my argument to-day than to have him go forward at this time. I shall not occupy more than twenty or twenty-five minutes; the bankruptcy bill probably will not occupy more than that time this afternoon; and I have no objection to letting this matter go on, but I should like after this matter is disposed of, with the leave of the Senate, to obtain unanimous consent to the passage of three or four bills granting condemned cannon, which will take only five or ten minutes.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I have already yielded the floor on a little bill that I have. I shall call that up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

Mr. McMILLAN. I do not desire to interfere with the regular business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bankruptcy bill is the unfinished business. It will be laid aside temporarily until the railroad bill shall be disposed of.

Mr. INGALLS. No, sir; I do not consent to that. If the debate shall continue inordinately I shall feel bound to call for the consideration of the bankruptcy bill a sufficient time before three o'clock to allow the Senator from Massachusetts to make his remarks, because it is understood that there are to be memorial services this afternoon that will probably curtail the usual hours of business.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator from Massachusetts consents that we shall go on. I hope we shall not detain the Senate a great while.

Mr. HOAR. I make no objection.

Mr. McMILLAN. So far as I am concerned, I do not desire to interfere with the immediate consideration of the bankruptcy bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The railroad bill remains before the Senate.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The Senator from Minnesota yielded to me for a question, I believe. Are not the Territorial Legislatures through whose jurisdiction this road passes fully competent to do what is proposed in this bill? Is there any defect in the organization of the Territories in their local powers that would prevent them from doing what is proposed by this bill?

Mr. McMILLAN. No. I think they are fully competent to grant all the powers sought here, and I think they are the only proper authorities to confer those powers. This act, which, as the Senator from Connecticut said, is a very short one, creates a corporation for the purpose of constructing a railroad between the termini mentioned by the Senator from Connecticut, and by its terms adopts the amended articles which were filed by this corporation created under the laws of the Territory of Wyoming. They do not appear upon the face of this bill; their adoption is by reference. It is language, it seems to me, that imports a great deal:

That the Oregon Short-Line Railway Company, a corporation of that name duly incorporated and organized under the laws of the Territory of Wyoming—

I hope Senators will give attention to the language which succeeds, which I am about to read—the amended articles of incorporation of which were duly filed in the office of the secretary of the said Territory on the 12th day of July, A. D. 1881, be, and the same is hereby, made a railway corporation in the Territories of Utah, Idaho, and Wyoming, under the same conditions and limitations and with the same rights and privileges that it now has and enjoys under said articles of incorporation within the said Territory of Wyoming, and with all the rights and privileges within said Territories of Wyoming, Utah, and Idaho which are secured to railway companies by the act of Congress approved the 3d day of March, A. D. 1875, entitled "An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States."

The company is incorporated under the general law of Wyoming Territory authorizing the creation of corporations, and the company, it seems, has filed a certain statement of its purposes and objects under that law. Subsequently, on the 12th of July, 1881, they filed amended articles, as appears by the terms of this bill. Why that amendment took place we do not know; but whatever may be the purpose of it, this act of Congress, if it is passed, ratifies the amendment, and confers upon this corporation all the powers and privileges which the company have stated in the amended articles. Here are the articles. I there found this:

2. The object for which said company has been and is formed is the construction, operating, and owning a railroad or railroads from a point commencing at or near Granger, on the line of the Union Pacific Railway, in Sweetwater County, in Wyoming Territory, and running from thence in a northwesterly direction through the counties of Sweetwater and Uinta to the western boundary line of Wyoming Territory; thence in the Territory of Utah or Idaho, or both, on the most eligible route to be selected by the said company in the valley of Bear River, to or near Soda Springs; thence on the most eligible route to the eastern boundary line of the Fort Hall Indian reservation; thence westerly through said reservation along the Port Neuf or tributaries thereof or in the valley thereof, on the most eligible route to be selected by the company, to the western boundary line of said reservation; thence in a general westerly direction through the Snake River lava fields, or along the Snake River, or in the valley thereof, on the most eligible route, to be selected by the said company, to the western boundary line of the Territory of Idaho and to the eastern boundary line of the State of Oregon; thence in the State of Oregon to Baker City, or to such other point or points in said State of Oregon as the company may hereafter determine; thence to such point or points on the Columbia River or the Pacific Ocean as the company may select.

The said company shall have power to locate and construct and operate the whole or any part of said line of road above described, and to transport passengers, mail, and freight thereon, and to receive therefor fare, toll, and charges, and generally to transact all such business and to do such acts generally as may be necessary to the success of the corporation.

The said company hereby formed has power to mortgage its road, franchises, and property to secure such issue of bonds as it may determine to execute to build such extensions and branches as it may under any amendment of its charter, or articles of incorporation or otherwise under lawful authority resolve to build, and to make running arrangements with any other railway or transportation company, or to lease, purchase, or otherwise acquire the charter, road, property, capital stock, or franchises of any such company, or to merge, or amalgamate, or consolidate into any such company, on such terms as may be agreed upon by the directors or stockholders not inconsistent with law.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Are these the articles?

Mr. McMILLAN. These are the amended articles which come here and are adopted by recitation under this short bill.

The said company may construct such branches and connections in the said State and Territories as it may deem expedient and change and relocate its main line and branches as it may elect to connect with other railroads and navigation companies, and may amend the certificate of incorporation in such way as directors or a majority of the stockholders may determine, not inconsistent with the statute in such case made and provided.

The said company assumes to itself, and shall and does possess, all of the rights, powers, franchises, and privileges granted to and conferred upon corporations by the laws of Wyoming Territory, and particularly by chapter 34 of the Compiled Laws of Wyoming, entitled "An act to create and regulate corporations," and by an act entitled "An act authorizing railroad companies to mortgage their property, issue mortgage bonds, consolidate connecting lines, and for other purposes," approved December 13, 1879.

3. The amount of the capital stock of the said company shall be $15,000,000, or such further amount as may be required to construct, complete, and equip said road, or extension, or branches, at a rate not exceeding $25,000 per mile of road completed and equipped ready for use.

The stockholders are not individually liable for the debts of the company nor liable to any extent beyond the liability to pay for the stock by them severally subscribed.

4. The said stock of said corporation shall consist of shares of the par value of $100 each.

5. The term of existence of said corporation shall be fifty years from the 14th day of April, 1881.

6. The number of trustees or directors of said corporation who shall manage the concerns of the same for the first year shall be five, and the names of said trustees are: Leavitt Burnham, Thomas L. Kimball, Joseph W. Gannett, Edward P. Vining, and Andrew J. Poppleton.

7. The operations of said company in the Territory of Wyoming shall be carried on in the town of Cheyenne, and in the county of Laramie, in the Territory of Wyoming, and along the line of the route of said railroad as hereinbefore described. The principal part of the business of said company within said Territory of Wyoming shall be transacted in the town of Cheyenne, and in the county of Laramie, Wyoming Territory.

And then follows the attestation after a few more lines with regard to contractors. Under this short bill, as the Senator from Connecticut styled it, we are here creating a corporation with unlimited powers. They can build their roads where they please through these Territories or the State of Oregon.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator allow me to ask him if the bill gives any power other than the Congress of the United States has given heretofore to other corporations to build railroads? Does it give any special grant of land? Does it give any unnecessary power for the construction of a railroad?

Mr. McMILLAN. Of course it does give unnecessary power. It creates a corporation with powers to lay as many roads as it pleases, now or subsequently, through the Territories of Utah, Idaho, and Wyoming, and the State of Oregon.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator please give me a list of the powers?

Mr. McMILLAN. I have stated them and read them in the articles, that after constructing their principal line they may locate other lines. They may change their lines; they may relocate them; they may do anything they please with those lines. They may consolidate with other companies; they may amalgamate with other companies. They can, under this proposed law of Congress, make any agreement they please in regard to their pooling arrangements and their running arrangements, and do anything they see proper in regard to carrying freight or passengers.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator state to the Senate that those provisions differ from what are already enjoyed by such roads as the Northern Pacific?

Mr. McMILLAN. The Northern Pacific Road is a transcontinental road which was created under a land grant. What its powers are in regard to that matter I do not now undertake to say; it would be very unwise to do so, for we cannot comprehend them; but here is a local railroad corporation coming into Congress and asking us to create it a corporation with powers greater than it could secure under any State law and adopted by reference to its amended articles under the general law of Wyoming.

Why this application here? If this were not backed by a monopoly of railroad powers that is controlling and crushing the business of this country in the West it never would have been attempted. It is very perceptible where this power comes from. This road under its charter can in the State of Oregon go along the Columbia River to the Pacific Ocean; it can control any road so far as the right of way is concerned, without any terms or with terms. The powers granted under this bill are unexampled, and such as these directors have written down themselves in the articles amended by them according to their desire, and according to the most approved plans of all the railroad combinations and corporations in the country.

This is not the time to grant charters of this kind. This is not the time to confer upon a railroad corporation, now controlling the business of the continent almost, special powers under such a cover as this. I am quite surprised that it is asked for, and I shall be utterly astonished if the Senate shall pass the bill. I care nothing about the particular bill so far as this company is concerned, but when you come to examine its powers it behooves Congress to beware of what they are doing. I shall be glad to see all the country opened up by railroads. It is my desire that every foot and portion of the Western States and Territories shall have the advantages and facilities of railroads, but I do not desire to have them placed in such a position and clothed with such powers that they can put their foot upon the neck of the people. For my part I shall be willing to grant any privilege and facility so far as regards the mere right of way through the reservations and the territory properly belonging to the United States; but to create a corporation of this character is asking too much of the Congress of the United States. I certainly shall not vote for the bill, whatever other Senators may see proper to do.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, a word or two of remark, and I shall leave the bill to some other of its friends, and especially as it will be necessary in a very few moments to give way in order to carry out the programme for the afternoon. The Senator from Minnesota has used an expression several times which I do not comprehend. He speaks of this as a local railway company. All such companies are local, are they not?

Mr. McMILLAN. No; local in contradistinction to a transcontinental road. We have never dealt with anything but the transcontinental roads, so far as creating any corporation by Congress is concerned.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Will the Senator from Connecticut allow me to make a remark?

Mr. HAWLEY. I will give way to the Senator from Nebraska in a moment. I prefer to go on.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I was only going to ask one question. I ask the Senator from Minnesota if a few years ago we did not charter a road called the Northern Utah? The Senator is mistaken in saying that no charters of this kind have been heretofore granted.

Mr. HAWLEY. This is the simple truth and doctrine of the matter: all the power that the Territories have over this question is obtained from the Congress of the United States. We can overrule any general law they may make on the subject; we can overrule any special charter they may give to any railway company. They are children of the Government in every respect. We can charter railroads through and across, up and down any Territory in the United States, without asking the permission of anybody in that Territory; and if all the people in the Territory shall agree to charter a railway that we do not like, we have simply to tap it on the head and it is dead.

We authorized Wyoming—I suppose it is in the enabling act, if I may call it so, the act chartering the Territory—to establish a general law of incorporation. It has place in the statute-book of Wyoming, which I hold in my hand, chapter 34. It is a general law of corporations, similar to those adopted by many of the States, founded in general upon the legislation of the older States. Under that general act this railway company has filed its articles, but it cannot go on with this work without an analogous permission from the Assemblies of Utah and Idaho. Those Territorial Assemblies are not in session, and will not be until next winter. The people of Utah and Idaho desire this road to go through their country. The governor of Wyoming says to the railway company, "Let Congress sanction the articles which you have adopted in Wyoming under our general law and go on;" and the bill provides that—

> The same is hereby made a railway corporation in the Territories of Utah, Idaho, and Wyoming, under the same conditions and limitations and with the same rights and privileges that it now has and enjoys under said articles of incorporation within the said Territory of Wyoming, and with all the rights and privileges within said Territories of Wyoming, Utah, and Idaho which are secured to railway companies by the act of Congress approved the 3d day of March, A. D. 1875, entitled "An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States."

It is made a corporation, observe, in the Territories of Utah, Idaho, and Wyoming, where we have a right to make a corporation.

I see by what the Senator says that they have laid out for themselves pretty broad and general powers. They have a right to consolidate and a right to mortgage, of course; that is nothing unusual at all. They have a right to make connections and consolidations and all that sort of thing, perhaps broader than I should have drawn them, but I see no serious harm in what they have claimed. So far as that is concerned, it would be very easy to draft a bill just to please ourselves. At half past two we are under the necessity of giving way upon this matter, and I shall not further occupy the time of the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. If there can be a vote taken on the bill now, I shall interpose no objection. Otherwise I shall feel called upon to demand the regular order.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. VOORHEES in the chair.) Shall the bill pass?

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. HARRIS.]

Mr. BECK. I declined to vote because the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] was absent. I see that he is now in his seat, and I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 39, nays 3; as follows:

YEAS—39.

Allison,	Farley,	Ingalls,	Rollins,
Anthony,	Ferry,	Johnston,	Saunders,
Beck,	Frye,	Jonas,	Sawyer,
Blair,	Garland,	Kellogg,	Sewell,
Brown,	George,	Logan,	Slater,
Butler,	Grover,	McDill,	Vest,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hampton,	Miller of N. Y.,	Voorhees,
Chilcott,	Hawley,	Morgan,	Walker,
Conger,	Hill of Colorado,	Pugh,	Williams.
Dawes,	Hoar,	Ransom,

NAYS—3.

Cockrell,	Groome,	McMillan.

ABSENT—34.

Aldrich,	Fair,	Lamar,	Platt,
Bayard,	Gorman,	Lapham,	Plumb,
Call,	Hale,	McPherson,	Saulsbury,
Camden,	Harris,	Mahone,	Sherman,
Cameron of Wis.,	Harrison,	Maxey,	Vance,
Coke,	Hill of Georgia,	Miller of Cal.,	Van Wyck,
Davis of Illinois,	Jackson,	Mitchell,	Windom.
Davis of W. Va.,	Jones of Florida,	Morrill,
Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Pendleton,

So the bill was passed.

CONDEMNED ORDNANCE FOR MONUMENTAL PURPOSES.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom were referred the bill (S. No. 2050) donating four condemned cast-iron cannon and four cast-iron cannon-balls for the soldiers' monument at Ironton, Ohio; the bill (S. No. 2057) granting condemned cannon, &c., to the city of Marshalltown, Iowa, and the bill (S. No. 2068) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to the Jeff. C. Davis Post No. 16 of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Vincennes, Indiana, six condemned cast-iron guns, for monumental purposes, to report them favorably without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri ask for action on the bills now?

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Indiana, who ought to have been in his seat but who is now in the chair, desires the Senate to act on these bills at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will ask the Senate if there is objection to the immediate consideration of the bills.

Mr. HOAR. There are perhaps half a dozen bills of like character besides those, which are on the Calendar, in one of which I take an interest. I desire to have them taken up at a very early day.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let them all be taken up and acted on now. It will not take five minutes.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that the resolutions of the House regarding the death of the late Representative ALLEN of Missouri will reach the Senate very soon.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not until after three o'clock.

Mr. HOAR. But I desire to address the Senate on the bankruptcy bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. The message from the House will not be received till after the Senator has spoken on that bill.

Mr. HOAR. Will it be understood that the agreement will also include other bills of the same nature which are on the Calendar?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. So the Chair understands. The Chair hearing no objection, the bills will be considered by the Senate.

The bill (S. No. 2068) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to the Jeff. C. Davis Post No. 16 of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Vincennes, Indiana, six condemned cast-iron guns, for monumental purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (S. No. 2057) granting condemned cannon, &c., to the city of Marshalltown, Iowa, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (S. No. 2050) donating four condemned cast-iron cannon and four cast-iron cannon-balls for the soldiers' monument at Ironton, Ohio, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOAR. I now ask that the bills on the Calendar of this nature may be considered.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let them be taken up in their order.

The bill (S. No. 1781) to transfer six condemned cast-iron cannon to Stover Post No. 1 of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, for use on a monument to deceased soldiers and sailors, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. The word "Stover" should read "Storer." It is a misprint.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made in the bill, as also in the title.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (S. No. 1924) to authorize the Secretary of War to deliver to the Augusta Soldiers' Monument Association, at Augusta, Maine, certain condemned cannon and cannon-balls, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (S. No. 1942) granting condemned cannon to Abe Lincoln Post No. 29 of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Council Bluffs, Iowa, for monumental purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, in line 6 to strike out the words "such number of" and to insert "four;" after the word "cannon," in line 6, to strike out the words "as may be required;" and in line 7, before the word "adornment," to strike out the words "use and;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to furnish to Abe Lincoln Post No. 29 of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Council Bluffs, Iowa, four condemned cast-iron cannon for the adornment of a monument in memory of the deceased soldiers of Iowa at Council Bluffs, in said State.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (S. No. 2034) to authorize the Secretary of War to deliver certain cannon for monumental purposes to the Grand Army of the Republic at Westminster, Massachusetts; also to the Danville Light Battery A, Illinois National Guard, at Danville, Illinois, for monumental purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, which were, in line 5, after the word "condemned," to insert "cast-iron;" in line 6, after the word "condemned," to insert "cast-iron;" and, after the word "cannon," to strike out the word "mounted;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to deliver to the Grand Army of the Republic post at Westminster, Massachusetts, four condemned cast-iron cannon, for monumental purposes; also four condemned cast-iron cannon to the Danville Light Battery A, Illinois National Guard, at Danville, Illinois, for monumental purposes.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LYNCHBURGH.

Mr. ROLLINS. I move that the bill (S. No. 1563) for the erection of a public building at Lynchburgh, Virginia, be indefinitely postponed. The House bill on the same subject has been passed.

The motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 22d instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 1778) granting an increase of pension for Marian A. Mulligan;

An act (S. No. 831) for the relief of Christian Ruppert, William F. Mattingly, and Christian Heurich, trustees, of the District of Columbia; and

An act (S. No. 841) to provide for the payment of the salaries and compensation of members of the Houses of Congress and their officers and employés in certain contingencies.

BANKRUPTCY SYSTEM.

The Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill (S. No. 1382) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States.

Mr. HOAR. I propose to amend the bill by substituting what I send to the Chair. It is a pretty long substitute, and I do not deem it necessary to have it read at the desk at this time, but as it is to be pending as an amendment I should like to have it printed in the RECORD.

Mr. GARLAND. I have no objection to that course, but I wish to state as to the order of business that there is a number of amendments which it is contemplated to offer to the bill as reported by the committee, and they would be entitled to consideration before the substitute. I do not suppose the Senator from Massachusetts wishes to press the substitute until we perfect the bill.

Mr. HOAR. Amendments will be in order to the bill under the parliamentary rule at whatever time they may be proposed.

Mr. GARLAND. But as to the mode of proceeding I was merely making the inquiry.

Mr. HOAR. The parliamentary rule I understand contemplates the perfection of a bill by considering all existing amendments before putting the question on any substitute, without regard to the order in which the motions of amendment are made.

Mr. GARLAND. With that understanding I am perfectly willing for the substitute to be presented.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be the understanding that amendments to perfect the text of the bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary will be first considered. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment of Mr. HOAR is to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

That in addition to the definitions contained in the first section of the Revised Statutes, words and phrases in this act shall mean as follows, unless inconsistent with the context:

"Bankrupt," one who has been so adjudged; "time or date of bankruptcy," or "bankruptcy" with reference to time, the time when the petition for adjudication was filed; "commissioner," the commissioner to whom the cause has been referred, or any one acting in his stead; "court," the district court in which the proceedings are pending, including the commissioner; "judge," the judge of said court, not including the commissioner; "clerk," the clerk of said court; "property," whatever passes to a trustee in bankruptcy, and all books, deeds, and writings relating thereto; "assets," all such property and its proceeds; "transfer," any payment, gift, sale, or other mode of disposing of or parting with property, or the possession of property, absolutely or conditionally; "debt," any debt, demand, or liability provable in bankruptcy; "creditor," any one who owns such a debt, demand, or liability, and his duly-authorized attorney or proxy; "secured creditor," a creditor who has security for such debt upon the property of the bankrupt of a nature to be assignable under this act, or who owns such a debt for which some indorser, surety, or other person secondarily liable for the bankrupt has such security upon the bankrupt's property; "trader" shall include all merchants, all who make it their business or a part of their business to buy or sell lands, goods, chattels, bills, bonds, notes, stocks, or shares, manufacturers, warehousemen, bankers, brokers, builders, contractors, shipwrights, publishers, innkeepers, livery-stable keepers, and all artisans who buy the materials for their business on credit.

COURTS OF BANKRUPTCY.

SEC. 2. That the several district courts of the United States and of the Territories, and the supreme court of the District of Columbia, are constituted courts of bankruptcy within their several territorial limits.

SEC. 3. That the jurisdiction conferred upon courts of bankruptcy shall extend to all adjudications of bankruptcy; to all causes, questions, and controversies arising out of any claim or demand by creditors to share in the assets of the bankrupt; to the ascertainment, adjustment, liquidation, marshaling, ranking, and disposition of all liens, charges, priorities, and specific claims on said assets; to all claims of the bankrupt to exemptions; to the bankrupt's discharge; to compositions; and to all matters and things to be done, under and in virtue of the bankruptcy, by the bankrupt or the assignee, or by any creditor who has proved his debt.

SEC. 4. That said courts, as courts of bankruptcy, shall be always open, and their powers and jurisdiction may be exercised in a summary manner, as well in vacation and in chambers as in court, and shall include power to compel obedience to all lawful orders and decrees in bankruptcy by process of contempt and other remedial process as fully as circuit courts may now do in equity, and full power over costs and other usual powers of courts of equity. And said courts may sit for the transaction of business in bankruptcy (where no jury is required to be present) at any place within the district, first giving reasonable notice of the time and place of holding any such special session.

SEC. 5. That in case of a vacancy in the office of district judge in any district, or in case any district judge shall, from sickness, absence, or other disability, be unable to act, the circuit justice or judge of the circuit in which such district is included, may make, during such disability, absence, or vacancy, all necessary rules, orders, and decrees in bankruptcy, and cause the same to be entered or issued, as the case may require, by the clerk of the district court.

SEC. 6. That the district judge may, on the application of any of the parties interested, certify any point or question of law arising in bankruptcy to the circuit court for the same district, to be there heard and determined.

SEC. 7. That the circuit court of each district and the supreme court of each Territory shall have a general superintendence and jurisdiction of all controversies and questions arising in the district court of such district or Territory, sitting in bankruptcy, whether the powers and jurisdiction of a circuit court have been conferred on such district court or not; and, except when special provision is otherwise made, may, upon the certificate of the district judge, as before provided, or upon bill, petition, or other proper process of any party aggrieved, hear and determine the case as in a court of equity; and said court shall be deemed always open for this purpose; and the case may be heard by the circuit justice or the circuit judge, or both, in court or in chambers, and in term time or vacation. When a question comes up by certificate, as aforesaid, the district judge may sit at the hearing with the circuit justice or judge. In districts which are not within any organized circuit of the United States the powers and jurisdiction of a circuit court in bankruptcy may be exercised by the district judge.

SEC. 8. That the final judgment, decree, or order of the circuit court having jurisdiction in all matters, questions, and controversies properly arising in the courts of bankruptcy as such, in whatever mode they may be tried, shall not be reviewed by the Supreme Court excepting upon a certificate of division of opinion between two of the justices of said circuit court.

PLENARY SUITS.

SEC. 9. That the several district and circuit courts shall each have, concurrently with the courts of the States, jurisdiction of all suits at law or in equity, as distinguished from proceedings in bankruptcy, brought by a trustee in bankruptcy, in whatever district appointed, against any person, for any cause of action, or for the recovery of any debt, damages, or property vested in or claimed by him as such trustee, or by any person claiming an adverse interest against such trustee.

SEC. 10. That the court of bankruptcy may direct that any debt, demand, or property claimed by the trustee shall be sued for in the appropriate court of the State.

SEC. 11. That appeals may be taken from the district to the circuit courts in all cases in equity, and writs of error may be allowed from the circuit to the district courts in cases at law such as are mentioned in the last section, when the amount in dispute exceeds $500; but no such appeal or writ of error shall be taken or allowed unless it is claimed, and notice thereof given to the clerk of the district court, to be entered with the record of proceedings, and also to the adverse party, within twenty days after the entry of the decree or judgment sought to be revised, nor unless the appellant or plaintiff in error shall give bond and comply with the other provisions of law relating to appeals and writs of error, respectively.

Such appeal or writ of error shall be entered in the clerk's office of the circuit court, whether in term time or vacation, within thirty days after the same is claimed, and thereupon the cause shall be deemed to be pending in said circuit court.

If the appellant or plaintiff in error fails to make entry within the time aforesaid, the appeal or writ of error shall be declared abandoned upon the petition of the adverse party, and notice to the appellant or plaintiff, or his attorney of record, unless the circuit court, or one of the justices thereof, shall, for cause shown, grant further time.

If such appeal or writ of error is waived in writing by the party taking the same at any time before a decision thereon, proceedings may be had in the district court as if no such appeal or writ of error had been taken or sued out.

SEC. 12. That the Supreme Court shall have like appellate jurisdiction of the suits mentioned in section 9 as in other civil actions; but no appeal or writ of error shall be taken or allowed unless it is claimed, and notice thereof given to the clerk of the circuit court and to the adverse party within twenty days after entry of the decree or judgment sought to be revised; such claim of appeal or for a writ of error shall be deemed to be abandoned unless the required bond to the adverse party duly approved is filed with the clerk of the circuit court within thirty days after the entry of said decree or judgment, and unless the record upon the appeal or the writ of error, as the case may be, is transmitted to the clerk of the Supreme Court for entry in said Supreme Court within sixty days after the entry of said decree or judgment.

COMMISSIONERS.

SEC. 13. That the circuit courts, two justices concurring, shall appoint within each judicial district of their respective circuits such number of commissioners in bankruptcy as may be necessary for the due transaction of the business therein, not exceeding in any State the number of members of Congress to which it is entitled. The district judge for the district shall always be one of the judges appointing. If the business in any district will not warrant the appointment of a commissioner, all the powers and duties of commissioner shall be exercised by the district judge. No person shall be eligible as a commissioner unless a practicing attorney of the courts of the United States or of one of the States or Territories.

Commissioners may be removed from office by the district judges of their respective districts; and the number of commissioners in any district may be from time to time diminished or increased within the limit above mentioned, as occasion requires.

SEC. 14. That the commissioners shall hold meetings, hearings, and examinations, at such places and times as they shall determine, subject to any order by the judge; and it shall be the duty of the judge to arrange for stated sittings by the commissioners, at such times and places as shall afford the greatest practicable facility to the suitors in bankruptcy, and shall be conformed as well as may be to the sessions of the courts of probate or other similar courts of the State.

SEC. 15. That the commissioners acting in the several cases before them shall have all the powers of a master in chancery to whom a cause has been referred in equity, and may, besides, represent and act for the judge in holding meetings and conducting in chambers all business specially committed to them, and may do all acts which the district judge may do, unless when the word "judge" is used in this act, or the context excludes this power by implication. Commissioners may act for each other in all cases. All the acts of the commissioners shall be subject to review by the judge.

SEC. 16. That there shall be appointed for each judicial circuit, by the circuit court sitting in any district of the circuit, two justices concurring, one supervisor in bankruptcy, whose duty it shall be to examine personally into the administration of bankruptcy proceedings under this act throughout the circuit for which he is appointed; to call the attention of commissioners, clerks, and trustees to any matters which, in his judgment, would facilitate the speedy and economical settlement of cases in bankruptcy; to report to the district court in each district within the circuit any failure on the part of any trustee promptly to discharge the duties devolving upon him under this act; to move the court for action against any delinquent trustee; and to make, within the first twenty days of January, April, July, and October in each year, to the circuit court in each district within the circuit for which he is appointed, a report of his doings during the preceding three months, and of the manner in which bankruptcy proceedings are being conducted in said district, with suggestions, if any occur to him, by which the administration of bankruptcy proceedings within the district may be made more efficient and economical. The supervisor shall visit and inspect the office of every clerk and commissioner within his circuit as often as once in every six months.

SEC. 17. That copies of the quarterly reports of supervisors shall be sent by the clerk of the circuit court in each district, to the district judge of the district, and to the Attorney-General of the United States.

SEC. 18. That all the books, accounts, and records of clerks of district courts, and of commissioners and trustees, shall be always subject to the examination of the supervisor in bankruptcy of the circuit at his request.

SEC. 19. That supervisors may be removed from office by the court by which they were appointed.

SALARIES, AND SO FORTH, OF SUPERVISORS AND COMMISSIONERS.

SEC. 20. That supervisors and commissioners duly appointed and acting under this act shall receive yearly salaries at the rate of —— dollars, payable quarterly from the Treasury as judges are now paid. They shall also, in like manner, be reimbursed from the Treasury for their necessary office rent, clerk hire, and office and traveling expenses: Provided, That the items thereof shall be verified upon oath, and shall be examined in detail, and approved in the case of commissioners by the district judge, and in the case of supervisors by two judges of one of the circuit courts within the circuit for which they are appointed.

ENTRY AND CLERK'S FEES.

SEC. 21. That every party, debtor, or creditor petitioning for adjudication and bankruptcy shall, at the time of filing such petition, pay $50 to the clerk of the court and $10 to the clerk in lieu of all fees, except as hereinafter permitted to be charged. Every trustee shall pay to the clerk 1 per cent. of the gross amount of money realized from the assets in excess of $500; and every debtor making a composition shall, in like manner, pay one-half of 1 per cent. upon the total amount thereof.

The clerk shall report to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States the sums paid from time to time to him under this section; and transfers of all such sums received during each calendar month shall be made by the clerk of the court to the Treasury of the United States, by proper order and certificates, within ten days after the expiration thereof, except that the $10 paid to him as aforesaid shall be disposed of and accounted for as other fees.

SEC. 22. That the clerk shall not be paid for a copy of any paper filed in the court of bankruptcy, by the party ordering the same, the fees prescribed by law for copies, except that for copies of the petition and schedules duly ordered for the use of the commissioner the clerk shall be paid the usual fees. He shall make no charge for filing papers, entering orders or decrees, making dockets, or receiving or paying out money in any case in bankruptcy.

OATHS.

SEC. 23. That any oath required by this act, excepting upon a hearing in court, may, if taken within the United States, be taken before a judge or clerk of a court of record of a State or of the United States, a commissioner or a supervisor in bankruptcy, a commissioner of the circuit court or a notary public, or any officer empowered to administer oaths in the State where the same is taken, and before a minister, consul, or vice-consul of the United States if taken in a foreign country. The fee for the oath, and the certificate thereof, and preparing the statement of debt, shall be fifty cents: Provided, That no fee shall be paid to a Federal judge, commissioner, or supervisor.

CREDITORS IN NUMBER.

SEC. 24. That whenever the creditors are authorized to determine any matter partially or finally by a majority, or any other proportion in value and number of said creditors, (with exception of petition for adjudication,) creditors in number shall be understood as excluding every creditor whose provable debt shall be less than $50, in reckoning number, but not in reckoning value.

RULES.

SEC. 25. That, subject to the provisions of this act, the Supreme Court shall have the like power to make and prescribe rules, forms, and modes of proceeding in bankruptcy as they now have in relation to suits and proceedings in equity. Subject to this act and the rules of the Supreme Court the several circuit and district courts may prescribe rules of practice and forms of proceeding.

RECORDS.

SEC. 26. That the proceedings in all cases of bankruptcy shall be deemed matters of record, but the same shall not be recorded at large, but shall be carefully filed, kept, and numbered in the office of the clerk of the court, and a docket only, or short memorandum thereof, shall be kept in books to be provided for that purpose, which shall be open to public inspection.

WARRANTS.

SEC. 27. That at any time before or within three months after the adjudication, upon proof being made by affidavit, to the satisfaction of the judge, that any bankrupt or person against whom proceedings in bankruptcy are pending is about to leave the district, and that his departure will hinder, impair, or delay the proceedings therein, the judge may issue his warrant to the marshal directing him to arrest said bankrupt, or supposed bankrupt, and him safely keep until he shall give bail or recognizance, in a sum to be specified in said warrant, for his appearance, from time to time, as required by the court, and for his obedience to all lawful orders of the court in said proceedings.

The judge may, at any time after adjudication and before the trustee is chosen, in any case, upon the application of the bankrupt or of any creditor, issue a warrant to the marshal requiring him to take possession of the property of the bankrupt, and keep the same safely for the trustee when appointed.

He may issue a like warrant to seize and keep the property of any person against whom proceedings in bankruptcy are pending, and before adjudication, upon satisfactory evidence by affidavit that he is about to remove, conceal, or transfer his property in fraud of his creditors or of this act: Provided, however, That no warrant or injunction interfering with or restraining the prosecution of the ordinary business of the alleged bankrupt shall issue unless the petitioning creditor execute and file with the clerk of the court a bond to the alleged bankrupt, in the penal sum of not less than $500, with sureties to be approved by the judge, conditioned to pay all damages resulting from granting the same in case it shall be ultimately decided that the creditor was not entitled thereto.

If the judge, by reason of illness or absence, is unable to act, the commissioner, or if no commissioner has been designated for the case, one of the commissioners of the district, may issue the warrants mentioned in this section.

SEC. 28. That the judge may appoint a receiver before adjudication, or before the trustee is chosen, when there appears to be a necessity therefor.

INJUNCTIONS.

SEC. 29. That the circuit and district courts of the district wherein any involuntary proceedings in bankruptcy are pending may, before adjudication, by injunction, restrain any person from intermeddling with the property of the supposed bankrupt. The judge in bankruptcy shall have the like power in respect to the supposed bankrupt.

Said courts may likewise restrain creditors from prosecuting actions to final judgment contrary to this act, or may permit such actions to proceed for such purposes and under such restrictions and limitations as shall be found just; but this act shall not prevent bona fide creditors in suits instituted prior to filing the petition in bankruptcy from continuing such suits for final judgment until the question of discharge be determined.

HEARINGS.

SEC. 30. That all hearings and examinations in bankruptcy shall, unless otherwise ordered by the judge, be oral, and the commissioner shall report the substance of the evidence if so requested. When the bankrupt is examined, the court may, if the importance of the case seems to require it, order a sworn stenographer to be employed, at the expense of the estate, to take down the evidence. In any hearing or examination a party interested may employ a stenographer, who shall be duly sworn; and the court may afterward, for cause shown, order the necessary expense of his employment, or some part thereof, to be paid out of the assets.

TIME.

SEC. 31. That in all cases in which any particular number of days is prescribed by this title, or shall be mentioned in any rule or order of court, or general order which shall at any time be made under this title, for the doing of any act or for any other purpose, the same shall be reckoned, in the absence of any expression to the contrary, exclusive of the first and inclusive of the last day, unless the last day shall fall on a Sunday, Christmas Day, or on any day appointed by the President of the United States as a day of public fast or thanksgiving, or on the Fourth of July, in which case the time shall be reckoned exclusive of that day also. The filing of the petition for adjudication, with a commissioner or in the clerk's office, whichever is first in time, shall be deemed the commencement of proceedings under this act.

VOLUNTARY BANKRUPTCY.

SEC. 32. That any person residing within the jurisdiction of the United States, owing debts provable under this act exceeding the amount of $500, may apply, by petition, to the district court of the judicial district in which such debtor has resided or carried on business for the six months next preceding the time of filing such petition, or for the longest period during such six months, setting forth his place of residence and of business, his indebtedness to said amount, his willingness to surrender all his estate and effects for the benefit of his creditors, and his desire to obtain a discharge under this act.

He shall annex to or file with his petition a schedule containing a full and true statement of all his debts and liabilities, exhibiting, as far as possible, the name and residence of each creditor, and if unknown, the fact to be stated; the nature, amount, and consideration of each debt and liability, and where contracted, and of any mortgage, pledge, lien, charge, collateral, or other security given for the payment of the same.

He shall, in like manner, annex or file an inventory containing an accurate statement and description of all his estate assignable under this act, and of the cash value thereof, and of all incumbrances thereon, and of all which he claims as exempt.

The schedule and inventory shall be verified by the oath of the petitioner.

SEC. 33. That the filing of such a petition as last aforesaid shall be an act of bankruptcy, and shall be prima facie evidence of the petitioner's indebtedness to the requisite amount, and of his inability to pay; and upon the filing thereof the clerk of the court or one of the commissioners, shall, under the directions of the judge, special or general, adjudge such petitioner to be a bankrupt, designate a commissioner to have charge of the cause, and appoint a time and place for the first general meeting of the creditors of said bankrupt for the proof of debts and the choice of a trustee or trustees before the judge or before said commissioner, and give notice of such adjudication and meeting, and of the purposes thereof, by publication in one or more newspapers to be designated by the court, having regard to the circumstances of the case, and by mail to all known creditors of the petitioner; and the notice to creditors shall state the facts aforesaid and the names and residences of the creditors, and amounts due them, so far as known. Said meeting shall be held not less than ten nor more than sixty days after adjudication.

If a bankrupt dies after adjudication the proceedings may go forward as if he had lived.

INVOLUNTARY BANKRUPTCY.

SEC. 34. That any person residing and owing debts, as aforesaid, who, after the passage of this act, departs from the State, District, or Territory of which he is an inhabitant, with intent to defraud his creditors; or, being absent, remains so with like intent; or conceals himself to avoid arrest or the service of legal process; or makes a fraudulent transfer of his property; or conceals or removes the same to avoid process; or, with intent to defraud his creditors, procures or suffers judgment against him; or gives a warrant to confess judgment, or judgment note, with like intent; or who, being a trader, having been arrested in any civil action, fails or neglects to give bail, or in some other mode to procure his discharge, for twenty days; or, being actually insolvent, fails to dissolve an attachment laid upon his property before final judgment in the suit in which such attachment is made; or fails for sixty days to satisfy a final judgment or decree rendered against him for the payment of money, unless a supersedeas or stay of execution has been granted in respect thereto; or has suspended and not resumed payment of his commercial paper or open accounts, made, passed, or contracted in the course of his business, for a period of thirty days after the same were payable; or who, being insolvent, makes a preference to any creditor as hereinafter defined, or makes an assignment for the benefit of existing creditors, with or without preferences, shall be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy, and may be adjudged bankrupt by any court of bankruptcy wherein he might have been made bankrupt on his own application, upon a petition filed in such court by three or more of his creditors whose debts, which would be provable at the first meeting under this act, amount, in all, to not less than $250, or if his creditors are less than twelve in number, by not less than one-fourth in number of his creditors having debts to said amount, provided such petition is brought within six months after the act of bankruptcy has been committed. Secured creditors whose security is inadequate may be petitioners in respect to the excess of their debts beyond the value of the security. When such act consists of a transfer of, or attachment or lien upon, property of the bankrupt, such period shall not be deemed to expire until six months from and after the recording, registering, or docketing of the deed, writing, transfer, judgment, or attachment relating thereto, whenever, by law, such recording, registering, or docketing is required or permitted, or from the notorious, exclusive, and continuous possession by the creditor, or other person dealing with the bankrupt, of the personal property which is the subject-matter of such alleged act of bankruptcy.

SEC. 35. That in involuntary cases it shall be no objection to the jurisdiction of the court that the debtor has removed from the United States since the act of bankruptcy was committed, provided the petition is brought in a district in which he might have filed his petition at the time of his removal. In all cases, voluntary or involuntary, the petition for adjudication may be filed with a commissioner, who shall send the name by the next mail to the clerk of the court.

SEC. 36. That upon a petition being filed by creditors for adjudication, and cause shown by affidavit, in the petition or otherwise, the court, if satisfied with the proof, shall grant an order of notice to the debtor, requiring him to show cause thereon at a court of bankruptcy to be held before the court not less than ten days thereafter. Before such order shall be granted by said court, the judge thereof shall require such creditors to execute a bond, with such sureties as he may direct, conditioned that if the issue is found for the defendant or defendants they will pay all costs and damages the opposite parties may have sustained by reason of such proceeding. Such order shall state the substance of the petition, and be served not less than five days before the return day, as process is served in other civil actions; and the order shall require notice by publication, as therein directed, if the debtor is not found and has no usual place of abode within the district. The cause shall proceed and be tried before the judge, or before a commissioner to be designated by the judge, summarily, and as speedily as may be after due service has been made, unless the debtor, on the day when he is bound to appear, shall demand a trial by jury, which shall then be had at the first convenient opportunity; and the judge may summon a jury for such purpose if the urgency of the case appears to justify it. In case the issue is found for the defendant or defendants, the same jury shall assess the damages hereinbefore provided for, and judgment shall be entered against both principals and sureties; and the trial and judgment may be reviewed in the same manner and to the same effect as trials and judgments in actions at law.

Any creditor of the supposed bankrupt may be admitted as a copetitioner by filing with the clerk or commissioner, at any time before the hearing, notice that he wishes to be so admitted, or may be admitted by the court during the hearing, upon filing security as aforesaid. Any person interested to defeat the petition may be admitted to defend.

If the issue is found against the petitioners, the petition shall be dismissed, but it shall not be dismissed for want of prosecution, or by consent of parties, unless the judge is satisfied that the parties consenting are the only parties interested, or that the acts of bankruptcy have not been committed, or that no interests of creditors can be prejudiced by such dismissal; and to ascertain these facts, notice may be required by publication, or the debtor may be required to file a schedule of his creditors, and notice may be given them by mail, or otherwise, as the judge may direct.

SEC. 37. That if the debtor shall make default, or if upon the trial the issue shall be decided against him, he shall be adjudged a bankrupt, and shall file, within five days thereafter, unless further time is given by the court, the schedule and inventory above required to be filed by petitioners for the benefit of the act. If he has not appeared in person or by attorney, such notice to file the schedule and inventory shall be given him as the court may order before he shall be deemed guilty of contempt. If he fails to file these papers in due time, the petitioning creditors shall cause them to be prepared according to the best of their information, and file the same. Upon such filing, in either case, or upon the order of the court, the first meeting shall be called, and further proceedings shall be had as in cases of voluntary bankruptcy. The costs and counsel fees of involuntary proceedings which have proceeded to adjudication may be paid out of the assets to an amount not exceeding $200, if the court shall so order.

FIRST MEETING—CHOICE AND QUALIFICATION OF TRUSTEES.

SEC. 38. That at the first meeting of the creditors the commissioner shall declare the notices published and given, and if they are insufficient the commissioner shall adjourn the meeting and the defects of notice shall be supplied. When due notice has been given the meeting shall be held, and the creditors may prove their debts and choose one or more trustees of the estate of the debtor, the choice to be made by the greater part in value, and not less than one-third in number, of the creditors voting; but creditors shall not vote upon privileged or contingent debts, nor shall a creditor who has received a preference prove or vote on any debt unless he shall surrender his preference to the commissioner for the use of the trustee, nor any secured creditor unless he shall in like manner surrender his security, or unless the commissioner shall find that the excess of his debt above his security must be at least a certain sum, in which case he may vote on that amount. The commissioner may, when he finds it practicable, assess unliquidated damages for the purposes of proof at the first meeting, subject to re-examination after the trustee is appointed. Creditors who send their proofs may add thereto a proxy or a vote for trustees and committee of direction, to be verified with and as part of their proofs.

SEC. 39. That every trustee shall qualify within ten days after his election, or within such further time as the court may order or permit, by giving bond to the United States, in such sum and with such sureties as shall be satisfactory to the court, conditioned for the faithful performance of his duties, which shall be filed with the records of the case, and may be prosecuted from time to time in the name and at the charge of any person injured by a breach of the condition thereof; joint trustees may give joint or several bonds, as they shall elect. If any trustee shall fail so to qualify within the time aforesaid he shall be deemed to have declined the trust.

POWERS OF COURT IN RESPECT TO TRUSTEES.

SEC. 40. That the judge may refuse to confirm a trustee, or may add trustees to those chosen; he may remove a trustee for cause, after hearing; he may punish, as for contempt, a trustee who disobeys a lawful order of the court; he may fill all vacancies in the office of trustee caused by death, resignation, or otherwise, if he finds that the vacancy needs to be filled. The commissioner may appoint a trustee when there is a failure to elect one, or a refusal to accept the trust, and no written objection is made to his exercising this power.

COMMITTEE OF DIRECTION.

SEC. 41. That the creditors, at the first meeting, may, if they please, by a vote such as is required for the choice of a trustee, elect a committee of three persons, whether creditors or not, subject to the approval of the court, who shall be called the committee of direction, whose duty it shall be to advise the trustee in the disposal of the assets, the admission of debts, payment of claims having priority, declaration of dividends, and the settlement of the estate in all respects with a view to the best interests of the creditors; and all sales made, suits brought, or acts done by him in good faith, with their written consent, or that of the major part of them, shall be, prima facie, deemed expedient and proper; suits at law or in equity brought by a trustee without such consent shall be, prima facie, deemed improper; but all such acts shall be subject to the supervision, control, and direction of the court. In case of a neglect or failure to elect such a committee, the court may, at any time, appoint one, if found expedient, upon the application of not less than one-third in value of the creditors whose debts have been proved.

SEC. 42. That no action or advice, nor the failure to act or advise, on the part of the committee of direction, shall affect the title or right of any one dealing with or sued by the trustee, nor shall it be given in evidence excepting in the court of bankruptcy, and when the conduct or fees of the trustee or the settlement of the estate is in question therein.

TITLE VESTED IN TRUSTEES.

SEC. 43. That when a trustee has been duly appointed and qualified there shall vest in him, for the purposes of this act, all the property and estate of every kind, except as hereafter provided, which the bankrupt had at the commencement of the proceedings, including everything of value which he could then by any means have sold, assigned, or conveyed, or which might have been taken on execution upon any judgment against him; all his interest in any patents, patent rights, or copyrights; all rights in action arising from contract, or from the unlawful taking or detention of or injury to his property; all powers which he might have exercised for his own benefit; all books, deeds, or writings relating to the above-mentioned property; all property conveyed by him in fraud of his creditors; and the trustees shall have the right to avoid any transfer which the judgment creditors or other creditors of the bankrupt, or any of them, might, by any way or means, have been avoided, and this whether judgments have been obtained or not; and the estate in his hands shall not be subject to any liens, charges, or incumbrances which, for want of record or otherwise, would not then have been valid as against the creditors of the bankrupt, or any of them; and every attachment, levy, seizure, garnishment, charge, or lien existing upon the property of the bankrupt, by virtue of any judgment, process, or proceeding against him by any creditor or creditors, at law or in equity, entered, levied, or laid within three months before the bankruptcy, such period to be reckoned as herein provided in relation to acts of bankruptcy, shall be dissolved by such adjudication and appointment, and the money or property in the hands of any officer arising from such levy or seizure, before payment to the creditor, shall be the property of the trustee: Provided, That all the lawful and taxable costs and charges of the creditor and officer in respect to any such levy, lien, attachment, judgment, or seizure, or of the suit in which it was levied or laid, incurred in good faith, shall be a first lien upon the property affected thereby; and the court of bankruptcy shall have power to ascertain the amount of such costs and charges and to order their payment out of such property before or after the trustee shall be put in possession thereof, as shall seem most just and expedient.

EXEMPTED PROPERTY—ALLOWANCES TO BANKRUPTS.

SEC. 44. That there shall be excepted and exempted out of the property mentioned in the preceding section, and shall be set apart by the court of bankruptcy, for the use of the bankrupt, the necessary and proper wearing-apparel of the bankrupt, and that of his wife and children; his uniform, arms, and equipment as a soldier in the service, past or present, of the Army of the United States or the militia; such other property as is or may be exempted from attachment, seizure, or levy by the laws of the United States; and such other as was so exempted by the laws of the State in which said bankruptcy proceedings are instituted at the time when the same were begun. And the court may allow the bankrupt a sum of money, not exceeding $500, for his support pending the proceedings, if his circumstances require it.

He shall also be allowed reasonable wages for services rendered his estate at the request of his trustee, and the usual fees for his attendance as a witness when required to attend for his own examination, or in any other matter excepting at hearings on the question of his discharge.

DUTIES OF BANKRUPT.

SEC. 45. That the bankrupt shall, at the request of the trustee and at the expense of the estate, make and execute any instruments, deeds, and writings which may be proper to enable the trustee to possess himself fully of all the assets vested in him, especially property in foreign countries, and do all acts which may be reasonably required by the trustee or ordered by the court in the due settlement of his estate. He shall attend the first meeting of creditors, and such other meetings as he may be duly notified to attend.

EXAMINATIONS.

SEC. 46. That the bankrupt shall, when required by the court, at any time before his discharge, attend before the commissioner, or a commissioner to be designated by the court, for examination by the trustee or by creditors touching his trade and dealings, his property and debts, and all matters which may affect the settlement of his estate in bankruptcy.

Upon cause shown by affidavit, the court may summon the wife of the bankrupt, or any person suspected of having any assets of the bankrupt in his possession, or to have knowledge of anything material whatsoever relating to the assets or dealings of the bankrupt, to appear and submit to an examination in like manner. If the bankrupt's wife fails to attend after due notice, the bankrupt shall not be entitled to a discharge, unless he proves to the satisfaction of the court that he was unable to procure her attendence.

POWERS, AND SO FORTH, OF TRUSTEES.

SEC. 47. That a copy of the adjudication and of the record of the trustee's appointment shall be conclusive evidence of his title and powers as to all the matters aforesaid, and of his right to demand, receive, sue for, and recover the assets, and to set aside frauds; and this whether he is chosen at the first meeting, or appointed by the judge or commissioner, or fills a vacancy. As soon as conveniently may be after the trustee qualifies, the judge or commissioner shall give him a certificate of his appointment, under his hand and the seal of the court, and such certificate shall likewise be conclusive evidence as aforesaid.

SEC. 48. That the trustee shall have the like remedy to recover all the estate, debts, and effects in his own name as the debtor would have had if the decree in bankruptcy had not been rendered. If, at the time of the bankruptcy, an action is pending in the name of the debtor for the recovery of a debt or other thing which might or ought to pass to the trustee by the assignment, the trustee shall, if he requires it, be admitted to prosecute the action in his own name, in like manner and with like effect as if it had been originally commenced by him. And if any suit at law or in equity in which the bankrupt is a party defendent is then pending which in any way concerns the creditors, the trustee may defend the same in the same manner and with the like effect as it might have been defended by the bankrupt, and shall be entitled to the benefit of every remedy, lien, or estoppel, legal or equitable, which any creditor having a claim provable against the estate would have been entitled to if proceedings in bankruptcy had not intervened, and which would otherwise have been destroyed by the bankruptcy.

SEC. 49. That no suit pending in the name of the trustee shall be abated by his death or removal, but upon the motion of the surviving or remaining or new trustee, as the case may be, he shall be admitted to prosecute the suit in like manner and with like effect as if it had been originally commenced by him.

SEC. 50. That no person shall be entitled as against the trustee to withhold from him possession of any books of account of the bankrupt.

SEC. 51. That the trustee shall immediately give notice of his appointment, by publication, at least once a week for three successive weeks, in such newspaper or newspapers as shall be designated by the court, due regard being had to their general circulation in the district, or in that part of the district in which the bankrupt and his creditors shall reside, and shall within six months cause the certificate of his appointment to be recorded in every registry of deeds or other office within the United States where a conveyance of any lands owned by the bankrupt ought by law to be recorded.

SEC. 52. That the trustee shall, as soon as may be after receiving any money belonging to the estate, deposit the same in some bank in his name as trustee.

SEC. 53. That when it appears that the distribution of the estate may be delayed by litigation or other cause, the court may direct the temporary investment of the money belonging to such estate in securities to be approved by the judge or commissioner, or may authorize it to be deposited in any convenient bank, upon such interest, not exceeding the legal rate, as the bank may contract with the trustee to pay thereon.

SEC. 54. That the trustee, under the direction of the court, may submit any controversy arising in the settlement of the estate to the determination of arbitrators, to be chosen by him and the other party to the controversy, and under such direction may compound and settle any such controversy, by agreement with the other party, as he thinks proper and most for the interest of the creditors.

SEC. 55. That the judge may, in his discretion, for cause shown, and upon notice and hearing, direct the receiver or trustee to take possession of the property and carry on the business of the debtor, or any part thereof, under the direction of the judge, when in his judgment the interest of the estate as well as of the creditors will be promoted thereby, for a period not exceeding twelve months from the date of the order: Provided, That such order shall not be made until the judge shall be satisfied that it is approved by a majority in value of the creditors. When a composition is offered before the appointment of a trustee, the judge may make such order in respect to the continuance of the business by the debtor, with or without supervision, or by a receiver, as shall seem to him expedient and for the interest of all parties.

SEC. 56. That unless otherwise ordered by the court or the committee of direction, the trustee shall sell the property, whether real or personal, at public auction, in such parts or parcels, and at such times and places, as shall be best calculated to produce the greatest amount with the least expense. All notices of public sales under this act, by any trustee or officer of the court, shall be published once a week, for three consecutive weeks, in the newspaper or newspapers to be designated by the court which, in his opinion, shall be best calculated to give general notice of the sale; and ten days prior to any sale the trustee shall mail a notice thereof to each creditor of the time and place of sale. And the judge, on the application of any party in interest, shall have complete supervisory power over sales by trustees, including the power to set aside the same and to order a resale, so that the property sold shall realize the largest sum. And the court may, in its discretion, order any real estate of the bankrupt, or any part thereof, to be sold for one-fourth cash at the time of sale, and the residue within twelve months, in such installments and bearing such interest as the court may direct, and secured by proper mortgage or lien upon the property so sold.

SEC. 57. That it shall be the duty of every trustee to keep a regular account of all moneys received or expended by him as such trustee, to which account every creditor shall, at reasonable times, have free access.

SEC. 58. That whenever it appears to the satisfaction of the judge that the title to any portion of an estate, real or personal, which has come into possession of the trustee, is in dispute, the judge may, upon the petition of the trustee, and after such notice to the claimant, his agent or attorney, as the judge shall deem reasonable, order it to be sold under the direction of the trustee, who shall hold the funds received in place of the estate disposed of; and the proceeds of the sale shall be considered the measure of the value of the property in any suit or controversy between the parties in any court. But this provision shall not prevent the recovery of the property from the possession of the trustee by any proper action commenced at any time before the court orders the sale.

SEC. 59. That no suit, either at law or in equity, shall be maintainable in any court between a trustee in bankruptcy and a person claiming an adverse interest touching any property or rights of property transferable to or vested in such trustee unless brought within four years from the time when the cause of action accrued for such trustee. This provision shall not, in any case, revive a right of action barred at the time when a trustee is appointed, but the time which elapses between the filing of the petition and the appointment and qualification of the trustee shall not be reckoned in against him. The trustee shall be allowed to cancel his bond immediately upon favorable review of his administration by the court, and any and all actions against said trustee shall be barred by the final adjustment of the estate.

DEBTS.

SEC. 60. That the following debts and liabilities, and no others, shall be provable in bankruptcy: all debts absolutely due by the bankrupt at the commencement of the proceedings, whether then payable or not, with any interest which would have been recoverable thereon at that date, or with a rebate of interest upon such as were not then payable and do not bear interest by the terms of the contract; all damages suffered by reason of the rejection by the trustee of a lease, as hereinafter provided; all demands for or on account of any goods or chattels wrongly taken, converted, or withheld by the bankrupt, to the amount of their value, with interest; all unliquidated damages arising out of any contract or promise, absolute or contingent, express or implied, whether the breach is before or after the bankruptcy, the amount of all such demands and damages, and of all equitable debts, to be assessed in such mode as the court shall direct; all taxable costs incurred in good faith by a creditor before the bankruptcy, in an action to recover a provable debt, may be added to the proof thereof; all costs then taxable against a plaintiff who shall become bankrupt upon a cause of action which would pass to the trustee, and which the trustee declines to prosecute after notice. If judgment is obtained upon a provable debt pending the proceedings, and before the bankrupt's discharge, the debt and costs to the time of bankruptcy may be proved as if no judgment had been obtained. If the bankrupt shall be bound as drawer, indorser, surety, bail, or guarantor upon any bill, note, bond, specialty, or contract, or for the debt of another, the creditor may prove the same at any time after the liability shall become fixed and before the final dividend shall be declared. In all cases of contingent debts, demands, and liabilities contracted by the bankrupt, and not herein otherwise provided for, the creditor may make claim therefor and have his claim allowed, with the right to share in the dividends, if the contingency shall happen before the order for the final dividend; or he may apply to the court, seasonably before such final order, to have the value of the debt or liability ascertained and liquidated, which shall then be done in such manner as the court shall direct; and he may prove for the amount so ascertained. If the court shall find such debt or liability incapable of valuation, a decree to that effect shall be entered upon the record.

Debts falling due at stated periods shall be apportioned up to the time of the bankruptcy, and proof be made for the proportionate part thereof.

LEASES—RENTS.

SEC. 61. That the bankrupt shall not be entitled to the benefits nor be bound by the covenants or engagements of any lease held by him at the time of his bankruptcy, but such lease shall be deemed to be surrendered so far as he is personally concerned. The trustee may decline the lease at any time, notwithstanding that he may have endeavored to sell the same, or have exercised acts of ownership in respect thereto: Provided, That the landlord or any creditor may, in writing, require him to elect, within twenty days after such notice, whether to accept or decline the same; and the failure to accept within such time shall be deemed a declination. When a lease is declined, the landlord may have any damages he shall suffer thereby assessed, as the court shall direct, and prove the amount as a debt in the bankruptcy. Such declination shall not affect any right of the trustee to deal with fixtures belonging to the bankrupt.

PREFERRED CREDITORS.

SEC. 62. That any person who, after the passage of this act, has accepted a preference, having reasonable cause to believe that the same was made or given by the debtor contrary to any provisions thereof, shall not prove any debt or claim against the estate of the debtor, nor receive any dividend therefrom, until there shall be surrendered or recovered, and actually paid or delivered to or for the use of the trustees, all property, money, benefit, or advantage received by him or for his benefit under such preference, and the costs of suit, if any, brought by the trustees for the recovery thereof.

SURETIES.

SEC. 63. That any person liable as bail, surety, guarantor, or otherwise for the bankrupt, who shall have paid the debt, or any part thereof, in discharge of the whole, shall be entitled to prove such debt, or to stand in the place of the creditor if the creditor has proved the same, although such payments shall have been made after the proceedings in bankruptcy were begun. And any person so liable for the bankrupt, and who has not paid the whole of such debt, but is still liable for the same, or any part thereof, may, if the creditor fails or omits to prove such debt, prove the same in the name of the creditor, if known, if not, in his own name, and the court shall take care that the dividend is so paid as to diminish the original debt.

SECURED CREDITORS.

SEC. 64. That a secured creditor shall prove only for the excess of the debt after deducting the value of his security, to be ascertained by agreement between him and the trustee, or by a sale or appraisement thereof, to be made in such manner as the court shall direct, or the creditor may surrender such property to the commissioner or trustee and be admitted to prove his whole debt. If the value of the property exceeds the sum for which it is so held as security the trustee may release to the creditor the bankrupt's right of redemption therein on receiving such excess, or he may sell the property subject to the claim of the creditor thereon, and in either case the trustee and creditor, respectively, shall execute all deeds and writings necessary or proper to consummate the transaction. If the property is not so sold, valued, appraised, or surrendered the creditor shall not be allowed nor required to prove any part of his debt. If, however, such creditor shall have sold the property in good faith, in accordance with the terms of his contract, he may be admitted as a creditor for the excess of his debt after giving credit for what he has received, and so much more, if anything, as he would have received if a sale or valuation had been made in accordance with this act.

SEC. 65. That when the bankrupt, at the time of adjudication, is liable upon any bill of exchange, promissory note, or other obligation, in respect of distinct contracts, as a member of two or more firms carrying on separate and distinct trades, and having distinct estates to be wound up in bankruptcy, or as a sole trader and also as a member of a firm, the circumstance that such firms are in whole or in part composed of the same individuals, or that the sole contractor is also one of the joint contractors, shall not prevent proof and receipt of dividend in respect of such distinct contracts against the estates respectively liable upon such contracts.

SET-OFF.

SEC. 66. That in all cases of mutual debts or mutual credits between the parties, the account between them shall be stated and one debt set off against the other, and the balance only shall be allowed or paid; but no set-off shall be allowed in favor of any debtor to the bankrupt of a claim in its nature not provable against the estate, or of a claim purchased by or transferred to him after the filing of the petition, or within three months before such filing, if purchased with a view to such set-off, and with knowledge or notice that the future bankrupt is insolvent, or has committed an act of bankruptcy.

PROOF OF DEBTS.

SEC. 67. That debts offered for proof must be verified by a statement in writing, under oath, and signed by the deponent, setting forth the demand, the consideration thereof, whether any and what securities are held therefor, and whether any and what payments have been made thereon, and that the sum claimed is justly due from the bankrupt to the claimant. Such oath shall be made by the claimant, if he can testify of his own knowledge, unless he is absent from the United States or prevented by some other good cause from testifying, in which case, or if he has not personal knowledge, the demand may be verified by the attorney or authorized agent of the claimant having such knowledge, or testifying to the best of his knowledge, information, and belief, and setting forth his means of knowledge. The statement shall be delivered or sent by mail to the commissioner.

SEC. 68. That if the proof is satisfactory to the commissioner, it shall be declared admitted, and the commissioner shall keep the names of creditors who have proved their claims, the time of each proof, and the amount and nature of the debt, in a book or in lists, which shall be open to the inspection of all the creditors. After the first meeting no proof shall be admitted until the trustee has had an opportunity to examine it. The commissioner shall send copies of his lists to the clerk from time to time. The court may require or receive further pertinent evidence either for or against the admission of any debt.

SEC. 69. That the court may suspend the proof of any debt offered at the first meeting if it entertains doubts of its validity, or may admit it, for the purposes of the meeting, at less than the amount claimed, if the doubt affects the amount only.

REVISION OF PROOFS.

SEC. 70. That the court may, on the application of the trustee, or of any creditor, or of the bankrupt, or without any application, examine upon oath the bankrupt, or any person tendering or who has made proof of a claim, and may summon any person capable of giving evidence concerning such proof, or concerning the debt sought to be proved, and may reject, modify, or expunge all claims and proofs according to the justice of the case.

SEC. 71. That any one aggrieved by the action of the commissioner allowing, disallowing, or expunging a debt offered for proof, or any part thereof, may, in his application to the judge for a review of such action, demand a trial by jury, if the claim is one which would between solvent parties be triable in that mode; and if he shall not demand a jury, the other party may do so at the time of entering his appearance. Such trial by jury shall be had in the circuit or district court, whichever has, or will soonest have, a jury in attendance; if in the district court, an rulings of law may be reviewed by the circuit court by writ of error if the sum in dispute exceeds $500. If a trial by jury is not demanded as aforesaid, or if the claim is of an equitable nature, the trial shall be by the district judge, and his decision may be reviewed by the circuit court under its supervisory power. The decision of the circuit court in any case shall be final.

SEC. 72. That all creditors whose debts are duly proved and allowed shall be entitled to share in the bankrupt's property and estate pro rata, except as provided in the following section.

DEBTS HAVING PRIORITY.

SEC. 73. That the following claims shall have priority and be first paid in full in their order:

First. The 1 per cent. upon the gross assets above $500 for the use of the United States, as provided in section 21.

Second. The costs and charges of the proceedings, including the entry fee of $60 when not paid by the bankrupt, and all costs duly charged against the assets.

Third. Debts, taxes, and assessments due to the United States which have been proved.

Fourth. Debts, taxes, and assessments made under the laws of the State where the proceedings are pending, and debts due such State, when by the laws thereof such debts have priority against insolvent debtors.

Fifth. Wages due any workman, clerk, or servant of the bankrupt for labor performed within six months before the bankruptcy, not exceeding $50.

Sixth. Debts due to any person who by the laws of the United States is entitled to priority. And nothing in this act contained shall interfere with the assessment and collection of taxes by the authority of the United States or of any State.

SEC. 74. That the court may, at any time after the adjudication, order payment, in whole or in part, of privileged debts, according to their rank, without formal declaration of a dividend.

ACCOUNTS OF TRUSTEES.

SEC. 75. That immediately on the expiration of three months from the time of his appointment, or earlier if practicable, the trustee shall file in the clerk's office an account of his receipts and payments, and a statement of the situation of the estate, and a list of all debts proved since the first meeting, with the names and residences of the creditors. He shall, at the same time, file a duplicate of the account and statement with the commissioner.

Thereupon a second meeting of creditors shall be called, if the court thinks it expedient to call one, or if the trustee or any creditor requests it, at which the account shall be examined by the creditors and be passed upon by the commissioner; and debts which have been proved may be re-examined, after notice to the proving creditor, as heretofore provided. Such meeting shall be notified by the commissioner to all known creditors, with a summary statement of the matters to be considered thereat.

If a meeting is not asked for or thought necessary, a hearing shall be had upon the said account, of which notice shall be given, by publication or otherwise, or without notice, as the court shall order.

Similar proceedings shall be had at the end of every six months until the estate is fully settled.

SEC. 76. That the trustee shall be allowed, from the assets in his hands, all his necessary disbursements, and such reasonable compensation for his services, having regard to the circumstances of the case, as shall be allowed by the committee of direction, or, if there be no committee, by a majority in value of the creditors, and, in default of such allowance, by the commissioner, not exceeding the rate of compensation allowed for similar services by the probate courts of the State in which the proceedings are pending; and the allowance shall, in all cases, be subject to the decision of the district judge and the supervision of the circuit court.

DIVIDENDS.

SEC. 77. That whenever after the settlement of any trustee's account there are funds applicable to a dividend, the court shall order a dividend to be declared, reserving, however, sufficient funds to meet all claims which, by reason of their nature or the distant residence of the creditor, or other sufficient reason, have not been proved and allowed: Provided, That a final settlement of the estate shall not be delayed for the proof of contingent liabilities which the creditor has not required the court to value, unless the court shall make a special order to that effect. No dividend already declared and paid shall be disturbed by reason of debts being afterward proved, but the creditors proving such debts shall be entitled to dividends equal to those already received by the other creditors before any other payment is made to the latter.

The commissioner shall prepare a dividend sheet, in duplicate, and file one copy thereof in court, and shall notify and pay the creditors, or cause them to be paid, in such mode as the court shall order.

UNCLAIMED DIVIDENDS.

SEC. 78. That dividends which remain unclaimed for six months after the final dividend has been declared shall be then paid by the trustee into the registry of the court, and the court shall take all reasonable means to cause their payment to the creditors entitled thereto; and dividends remaining unclaimed in the registry for the space of six years shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

PREFERENCES AND FRAUDS ON THE ACT.

SEC. 79. That any debtor who, being insolvent or in contemplation of insolvency or bankruptcy, shall procure any part of his property to be taken, attached, or sequestered on legal process, or shall, directly or indirectly, assist in the recovery of any judgment against him, or make any payment or transfer of his property with a view to prefer any creditor or person having any claim against him, or who is under any liability for him, shall be deemed to have made a fraudulent preference; and if the same shall have been made within six months before the debtor's bankruptcy, and the person receiving such preference or to be benefited thereby, or his agent acting therein, shall have reasonable cause to believe that a fraud on this act was intended, the preference shall be voidable by the trustee, who may recover the property, or its value, from such creditor or other person: Provided, That when a creditor has been preferred and afterward in good faith gives the debtor further credit, without security of any kind, for money or goods which are used in the debtor's business, the amount of such new credit remaining unpaid at the bankruptcy may be deducted from the amount which would otherwise be recoverable from the preferred creditor.

It any such debtor as aforesaid, within the period aforesaid, shall do any of the things above mentioned with intent to prevent the property dealt with or affected from coming to his trustee in bankruptcy, or to defeat, delay, impair, hinder, or evade the operation of this act, the person dealing with such debtor, or any one acting for such person, having reasonable cause to believe that a fraud on this act was intended, the trustee may recover the property or its value from such person.

The fact that a transfer was not made in the ordinary course of the debtor's business shall be prima facie evidence of fraud on his part and of a reasonable cause of belief thereof by the other party.

The period of six months shall be reckoned in the same manner as is herein provided in respect to acts of bankruptcy.

If a debtor shall, directly or indirectly, pay money or transfer property to an attorney at law for the services to be rendered him in bankruptcy beyond a reasonable retainer, and thereafter becomes bankrupt, such payment shall be a preference, and the trustee may recover the amount by summary process.

PROTECTION OF BANKRUPT.

SEC. 80. That no creditor whose debt will be released by the bankrupt's discharge shall be allowed to prosecute to final judgment any suit at law or in equity therefor against the bankrupt until the question of his discharge shall have been determined; and any such suit or proceedings shall, upon the application of the bankrupt, be stayed to await the determination of the court of bankruptcy on the question of the discharge: Provided, That there is no unreasonable delay on the part of the bankrupt in endeavoring to obtain it: And provided also, That if the amount due the creditor is in dispute the suit, by leave of the court in bankruptcy, may proceed to judgment for the purpose of ascertaining the amount due, which amount may be proved in bankruptcy, but execution shall be stayed until the time aforesaid. If the suit is by a secured creditor to realize his security the court of bankruptcy may allow it to proceed for that purpose if the interest of the general creditors will not be injuriously affected thereby.

SEC. 81. That no bankrupt shall be liable, during the pendency of the proceedings in bankruptcy, to arrest in any civil action unless the same is founded on some debt or claim from which his discharge in bankruptcy would not release him.

DISCHARGE.

SEC. 82. That the bankrupt may, not less than two nor more than six months after the adjudication, apply to the court for a discharge from his debts: Provided, however, That if he shall apply for his discharge earlier than six months, prima facie showing of any act that would, if proved, bar his discharge, or the objection of one-fourth in amount of his creditors, or the objection of the committee of direction or the trustee, shall suspend his application to the end of six months after the adjudication. A hearing on the application shall be had by the judge, if convenient, and if not, by the commissioner, after notice by mail to all known creditors, and by publication in one or more newspapers, as the court may direct.

SEC. 83. That it shall be a valid objection to the bankrupt's discharge that he has done anything which is made criminal by this act, or has given a preference or preferences as hereinbefore defined under an assignment for creditors or otherwise, which have not been surrendered; or shall have made at any time a transfer of his property, which any creditor who has proved his debt in the proceedings might at the time of the bankruptcy have impeached as fraudulent if he had then been a judgment creditor, unless such property shall have been surrendered to the trustee; or, being a trader whose annual transactions exceed $5,000, he has failed to keep proper books of account, or that he has without valid excuse failed to obey any order of the court; or if he has within one year before his bankruptcy knowingly made any false and fraudulent statement to any person or persons, which statement shall be made in writing and subscribed by said bankrupt and made for the purpose of being communicated to the trade or to those from whom he has sought or obtained credit. The court or the supervisor or a majority in value of the creditors may authorize or require the trustee or a creditor to oppose the debtor's discharge at the expense of the estate not exceeding a sum to be stated in the order or resolution.

SEC. 84. That the hearing shall be conducted like other hearings under this act and be subject to like revision. All creditors whose debts would be barred by the discharge shall be entitled to be heard and to examine the bankrupt, who shall be personally present, unless prevented by some cause satisfactory to the court. No formal pleadings shall be required, but record shall be made of any allegations made in opposition to the discharge.

SEC. 85. That if upon the hearing and trial it shall be found that the bankrupt has conformed to his duty under this act, and has done nothing which should operate to prevent his discharge, the same shall be granted, and a certificate thereof shall be given him, under the seal of the court, in substance as follows, but which may be varied as the circumstances of any case may require:

"DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,

"DISTRICT OF ——:

"Whereas —— has been duly adjudged a bankrupt under the statutes of the United States, and appears to have conformed to all the requirements of law in that behalf: It is therefore ordered by the court that the said —— be forever discharged from all debts and claims which by said statutes are made provable against his estate, and which existed on the —— day of ——, on which day the petition for adjudication was filed by (or against) him, excepting such debts, if any, as are by law excepted from the operation of a discharge in bankruptcy.

"Given under my hand and the seal of the court, at ——, in the said district, this —— day of ——."

[SEAL.] "——, Judge."

The certificate, or an authenticated copy thereof, or of the order for a discharge, shall be conclusive evidence of the fact and regularity of the discharge, and of the jurisdiction of the court granting the same, and may be pleaded in bar by a simple averment that it was granted on the day of its date.

SEC. 86. That a discharge, duly granted, shall release the bankrupt from all provable debts, including judgments obtained upon such debts pending the proceedings and before the discharge, and debts to a State or the United States, except taxes, and all collateral covenants and undertakings in respect to debts or the security for debts which are discharged. But the following debts are excepted, and shall not be discharged: Debts created by the debtor's fraud or embezzlement, or by his defalcation as a public officer, or while acting as a trustee, trustee in bankruptcy, or in some other fiduciary character; and when a debt has not been mentioned in the bankrupt's schedule, or some amendment thereof, in season for effectual proof, with the name of the creditor, if known to him, the creditor, unless he had notice or actual knowledge of the bankruptcy, may recover the same proportionate amount of his debt as he would have received if he had proven the same, or had taken part in the composition proceedings, as the case may be.

SEC. 87. That no discharge shall release or discharge any person liable for the same debt for or with the bankrupt as partner, joint contractor, indorser, surety, or otherwise.

REVIEW OF DISCHARGE.

SEC. 88. That the order granting a discharge may be reviewed and annulled by the judge in bankruptcy of the same court, within two years after it passed, upon the written application of any creditor or creditors whose debts, amounting to not less than $250, would be barred thereby, upon due notice and hearing and satisfactory evidence that such order was obtained by fraud or perjury, or that the bankrupt failed to surrender all his unexempt property, or influenced the action of any creditor in respect to said discharge or to a composition by any payment or promise contrary to law, and that such fraud, perjury, or illegal act was not known to said creditors in season to be availed of in opposition to such discharge, unless it was in fact put in issue and tried in good faith, upon the objection of other creditors before the discharge.

NEW PROMISE.

SEC. 89. That every promise, covenant, undertaking, and security given by any bankrupt, whether before or after his discharge, to pay a provable debt, or any part thereof, notwithstanding his discharge, shall be void, unless some new and valuable consideration is given therefor, and the same is put in writing and signed by the party making said promise, or his duly authorized agent.

PARTNERS.

SEC. 90. That when two or more persons residing and owing debts, as aforesaid, who are or have been partners in trade, become insolvent before the final settlement of their joint affairs, they, or any two or more of them, may be jointly adjudged bankrupt upon the petition of said partners, or any of them, due notice being first given to such as do not join in the petition; and upon evidence that any of said respondents are not insolvent, the petition shall, as to him or them, be dismissed.

And such partners, or any two or more of them, who shall have committed acts of bankruptcy, may be jointly adjudged bankrupt, upon the petition of creditors and proceedings thereon as hereinbefore provided for individual debtors.

Such petition, in either case, may be brought in any district where a petition by or against either of the partners might be brought; and the court shall have power to cause notice to be served on such as are without the district in such mode as it deems best; and the court in which the first petition is filed shall have exclusive jurisdiction of the case, unless the judge of said court shall decide that one of the other districts will be more advantageous and convenient for the parties interested, in which case the court of the latter district shall have the conduct of the proceedings. This rule shall apply to individual debtors proceeded against in more than one district as well as to partnerships.

SEC. 91. That all the creditors of the firm, and the several creditors of each partner, may prove their respective debts. The trustee shall be chosen by the joint creditors, and all the joint and separate property shall vest in him upon his qualification. He shall keep separate accounts of the joint estate and of the separate estate of each partner, and after deducting out of the whole amount received by the trustee the whole of the expenses and disbursements, the net proceeds of the joint stock shall be appropriated to pay the creditors of the copartnership, and the net proceeds of the separate estate of each partner shall be appropriated to pay his separate creditors. This rule shall be followed though there should be no joint assets and no solvent partner. If there is any surplus of the separate estate of any partner after the payments of his separate debts, with interest to the time of payment, such surplus shall be added to the joint stock for the payment of the joint creditors; and if there is any surplus of the joint stock after payment of the joint debts, with like interest, the same shall be appropriated to and divided among the separate estates of the several partners according to their respective right and interest therein, and shall be applied to the payment of their separate debts, respectively. The certificate of discharge shall be granted or refused to each partner as the same would or ought to be if the proceedings had been against him alone. In all other respects the proceedings by or against partners shall be conducted in the like manner as if they had been commenced and prosecuted by or against one person alone.

SEC. 92. That in the case of any debt or liability arising from a partnership to any member thereof, or of any such member to any such partnership, the court may ascertain and liquidate the amount justly and equitably due thereon at the date of the bankruptcy, and may order proof for such amount.

SEC. 93. That whenever, upon the dissolution of a partnership, one or more of the partners of a new firm shall have agreed to assume and pay all the outstanding debts of such partnership, or whenever any person shall, for a valuable consideration, have agreed to assume and pay the debts of another, and the person or firm so agreeing to pay shall become bankrupt, any creditor whose debt was so assumed may assent to the substitution after as well as before such bankruptcy, and may signify his assent by proving his debt in the proceedings.

CORPORATIONS.

SEC. 94. That the provisions of this act shall apply to all moneyed, business, or commercial corporations and joint stock companies, and upon the petition of any officer of any such corporation or company, duly authorized by a vote of a majority of the corporators at any legal meeting called for the purpose, or upon the petition of creditors of such corporation or company, made and presented to the court having jurisdiction, and in the manner provided in respect to debtors, the like proceedings shall be had and taken as are provided in the case of debtors. All the provisions of this act which apply to the debtor, or set forth his duties in regard to furnishing schedules and inventories, executing papers, submitting to examinations, disclosing, making over, secreting, concealing, conveying, assigning, or paying away his money or property, shall, in like manner and with like force, effect, and penalties, apply to each and every officer of such corporation or company, in relation to the same matters concerning the corporation or company, and the money and property thereof. All payment, conveyances, and assignments declared fraudulent and void by this act when made by a debtor shall, in like manner, and to the like extent, and with like remedies, be fraudulent and void when made by a corporation or company. Whenever any corporation, by proceedings under this act, is declared bankrupt, all its property and assets shall be distributed to the creditors of such corporation in the manner provided in respect to natural persons; but no allowance or discharge shall be granted to any corporation or joint stock company.

SEC. 95. That whenever a corporation created by the laws of any State, whose business is carried on wholly within the State creating the same, and also any insurance company so created, whether all its business shall be carried on in such State or not, has had proceedings duly commenced against such corporation or company before the courts of such State for the purpose of winding up the affairs of such corporation or company, and dividing its assets ratably among its creditors, and lawfully among those entitled thereto prior to proceedings having been commenced against such corporation or company under the bankrupt laws of the United States, any order made or that shall be made by such court, agreeably to the State law, for the ratable distribution or payment of any dividend of assets to the creditors of such corporation or company, while such State court shall remain actually or constructively in possession or control of the assets of such corporation or company, shall be deemed valid notwithstanding proceedings in bankruptcy may have been commenced and be pending against such corporation or company.

COMPOSITION.

SEC. 96. That at any time after a debtor has been adjudged bankrupt, and has filed his schedule and inventory, he may file in the clerk's office of the court of bankruptcy or with the commissioner a proposal for a composition with his creditors. Such proposal shall not be considered unless it provides for the payment in cash of all debts, costs, and charges entitled to priority by this act, and for a payment to the general creditors, which shall be cash or amply secured, by indorsement or otherwise, in a mode to be stated in said proposal.

SEC. 97. That upon the filing of such a proposal, the court shall order a hearing before the commissioner upon the issue of the acceptance or rejection thereof, of which hearing the commissioner shall send notice by mail, postpaid, to all known creditors of the debtor, at least ten days before the time appointed therefor, of the substance of the said proposal. Until said hearing, the trustee, or, if no trustee has been chosen, the commissioner, or some person to be designated by the court, shall be the custodian of all the books of accounts and other writings and papers of the debtor which can be of use in deciding said issue, including copies of his schedule and inventory, and the same shall be open at all reasonable times to the examination of the creditors, and of any agent, accountant, attorney, or committee duly acting for the creditors, or any of them. The debtor may be examined before the hearing or at any time before the final confirmation of the composition, by special order of the court, in the same manner as bankrupts are examined.

SEC. 98. That at the hearing the debtor shall be personally present, and may be examined by any creditor, and shall be examined by the commissioner and trustee, concerning all matters pertinent to the issue.

All other pertinent evidence may be given; and the debtor may, at any time before the hearing is closed, offer a written modification of his proposal more favorable to the creditors than that originally proposed, but not one which is, or can be, less favorable; and such modified proposal shall thenceforward be considered the proposal.

SEC. 99. That after the evidence is closed, the hearing shall be adjourned for not less than two nor more than four weeks, unless the court shall, for cause, enlarge the time; and if, at or before the adjourned hearing, the debtor shall file with the commissioner the written assent to said proposal, signed by at least a majority in number and three-fourths in value of all his known creditors, the same shall be forthwith reported to the judge in the mode before provided in respect to hearings, together with the opinion of the commissioner thereon, with a list of all known creditors and the amount due to each. No assent, and no special power of attorney or proxy, for any composition, shall be signed by any creditor before the first hearing. All debts set out in the bankrupt's schedule shall be considered to be due for the amounts and to the extent that they would be provable in bankruptcy, unless they shall be impeached or varied at a hearing; but all creditors shall prove their debts in the ordinary way before their assent to the proposal shall be counted. Creditors having unliquidated or contingent demands heretofore made provable may have the same assessed or valued by or under the direction of the court, and secured creditors may in like manner ascertain the excess of their debts above their security, as in other cases. All such claims shall be provided for in the composition, unless the supposed creditor, on special notice, refuses to join in the proceedings, or the court decides that the claim is incapable of valuation. Such claim, if not liquidated before the close of the adjourned hearing, need not be counted in ascertaining numbers and amounts, unless justice is found to require it. A preferred creditor shall not be counted in respect to the preferred debt, nor a privileged creditor in respect to so much of his debt as is to be paid in full. The judge shall appoint some convenient time, not more than thirty days after said report is filed, for a hearing of all parties interested, and shall confirm said proposal if the same appears to have been duly assented to, and is, in the opinion of the court, beneficial for the creditors and not unjust to any one. Matters which would prevent a discharge in bankruptcy may be considered in ascertaining the expediency of accepting or confirming the composition, but not as an absolute bar. If known to the objecting creditors, they shall be inquired into in the hearing before the commissioner in order that they may be taken into account by the creditors voting or acting in the composition. If the only valid objection to said proposal is the insufficiency of the security for the deferred payments, the court may affirm it upon satisfactory security being given. Upon such acceptance, the money for the cash payments shall be forthwith paid into the registry of the court, with a list of the creditors, and of the amount due to each, and shall be paid out to said creditors as other moneys are paid out of the registry. And if there are deferred installments, evidence shall be furnished to the satisfaction of the court that the same have been all duly and properly secured as provided in the order, and thereupon the court shall grant a discharge to the debtor, which shall release him from his provable debts; excepting such as are excepted in an ordinary discharge in bankruptcy, and with the further exception of payments upon said composition; and the debtor's property remaining undisposed of shall revert to him, ipso facto, upon the granting of the discharge, unless some special order shall be made to the contrary. But property not described in the debtor's inventory with reasonable distinctness shall not so revert, but may be recovered into the circuit or district court by the trustee, or by a receiver appointed by the court of bankruptcy, for distribution among the creditors, unless the omission was not injurious to the creditors.

SEC. 100. That if the payments are not made and securities given before the expiration of thirty days from the order of acceptance of the composition, the case shall proceed in bankruptcy; and in such case the trustee may recover all moneys which shall have been paid to any creditors, and which should have been paid into court, or so much thereof as may be necessary to put all creditors upon a just and equal footing, by summary proceedings in the court of bankruptcy against the creditors jointly who have received such preference, or against such as can be found and are able to respond; and for this purpose creditors without the district may be served with notice or process as the judge may direct.

SEC. 101. That the court of bankruptcy shall have and retain jurisdiction over a compounding debtor to enforce the payment of the composition before or after the discharge, and over trustees and other officers having any of his property in their possession or control; and the district and circuit courts shall have jurisdiction concurrently with the State courts of all suits against indorsers, sureties, or others bound for such payments, and upon the property so bound in all matters pertaining to such composition.

CRIMES.

SEC. 102. That from and after the passage of this act if any person who shall be adjudged bankrupt shall, after or within six months before his bankruptcy, and in contemplation or apprehension thereof, secrete, conceal, retain, or remove any of his property, or any book, deed, writing, or document relating thereto, or alter, mutilate, or falsify any such book, deed, writing, or document, or conceal from his trustee or omit from his inventory any property hereinbefore required to be stated therein, or make therein any willfully false valuation, or place any false debt upon his schedule, with intent, in each of the above-mentioned cases, to defraud his trustee or his creditors in bankruptcy; or if he shall, in case of any person having to his knowledge proved a false or fictitious debt against his estate, fail to disclose the same to his assignee within one month after coming to the knowledge thereof, or shall make any payment or give any advantage, or the promise of either, to any creditor, with intent to affect the proceedings in bankruptcy or composition, or shall attempt to account for any of his property by fictitious losses or expense, or shall, within the period aforesaid, and in contemplation or apprehension aforesaid, obtain on credit from any person any money, goods, chattels, or other thing of value, with intent not to pay for the same; or with intent, by the means thus acquired, to prefer a creditor or commit any fraud on this act, or to increase his assets in bankruptcy, or shall pledge, pawn, or dispose of, otherwise than in the due course of his trade, any goods or chattels which he shall have obtained on credit and which remain unpaid for at the time of his bankruptcy, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by imprisonment, with or without hard labor, for a period not exceeding three years.

SEC. 103. That any person who shall knowingly and fraudulently present any false or fictitious or substantially exaggerated debt or claim for proof against the estate of a bankrupt, or who shall use any false, fictitious, or exaggerated claim in composition, whether personally or by an agent, proxy, or attorney; any agent, proxy, or attorney who shall knowingly offer or use the same; any creditor of a bankrupt who shall knowingly receive any money or thing of value, or the promise of any, as a consideration for any act or forbearance to act in respect to the choice of a trustee, or the acceptance of a composition, or the discharge of a bankrupt, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $2,000, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, or by both.

SEC. 104. That any person who shall knowingly and corruptly make any false oath in or in relation to any proceedings in bankruptcy shall be deemed to have committed perjury.

SEC. 105. That if any trustee shall fraudulently and corruptly either embezzle, appropriate to his own use, spend, or transfer any of the assets in his charge to the injury of the creditors, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than two years, or both.

SEC. 106. That when any debtor domiciled abroad shall be adjudged bankrupt at the place of his domicile, having property within the United States at the time of such adjudication, he or his creditor or creditors to the amount of $250 may apply by petition to the district judge of the district where said property or any part of it is found, to have such person adjudged bankrupt. With the petition shall be filed a certified copy of the proceedings in the foreign court of bankruptcy. Upon the filing of such petition, and upon such notice as the judge shall order, and due hearing, such debtor, if found to be bankrupt abroad, may be adjudged a bankrupt; and thereupon the judge shall appoint a trustee or trustees of his estate, who shall qualify as in this act provided for domestic trustees; and there shall thereupon vest in him and them the property of such bankrupt within the United States as fully as if he were a resident bankrupt, and with a similar dissolution of attachment and other judicial liens; and similar proceedings shall be taken in respect to proof of debts and the settlement of the estate as are herein provided for resident bankrupts.

The estate of such bankrupt within the United States shall be so divided, as far as practicable, that all creditors here and elsewhere shall receive proportional shares of the whole assets of the debtor here and elsewhere; and especially that creditors who are citizens of the United States, and who have not proved their debts abroad, shall receive such proportionate share. When this object has been attained or secured the judge may order the residue of the assets to be transmitted to the trustees or other persons entitled thereto under the foreign proceedings, or to be divided here, as may seem best.

If the bankrupt obtains a discharge in the foreign court, it shall have such effect in the United States in respect to all debts which have been proved in the proceedings under this act as it would have had if they had been proved in the proceedings abroad.

SEC. 107. That this act shall take effect as to the appointment of commissioners and supervisors, and the promulgation of rules, upon its passage, and shall go into full operation on the —— day of ——; and no officer shall be deemed to have earned any salary excepting from and after said last-mentioned day.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I desire to say in this connection that I should not undertake to discuss a substitute proposed to a bill which has been reported by this learned and able committee, and the comparative merits of the two systems, until the Senator who reported the bill had been heard in advocacy of the original scheme were it not at his special request and for his special convenience. I can state the views I have to state in twenty or twenty-five minutes, and I desire to address the Senate for that length of time in support of the substitute which I have offered.

There is to-day no method under the Constitution of the United States by which a debtor can be discharged of debts he is unable to pay without the consent of his creditors. That consent is presumed when the debt is created by a contract between citizens of the State where it is payable, such State having at the time a law providing for the discharge. With this exception, however unfortunate, however honest he may be, whatever the necessity or the distress of the innocent family who may be dependent upon him, the American citizen who owes debts to the citizen of another State or country, or debts to citizens of his own State, contracted in the absence of an insolvent law, has about his neck a perpetual chain. He must live and die, if his creditors so will, incapable to acquire or enjoy property. It is true the State law may do something for him. It may make fraud easy. The local sentiment of the community where he lives may aid him in throwing obstacles in the way of his creditors; juries may refuse honest verdicts against him; State Legislatures and State courts may refuse remedies to his creditors. He may lead a life of shifts and evasions, concealments, and pretenses. But all this is surely far worse and more degrading than poverty itself. Mr. Webster stated this forty years ago in his own inimitable fashion:

The result is bad every way. It is bad to the public and to the country, which loses the efforts and the industry of so many useful and capable citizens. It is bad to creditors, because there is no security against preferences, no principle of equality, and encouragement for honest, fair, and seasonable assignments of effects. As to the debtor, however good his intentions or earnest his endeavors, it subdues his spirit and degrades him in his own esteem; and if he attempts anything for the purpose of obtaining food and clothing for his family he is driven to unworthy shifts and disguises, to the use of other persons' names, to the adoption of the character of agent, and various other contrivances to keep the little earnings of the day from the reach of his creditors. Fathers act in the name of their sons, sons act in the name of their fathers; all constantly exposed to the greatest temptation to misrepresent facts and to evade the law if creditors should strike. All this is evil, unmixed evil. And what is it all for? Of what benefit to anybody? Who likes it? Who wishes it? What class of creditors desire it? What consideration of public good demands it?

Sir, we talk much, and talk warmly, of political liberty, and well we may, for it is among the chief of public blessings. But who can enjoy political liberty if he is deprived, permanently, of personal liberty and the exercise of his own industry and his own faculties? To those unfortunate individuals, doomed to the everlasting bondage of debt, what is it that we have free institutions of government? What is it that we have public and popular assemblies? What is even this Constitution itself to them in its actual operation and as we now administer it? What is its aspect to them but an aspect of stern, implacable severity—an aspect of refusal, denial, and frowning rebuke? Nay, more than that, an aspect not only of austerity and rebuke, but, as they must think it, of plain injustice also, since it will not relieve them nor suffer others to give them relief. What love can they feel toward the Constitution of their country, which has taken the power of striking off their bonds from their own paternal State governments, and yet, inexorable to all the cries of justice and of mercy, holds it unexercised in its own fast and unrelenting grasp? They find themselves bondsmen because we will not execute the commands of the Constitution: bondsmen to debts they cannot pay and which all know they cannot pay, and which take away the power of supporting themselves. Other slaves have masters charged with the duty of support and protection, but their masters neither clothe, nor feed, nor shelter; they only bind.

There have been in the United States since the repeal of the bankrupt law 27,751 failures reported in the journals devoted to commerce. There must be many not reported. The aggregate liability of these debtors is stated by the same authority at $479,440,107. I have no means of ascertaining what proportion of these debts have creditors beyond the limits of their own States, or dwell in States not having bankruptcy systems of their own. But the number must be very large. Each of our great commercial cities is within a brief ride of the border of the State to which it belongs, and within a brief ride of populous and thriving towns or cities situated in other States with which it has large and increasing business relations. This is true of Portland, Portsmouth, Boston, Providence, Hartford, Worcester, New York, Albany, Buffalo, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Charleston, Savannah, Saint Louis, Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, New Orleans, Mobile, and many others. Commerce and manufactures know no State lines.

The Constitution of the United States, for wise reasons, prohibits to the States the exercise of any power for the relief of insolvent debtors from obligations due beyond their limits. A matter with which commerce with foreign nations and among the States is so largely concerned must be regulated by that power which alone regulates commerce with foreign nations and among the States—the only power whose regulations, from the nature of the case, can be uniform throughout the whole country.

The authors of the Federalist deemed the propriety of this provision too clear for discussion. Mr. Madison says, (No. 42:)

The power of establishing uniform laws of bankruptcy is so intimately connected with the regulation of commerce, and will prevent so many frauds where the parties or their property may lie or be removed into different States, that the expediency of it seems not likely to be drawn into question.

I have here a table, compiled by Mr. Spofford, from Hunt's Merchants' Magazine and Dunn, Barlow & Co.'s circulars, showing the number of failures, the amount of liabilities, the number of traders, and the percentage of failures in the country for the past twelve years. These statistics contradict the suggestion that failures are more numerous when a bankrupt system is in operation than when there is none. On the contrary, where the creditors are to share the loss alike, they are often likely to give the embarrassed trader help to proceed or to make reasonable compromises. This is impracticable where one vigilant or favored claimant can grasp the whole.

Failures in the United States for twelve years.

Mr. President, it is not alone for the interest of the man who cannot pay that a just and liberal bankruptcy system is required. It is especially demanded by the interests of young and growing States, and by the interest of those States which are not young but are seeking new life in the establishment of new industries under new and happy conditions of labor. Such communities need to attract capital now lying idle to an unprecedented amount in the North and East. To attract this capital they have only to maintain their credit. Labor, however abundant, however enterprising, cannot rise above the merest and lowest manual drudgery, even where natural advantages are most abundant, unless it have capital as its ally and servant. Capital will not go to communities where justice does not prevail. It will be content with the smallest return, it will lie boarded and concealed, rather than trust itself where the laws make fraud easy, or where in case the debtor fail his whole property is grasped by real or pretended creditors on the spot, to the exclusion of those at a distance.

But my purpose in addressing the Senate was not to enter upon an argument in favor of a policy settled when the Constitution was adopted. I wish briefly to discuss the practical merits of the two plans which are before the Senate. One is that reported by the Senator from Kansas, and known as the equity system. The other is found in several bills, introduced here or in the other House, all based upon a draft made by Judge Lowell, of the first circuit, a distinguished equity and bankruptcy jurist.

The bill of the Senator from Kansas takes from Judge Lowell's draft its enumeration of the acts which authorize involuntary proceedings. It then authorizes creditors' bills to be brought by or against insolvent debtors in the several district courts of the United States, on whom it confers jurisdiction to distribute the estate "according to the rules and practice of courts of equity," using the instrumentality of masters and receivers, but "all the decisions of such masters to be subject to the summary and informal supervision and control of the court."

The district judge, in his term, is to be subject to the constant supervision and control of the circuit judge, and he in his term to that of the supreme judge for the circuit; or the party aggrieved may seek relief by appeal as in other cases. Bankruptcy business is to have precedence over all other at the regular terms of the court. Insolvency is made to depend upon the actual value of the debtor's property, and not upon his capacity to meet his payments in the course of business; and he can only apply for relief when his "liabilities exceed in amount the value of his property liable to execution." He can have a discharge only when "his debts and liabilities were incurred without fraud, and his inability to make payment has arisen from accident and misfortune and without fraud." Without a very strained construction of language, the debtor whose insolvency arises from mere want of good judgment in business cannot get a discharge. On the other hand, the discharge is not forfeited by fraudulent concealments or conveyances by the debtor after his inability to pay is disclosed. A debtor who puts his property, in trust for himself or his family after his failure, into the hands of a trustee in a foreign country, is not deprived of his discharge thereby. These defects I suppose would be amended on reflection by the author of the bill.

The Lowell system is the bankruptcy system of Great Britain and America carefully modified to avoid the defects which experience has disclosed, especially to reduce the cost of the process to the lowest practicable point. It also seeks especially to avoid the evil which attends so much of the exercise of national jurisdiction, and which in the great spaces of the large States has brought upon it so much unpopularity, the compelling the people to attend courts at great distances from their homes. As modified in the amendment which I have proposed to the bill reported by the Senator from Kansas, it leaves to the several States to determine their own policies in the matter of exemption of property from liability for debt, excepting from the assignment all the property which the State law exempts from execution.

The systems agree in the two vital particulars, first, of giving to the debtor who commits no fraud an absolute discharge without the consent of anybody; second, of saving to him the homestead and all other property which the law of his State exempts.

The systems differ in the following particulars, in each of which the advantage seems to me very decidedly with the bill of Judge Lowell:

The Lowell bill is the system which experience has suggested and approved in England and in several of the States. It has been expounded by numerous judicial decisions. The statute carefully provides for all the detail of proceeding, and the Supreme Court is authorized to make rules of practice. So that a system uniform throughout the whole country is secured.

The equity scheme is the antiquated and cumbrous remedy of a creditor's bill, a method of settling estates which has never been much in use or found favor either here or in England. All its procedures are to be developed and expanded by the courts. It is yet to be developed. The skeleton of the statute is to be clothed with flesh and muscle by the courts. Different systems will prevail in different districts.

The Lowell bill, with hardly an exception, is that asked for by those who desire a bankrupt law. The equity scheme has few advocates.

When the debtor has surrendered his property and his discharge is secure nobody has any interest in the estate but the creditors. They are the absolute owners. But the committee's bill denies them any voice whatever in its disposition, or the choice of an agent to manage it. The receiver is appointed by the court and appointed before the claims are proved. The Lowell bill, on the other hand, vests the choice of the trustee in the creditors whom he represents.

The Lowell bill carries the court to the neighborhood where the debtor and his estate and the mass of his creditors will be found. The equity system compels everything to be transported to the place where the court is held. This grievance to which the unpopularity of Federal jurisdictions as instanced in patent and revenue causes has been so largely due is intensified in this scheme.

But the difference between the two plans becomes most conspicuous when we consider the comparative expense which attends each. The cost of a bankruptcy process is felt in three places—by the public, the estate, by individuals who are to be heard as parties upon any of the questions that may arise.

Under the Lowell bill, the jurisdiction in bankruptcy is vested in commissioners to be appointed by the court, not to exceed one for each Congressional district, who are to be subject to the control of the court and paid by a fixed salary. In each circuit there is to be a supervisor, who shall examine into and report periodically the condition of all bankruptcy cases in his circuit. Every petitioner, debtor, or creditor pays $60 when the petition is filed. Each estate pays also 1 per cent. of the assets over $500, and ½ per cent. upon the total amount of all compositions.

The average annual number of cases in Massachusetts when the bankrupt law was in force was 827. These would have paid a revenue under the Lowell amendment of $65,449. On the other hand, supposing the number of registers or commissioners for Massachusetts to be nine, at a salary of $4,000 each, and that three-fourths of the salary of a supervisor and four-sevenths of the expense of the clerk's office were charged to that district, the expenses would be $46,784, making a profit to the Treasury of about $20,000. The increase of failures of late years, since 1878, would show a larger margin of profit. This estimate is made on the supposition that the supervisor has $6,000 and the commisssoner $4,000 salary. But in my judgment an average of $2,500 for one and $3,000 for the other will be ample, which would add $15,000 to this profit. The equity scheme charges to the estate the fees of master and receiver. But it makes no provision for the enormous additional labor it imposes upon the courts. In my opinion, in each of the twelve or fifteen principal districts of the United States, an additional district judge will be rendered indispensable by the equity system.

There were in the district of Massachusetts during the eleven years that the last bankrupt law was in force 9,103 cases, an average of 827 cases a year. In each of these cases on every question there is a summary appeal from the district judge to the circuit judge, and from the circuit judge to the supreme judge, on petition of any party aggrieved, being a right to these several hearings besides that before the master. These cases are to have precedence over all other business, civil or criminal. I have requested the very intelligent and experienced clerk of the United States court in Massachusetts to draw off for me the records of a few average bankruptcy cases, and to mark the steps which, under the committee's bill, will require a hearing by the judge, but would be determined by the register under the Lowell substitute. He has done so. The number of such questions is, in the cases respectively, fifteen, twenty-one, twenty-six, sixty-one, one hundred and two. In these the questions growing out of the proof of claims are not included. These would, I think, in most cases average as many more. In the eight hundred and twenty-seven causes to be heard annually in Massachusetts it may well be expected that there will be an average of sixty to seventy-five personal hearings by the judge. Suppose we take but half that number; it will require the furnishing of a judicial force for 2,500 annual hearings, without reckoning the two summary appeals in each question, besides the appeal in the ordinary course of law.

But the burden on the public is inconsiderable compared with the burden on the estate and on the parties. Both estate and creditor must be represented by counsel, and in many cases by able and expensive counsel. Think of compelling them for each of this vast number of hearings to travel to the court, frequently hundreds of miles distant, over the vast spaces of the West and South. The Lowell bill, on the other hand, has the hearings in the Congressional district where the case arises, and requires the commissioner or register to have his places of hearing correspond as near as may be to those of the probate courts of the State.

The equity scheme leaves the fees to be fixed in each case by the court. The Lowell scheme requires that in no case shall they exceed those allowed in the State courts for settling insolvent estates of deceased persons, which, under the practice of all our States, is the least expensive of legal proceedings. Under the equity scheme the master as well as the receiver is paid by fees. In the Lowell bill the register or commissioner, who answers to master and judge both, is paid by a salary.

No man respects more highly than I do the judiciary of the United States. But to vest them with the power in this vast domain of jurisprudence of appointing the officers, of creating the system, and of determining the fees, is in my judgment unwise. It will result in a departure from the policy of the framers of the Constitution that laws on the subject of bankruptcies should be uniform throughout the United States. It will result in many districts in great and vexatious expense both to the United States and to the interested parties. It will increase and not diminish prevailing jealousies of the national tribunals. I therefore hope that the framers of the equity scheme will consent, on further consideration, to its modification by adding to it the safeguards provided in the amendment I have proposed.

Mr. FRYE. Can the Senator briefly state how the Lowell bill decreases the expenses of the old bankruptcy act, which was really repealed on account of the expense of bankruptcy proceedings?

Mr. HOAR. In the first place, under the old bankruptcy act the clerk, assignee, and register in bankruptcy were paid by fees, and in some instances the office of register in bankruptcy was worth $8,000 or $10,000, I dare say $15,000, a year. In the next place, under the old bankruptcy system there was a constant exercise of the power of appeal to court. In the Lowell bill the term "judge" includes register or commissioner. Therefore there is a summary hearing of all these questions by an officer who is paid by a fixed salary for which the United States is reimbursed by its percentage of the estate, the $60 paid in originally.

While the equity scheme will in my judgment multiply and manifold the expense of the old bankruptcy system, the Lowell scheme will diminish it very largely. The Lowell system has a significant provision on the subject of the fees of the assignee, and that is that they shall in no case exceed what is the fee for a similar service in the State probate courts in settling the estates of deceased persons, which I presume the experience of every lawyer in the Senate will concur with me in attesting is perhaps the cheapest, simplest judicial administration known to our law.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts evidently belongs to that class of statesmen described by Macaulay, who prefer to perish by precedent rather than to be saved by innovation. It is a sufficient answer to his eulogies upon the Lowell bill that it is based upon a theory which has been repeatedly tried in America and England, which has been followed in the United States by havoc and disaster and desolation, in which estates were consumed in the extravagant payment of fees and salaries to a vast number of unnecessary officials, and it is to-day in England in the hands of a commission for the purposes of such essential modification as will render it practically and absolutely devoid of all resemblance to the measure which the Senator now offers as an amendment to the pending bill.

The Senator's assault upon the equity scheme as reported by the committee is specious and ingenious, but it is sufficient to say of that also that the objections here are purely speculative, because the experiment has never been tried.

I do not propose at this time, in consequence of the exercises which are about to be commenced, to proceed to answer in detail the objections urged by the Senator from Massachusetts to the equity scheme, but I shall take early occasion upon the reassembling of the Senate to ask the attention of those who believe that a system of bankruptcy is necessary, to the peculiar advantages and benefits which will result from the incorporation of bankruptcy proceedings into the general judicial system of the country.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I desire to say in one word, in reply to the honorable Senator's suggestion, that the Lowell bill is as thoroughly new in regard to its provisions relating to all the points which have been found to be a grievance under the old bankruptcy system as any scheme possibly can be. It preserves of the old bankruptcy system its protections, its defenses, its securities for the faithful administration of the law, and it makes new provisions, those dictated by the greatest business and judicial experience combining, in regard to the removal of these grievances.

On the other hand, what is the equity system which the Senator speaks of as very wise? The one grievance which our fathers inherited, the feeling which they brought over with them from England, which stood in the way of the adoption of equity systems by very many of our States until a recent period, is preserved and intensified in the committee's bill. There is no check on the court in regard to the matter of fees; there is no check on the court in regard to the matter of delay; there is no check on the court in regard to the matter of intricate and difficult refinements and settlements. There is a story of an aged peeress, who lived to be a hundred years old, who was called to testify in the court of chancery, when it was held by Lord Eldon, in a suit which was there pending in regard to some ancient matter of land title. As was the custom in regard to peers, she was invited to a seat upon the bench. After she had given her evidence the judge told her she was at liberty to withdraw, when the aged countess remarked that if his lordship was willing she would like to see what had become of an equity cause of hers which she had instituted eighty years before and had not heard of since.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to lay the bankruptcy bill aside and proceed under the Anthony rule to consider unobjected cases on the Calendar.

Mr. INGALLS. I was advised that resolutions relative to the decease of a late Representative from Missouri were to reach the Senate at three o'clock, or I should have been prepared to proceed this afternoon. I presume the delay is for a few moments only. I therefore suggest that the interval be employed in the consideration of cases on the Calendar to which there is no objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think the resolutions will reach the Senate in a very few moments.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next, in order to give the Sergeant-at-Arms an opportunity to change the carpets in the Chamber.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 4842) to authorize the Southern Maryland Railroad Company to extend a railroad into and within the District of Columbia; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 239) making an appropriation to continue the work of observation and exploration in the Arctic seas.

ADMIRAL ROGER N. STEMBEL.

Mr. VOORHEES. Inasmuch as there seems to be a little opportunity now, I should be very glad to take up House bill No. 5387. Has any Senator the right of way?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] has charge of a bill which is pending as unfinished business when the Calendar is proceeded with under the Anthony rule.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. VOORHEES. If the Senator will yield I shall be obliged to him. There is a bill regulating the pay of Rear-Admiral Stembel which was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs by the Senator from Florida, [Mr. JONES.] The bill has passed the House, and it was passed over without prejudice when it was reached on the Calendar. I should be very glad to have it taken up and disposed of. The admiral wants to leave the city and go home.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Senator from Nebraska yielding——

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am much obliged to the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate.

The bill (H. R. No. 5387) providing for the pay of Rear-Admiral Roger N. Stembel was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to give Rear-Admiral Roger N. Stembel the pay and compensation of a rear-admiral on the retired list from and after June 5, 1874, that being the date of his promotion to the retired list as a rear-admiral.

Mr. INGALLS. What are the facts in this case? Wherein does it differ from that of other persons on the retired list?

Mr. VOORHEES. The bill has passed the House and was reported favorably by the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate. If the Senator wishes the facts I will ask for the reading of the House report.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I will state the facts.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Florida will state the facts.

Mr. VOORHEES. Very well.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Admiral Stembel is a very distinguished officer, having performed gallant services in the late war. I will state, however, that under a law now existing he was promoted to the rank of rear-admiral on the retired list because he had had command of a squadron in the Pacific for some time under orders from the Navy Department. This was a distinction in itself, recognizing his services in that way. He was retired as a commodore, and afterward, under the law, I think, of 1879, he was promoted on the retired list to the grade of rear-admiral in consideration of having had command of a squadron. He performed, as the record shows, most gallant services during the late war, and he received a desperate wound, from which he is now disabled.

He was not one of the men to seek promotion under the several acts of Congress which authorized promotion for gallantry during the war. I have not the least doubt in my mind that if he had made application for a transfer before his retirement as a commodore, instead of having been retired as a commodore he would have been retired as a rear-admiral on the active list; but he was away when proceedings were had under the various acts authorizing promotion for gallantry. As I said, he received a desperate wound at the post of duty, and he was compelled to incur a very considerable expense in effecting the restoration of his health. He is now crippled.

His very distinguished services, gallantry, and suffering were recognized by the House, and the bill proposes to give him the full pay of the rank which he now holds, that of a rear-admiral. He is well advanced in life, and it will not be any thingbeyond what I think he is entitled to for his services. He made very large expenditures of money out of his private purse after he was wounded.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. LOGAN. I vote for the passage of the bill with a view to enter a motion to reconsider it.

The bill was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

SOUTHEASTERN ALASKA.

Mr. BUTLER. Some days ago I gave notice that I desired to have considered by the Senate the bill (S. No. 1153) providing for the organization of the district of Southeastern Alaska, and providing for a civil government therefor. I have not felt called upon to press that measure before the Senate because there have been other important bills demanding attention, but I desire to give notice now that as soon as the bill to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the country is disposed of, I shall ask the Senate to consider the bill which I have indicated.

There is another important bill, the bill (S. No. 360) to provide for a scientific exploration of the Territory of Alaska, which I should like also to have passed as soon as I can possibly secure the attention of the Senate to it.

ORPHAN ASYLUM OF NATCHEZ.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask the Senate to take up Senate bill No. 1939.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I am exceedingly anxious that the bill which I have in charge shall be disposed of to-day, but the Senator from Mississippi thinks the bill which he wishes to have considered will pass without objection, and I am disposed to yield to him.

The bill (S. No. 1939) for the relief of the Protestant Orphan Asylum of Natchez, in the State of Mississippi, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 9, after the word "dollars," to strike out the words "unanimously recommended to be paid on such account by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives on the 29th day of June, 1876;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the accounting officers of the Treasury be authorized and required to audit, settle, and pay the claim of the Protestant Orphan Asylum of the city of Natchez for the use and occupation of the property of the said asylum by the United States military authorities during the late war: Provided, That the amount allowed shall not exceed the sum of $1,750, nor shall any allowance be made for any damage done to said property during such use or occupation, or otherwise.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN NEBRASKA.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I now ask that the consideration of Senate bill No. 1492, which is the pending bill on the Calendar, may be resumed.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1492) for the relief of settlers and purchasers of lands on the public domain in the State of Nebraska.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The bill was taken up and partially considered the other day, when it went over as the unfinished business of the Calendar. It was explained by the report, and I have been anxious that the bill should have full consideration. I desired many Senators to examine the report and give it their consideration. I think some of them have done so, and are prepared to express an opinion upon it if it is desired.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute which was reported from the Committee on Public Lands. It has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of settlers and purchasers of lands on the public domains in the States of Nebraska and Kansas."

ELIZA E. HEBERT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first case on the Calendar under the Anthony rule will be called.

The bill (S. No. 386) for the relief of Mrs. Eliza E. Hebert was announced as first in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator who reported that bill [Mr. CONGER] not being present, it will be passed over.

PROPERTY OF LITTLE SISTERS OF THE POOR.

The bill (S. No. 1612) to provide for the closing of an alley in square 751 in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, and for the relief of the Little Sisters of the Poor was announced as next in order, and was considered in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia, on the petition of all the owners of property abutting on that part of the fifteen-feet-wide alley in square 751 in the city of Washington, running north and south, between north H street and a wider alley in the center of the square, to declare that part of the alley closed; but the owners of the land abutting on that portion of the alley to be closed are, as a condition precedent to such action on the part of the commissioners, to file in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia a plat, to be approved by the commissioners, dedicating to the use of the public, as a public alley, an area of ground equal to the area of the alley-way declared to be closed, or sufficient for the purpose of connecting the alley in the center of the square with east Second street.

The owners of the property abutting on the portion of the alley which may be so closed are to be held to have acquired all the right and title of the District of Columbia or the city of Washington in and to the portion of the alley which may be closed and which may be included within the extension of their several bounds to the lines of the new alley.

The bill further authorizes the commissioners of the District of Columbia to release lots 3 and 4 in square 751, owned and occupied by the Little Sisters of the Poor, from the payment of the special taxes heretofore levied against the same and now remaining unpaid.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ALDRICH. The bill just passed in relation to the Little Sisters of the Poor, I am informed, has a provision relieving that institution from special taxes. I was not aware of the nature of the bill. I move to reconsider the vote passing the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE ALLEN.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. THOMAS ALLEN, late a member of the House from the State of Missouri, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the resolutions of the House be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions of the House of Representatives will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound regret and deep sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. THOMAS ALLEN, late a Representative from the State of Missouri.

Resolved, That, in token of regard for the memory of the deceased, the members of this House wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be instructed to communicate these resolutions to the Senate of the United States.

Resolved, That, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the House do now adjourn.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I ask for the present consideration of the resolutions which I send to the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks for the consideration of the resolutions he offers, which will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has received with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. THOMAS ALLEN, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Missouri, and tenders to the family and kindred of the deceased the assurance of sympathy in their sad bereavement.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended that opportunity may be given for fitting tributes to the memory of the deceased and to his eminent public and private virtues, and that, as a further mark of respect, the Senate at the conclusion of such remarks shall adjourn.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to transmit to the family of the deceased a copy of these resolutions.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, it becomes my sad duty to ask the passage of these resolutions, and to join in paying the last official tribute to the memory of my deceased colleague of the House, Hon. THOMAS ALLEN who was born at Pittsfield, Massachusetts, on August 29, 1813, and died at the Arlington in this city on Saturday, April 8, 1882.

His grandfather, Rev. Thomas Allen, a minister of the Congregational Church, historically known as the "fighting parson" of the Bennington battle in our revolutionary struggle, was the first minister in the town of Pittsfield, having been ordained in 1764, and remained pastor of that church until his death in 1811.

Jonathan Allen, son of Rev. Thomas Allen and father of Hon. THOMAS ALLEN, several times represented the town of Pittsfield in the Legislature and his district in the State senate; was a quartermaster in the war of 1812, and one of the founders of the Berkshire Agricultural Society; and for his second wife married Miss Eunice Williams Larned, daughter of Darius Larned and granddaughter of Colonel Israel Williams, of Hatfield, a loyal adherent to the British Crown in our revolutionary war.

Of this marriage eight children were born, of whom Hon. THOMAS ALLEN was the third. Mr. ALLEN in his youth attended the common schools in his native town, and the Pittsfield Academy. At the age of sixteen he entered Union College, and graduated in 1832. He chose the profession of law, and began his studies in Albany, New York, which were interrupted by the cholera visitation to that city. Family misfortunes, involving heavy pecuniary losses, made it impracticable for him to resume study in Albany.

The struggles, privations, and hopes of Mr. ALLEN in launching his boat on life's ocean are best stated in his own words, taken from a letter to a friend:

My good father said to me: "I have given you an education; here are $25; it is all that I can do; go and take care of yourself." I took the boon with gratitude; and with a full determination to return it with interest and to repay, if possible, the care of my always kind parents, I started for the city of New York. On the evening of the 18th of October, 1832, I took lodgings at a boarding-house at the corner of Wall street and Broadway, now (1853) occupied by the new Metropolitan Bank. My mind was not a little concerned in deciding upon my course of life. I was at the heart of a great city, and often felt a sense of utter loneliness and desolation. With a little purse that must inevitably be exhausted in a few weeks at most, what should I do? After revolving several plans in my mind I resolved to persevere in the profession of the law, as I originally contemplated.

Knowing that I had to work my passage into the profession, I kept a vigilant eye out for employment. In a few days I discovered in the Evening Post an advertisement of "A clerk wanted" in a lawyer's office. I lost no time in repairing to the hoped-for haven. Alas! there had been many applicants, and the place was already filled, and the young man who filled it looked upon me with rather a patronizing air. I resolved, notwithstanding, to present my letters of introduction, and finally obtained permission to remain in the office and read the books, paying for the privilege in clerical labor.

Happily for me, I was not long in discovering that my fellow-student who received the salary soon had a sinecure. My necessity, if nothing else, drove me to industry, and with better chirography, I soon won much of the business of the office, and was finally installed in a clerkship in Hatch & Cambreleng's office in Wall street, with a salary of $300 per annum. In this situation I continued for three years, learning the practice of the law from the labors thrown upon me, and employing my leisure moments in studying the books. My pay was so small that I had to economize closely to get along. A part of the time I roomed in an attic apartment, with a respectable journeyman jeweler, in Duane street, but though often for weeks without a penny in my pocket I did not repine. Hopefully persevering, I increased my little income somewhat by copying for other members of the bar. Some of my letters at this time show an occasional trace of despondency, and sometimes a little disgust with the dry study of the law, which was not half so pleasant to me as holidays in the country.

I was not satisfied whether New York was my proper place, and frequently had dreams of the West, and even of New Orleans. In 1833 President Jackson visited New York, followed a day or two after by the celebrated Indian, Black Hawk. I wrote an account of the visit of those chiefs, describing their personal appearance and the unusual scenes following them in the city. I wrote now and then a comment or a criticism upon passing events, which I sometimes published in the newspapers. But my time was too much occupied in obtaining a living to indulge my literary taste. Seeing that I had an editorial turn, a book-seller with whom I had become acquainted joined me in a plan to publish the first penny newspaper ever published in America.

While in the country completing his arrangements others got wind of the design, and before the plan could be executed had issued a paper on that plan. Others quickly followed. I then gave up the idea, and in September, 1834, became the editor of the Family Magazine, a monthly illustrated journal of useful general intelligence, J. S. Redfield, publisher. I edited his magazine in such moments as I could get from my law pursuits for about a year and a half. The magazine contributed materially to my support. About this time I was engaged by the principal law-book selling house of New York to assist in compiling a digest of the decisions of the New York courts from the earliest times down to that period. Upon this work I labored over a year. For my share of labor in that work I received a small but select law library.

These struggles and privations only nerved his arms and strengthened his heart for future triumphs. He remembered what Horace said:

Nil mortalibus arduum est;

And—

Nil sine magno
Vita labore dedit mortalibus.

In 1835 he was admitted to the bar by the supreme court of New York, and received his master's degree from his Alma Mater, Union College.

In 1836 he visited Washington City and became acquainted with President Jackson and the distinguished public men of that day.

In 1837 he journeyed to the State of Illinois to inspect lands owned by his uncle, General Ripley, in the military reservations of that State. On arriving at Peoria he received letters from friends in Washington urging him to return and establish a new journal.

Returning by way of New York, where he conferred with friends, he undertook the establishment of the journal, issued the prospectus of the Madisonian, and was soon at his post in Washington with presses, materials, and printers, and began the publication of the Madisonian in the field of journalism then so largely occupied by able and veteran editors. He issued the first number on August 16, 1837, holding among other leading ideas "that a mixed currency is essential to a highly civilized commercial state."

Mr. Van Buren having been inaugurated President March 4, 1837, convened Congress in extraordinary session on September 1, 1837. In the election then held for Public Printer, Messrs. Gales & Seaton, of the Intelligencer, and Messrs. Blair & Rives, of the Globe, and Mr. ALLEN, of the Madisonian, being the candidates, Mr. ALLEN was chosen, after a contest of three days, on the twelfth ballot. Political excitement then ran high, and the discussions in the press and on the rostrum grew warm. Mr. ALLEN firmly maintained the position he had taken in the Madisonian, and, in opposition to the administration of Mr. Van Buren, conducted the discussions in the Madisonian with dignity and ability.

In the spring of the year 1839 Mr. ALLEN was dangerously ill, and on his recovery prepared for the National Magazine a comprehensive and critical review of political affairs, which was widely republished.

In the summer of that year Mr. ALLEN, being at the Virginia Springs, wrote a series of "Letters from a Convalescent," which were much quoted.

In the campaign of 1840 he preferred, as a candidate for President, Hon. William C. Rives, of Virginia, but upon the nomination of General Harrison and Mr. Tyler for President and Vice-President gave them a zealous support, in opposition to Van Buren and Johnson.

In the midst of the campaign, on April 11, 1840, the Madisonian printing-office, with all that Mr. ALLEN possessed, except his library, was burned. On May 2, 1840, the Madisonian reappeared, under the continued management of Mr. ALLEN, announcing itself—

Self-born, begotten by the parent flame
In which it burned; another, yet the same.

The vigor and ability of the Madisonian were not diminished by the ordeal of fire, and during this wildly exciting campaign it gained what was then considered a very large circulation, twenty thousand.

The efforts of Mr. ALLEN in behalf of Harrison and Tyler were not confined to the columns of the Madisonian, but were also effectively put forth on the rostrum, in addresses before the national convention of young men at Baltimore, at a public dinner given him by the citizens of his native town, and in several States. President Harrison, on his arrival in Washington, acknowledged the valuable services of Mr. ALLEN, and that he had correctly represented his views. Of the sad group who stood by the bedside when the venerable President died Mr. ALLEN was one. On the succession of Mr. Tyler the Madisonian was a medium of executive communication with the public, and Mr. ALLEN had a potent voice in the reconstruction of the Cabinet.

In 1842 Mr. ALLEN removed to the city of Saint Louis and became an adopted son of Missouri, and in July of that year was united in marriage to Miss Ann C. Russell, a daughter of William C. Russell, esq., a wealthy and prominent citizen of that city. Being pecuniarily independent, Mr. ALLEN closed his law office and interested himself in the public affairs of his adopted city and State, and earnestly engaged in the development of the great system of internal improvements in Missouri and the Mississippi Valley.

In 1848, at the request of a public meeting held in Saint Louis, he prepared an able address, urging a subscription by the city of Saint Louis in aid of the Saint Louis and Cincinnati Railroad.

In 1849 and 1850 Mr. ALLEN earnestly urged the construction of the Pacific Railroad in Missouri, and was elected president of the company, which began the work of construction July 4, 1851.

In 1850 he was elected a State senator for four years from Saint Louis in the General Assembly of Missouri, and was chairman of the committee on internal improvements, and in co-operation with others succeeded in securing a loan of the credit of the State for $2,000,000 in aid of this road, and in 1852 in obtaining from Congress a grant of public lands.

In September, 1852, desiring to adopt a system of internal improvements which would embrace the interests and secure the co-operation of all parts of the State, he proposed a plan for the aid of several lines of railway by the State, which, although not accepted as a whole, was afterward substantially adopted, giving a loan of the credit of the State to the original Pacific Railroad, the Southwest Branch, the Hannibal and Saint Joseph, and the North Missouri Railroads, with an assignment to two of them of lands granted to the State. In 1854 Mr. ALLEN resigned his office of president and director in the Pacific Railroad, receiving most complimentary resolutions from the board of directors. In 1857 he was chosen president of the Terre Haute, Alton and Saint Louis Railroad, and resigned at the end of the year.

In 1858 he founded the banking house of Allen, Copp & Nesbitt, in Saint Louis.

In 1860 and 1861, when civil war threatened our fair land, Mr. ALLEN steadfastly maintained the integrity of the Union and contributed $1,500 for the equipment of the Allen Guard, organized in his native town of Pittsfield.

He rendered valuable services to the authorities of Pittsfield in filling the town's quota of soldiers for the Union Army. In 1862 Mr. ALLEN was the candidate of the "Unconditional Union Men" of Saint Louis for Representative in Congress, and was defeated by slanders charging him with disloyalty, notwithstanding his untiring devotion and his valuable and liberal services to the cause of the Union.

In 1867 he again interested himself in railroads. The Iron Mountain Railroad had received large subsidies from the State of Missouri and city of Saint Louis, and was surrendered to or taken possession of by the State unfinished. The Cairo and Fulton Railroad, extending to Arkansas, was closely connected with the Iron Mountain. Their speedy completion was deemed important.

The General Assembly ordered these two roads to be sold to the highest and best bidders. They were sold together. Mr. ALLEN purchased these roads from the successful bidders and completed the Iron Mountain road in 1869. In 1870 he began the construction of an extension of the Iron Mountain road to Arkansas, which was completed in 1872. Having, with his associates, purchased the franchise of the Cairo and Fulton road in Arkansas, he continued the extension of the road to Little Rock, Arkansas, and thence to Texarkana, Texas.

All these roads were consolidated under the name of the Saint Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern Railway.

In the rapid construction and completion of these roads Mr. ALLEN exhibited wonderful ability and energy. This was the busiest period of his life, having in addition to the management of the roads named the presidency of many other corporate organizations.

In the rapid construction of the long lines of road he negotiated bonds, mostly in Europe. In 1877 the foreign bondholders, becoming jealous of Mr. ALLEN'S management, instituted proceedings in the United States courts for the appointment of a receiver, which he successfully resisted, and retained the management.

In 1881 Mr. ALLEN sold the road to Mr. Jay Gould, receiving one check for $2,000,000.

Mr. ALLEN erected in Saint Louis the Southern Hotel, a magnificent structure, which was appropriately opened May 11, 1881.

In 1880 Mr. ALLEN was nominated as a Democrat for Representative in the Forty-seventh Congress from the second Congressional district of Missouri, embracing portions of the city and county of Saint Louis, and was duly elected in November, 1880.

His health failing, he made an extended European tour with the hope of relief and restoration, in which he was disappointed. Returning to Pittsfield, he was able to take his seat at the beginning of the first session of this Congress and to visit the Capitol a few times, when he became confined to his bed.

Mr. ALLEN was strong in his local attachments and never forgot his native town and ancestral home. Some years after his father's death he purchased the interests of the other heirs in the homestead—built by his grandfather soon after his settlement as the first minister of the town of Pittsfield—and then purchased the old medical boarding-house, standing on a part of his grandfather's original lot. Afterward he removed the parsonage and boarding-house, and erected in their stead the beautiful Elizabethan mansion, of Great Barrington blue-stone, which thereafter was his summer home. He also purchased two fine farms near Pittsfield, one of which had belonged to his father and was the home of his boyhood. In the comforts and quietude of his Pittsfield home he sought in summer rest and recreation.

Mr. ALLEN bore his protracted illness and confinement with true Christian fortitude and resignation, and on the morning of Saturday, April 8, 1882, slept the sleep that has no awakening on earth.

Religious services were conducted by Rev. Dr. Power, Chaplain of the House of Representatives, on Sunday, April 9, at the Arlington, attended by the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House, his family, and many friends; after which his remains were escorted to Pittsfield by committees of the House and Senate, and at Pittsfield were taken charge of by devoted friends, and borne to his residence.

On Tuesday, April 11, his remains were escorted from the residence to the beautiful Congregational Church, of which his grandfather had been pastor from 1764 to 1811, where the finished and eloquent funeral sermon was delivered by Rev. Dr. J. L. Jenkins, the pastor, from the text:

> And Samuel died; and all the Israelites gathered together and lamented him and buried him in his house at Ramah.—1 Samuel 25, 1.

After which they were borne to the Pittsfield Cemetery and buried, there to await the resurrection morn. Mr. ALLEN was energetic, persevering, patient, and hopeful. And, in all the relations of life was an honorable, just, and generous gentleman, and faithful, consistent Christian. He was a man of great literary attainments and scholarly tastes, and was the liberal patron of literature and science.

In the Washington University of Saint Louis he founded a professorship of "Mines and Metallurgy;" and in Pittsfield the Atheneum, devoted "to promoting education, culture, and refinement, and diffusing knowledge."

On the day of the burial, the trustees of the Atheneum unanimously adopted the following recognition of his worth and services:

> The useful life of THOMAS ALLEN, the president of this board of trustees, is ended. To him this institution owes its existence. The continuing benefits it will confer upon this community no man can rightly estimate. It has no limitations. That it is, and will be in all the future, a most efficient promoter of education, culture, and good morals we all know.
> It becomes us, therefore, the surviving members of the board of trustees, the almoners of his bounty, at this time, in behalf of ourselves and the community which shares with us the benefits and advantages of this educational institution, to express our thankfulness that he lived so long to see the beneficent results of his well-directed benevolence; our regret that we shall no longer have the benefit of his calm and wise counsels in our board; and our belief that a grateful memory will ever be cherished of THOMAS ALLEN in his native town.
> Mr. ALLEN was not content with the gift of this admirable building and frequent pecuniary aid. He always actively interested himself in the interests of this corporation, devoted, as he expressed it in the charter, "to promoting education, culture, and refinement, and diffusing knowledge." He saw with undisguised gratification its rapidly extending influence, which he did all in his power to forward.
> A gift thoughtfully bestowed is always characteristic of the giver. Mr. ALLEN'S natural tendencies were toward scholarship in the highest sense of that term. In all his active, busy life, conducting great enterprises and involved in hazardous business undertakings, he never forgot nor laid aside his love for literature, culture, and art. Therefore, in founding this institution, he gave a true indication of the real and finer qualities of the man.
> It is not for us to speak of his public career. His reputation was national. He bravely conducted his well-spent life. No temptations interrupted its equable course. He proved himself in all respects a worthy descendant of the first minister of Pittsfield, upon whose monument is inscribed, "Fortiter gerit crucem."
> It is now for us to resolve that we will faithfully endeavor to fulfill the high hopes which THOMAS ALLEN had of the future of the Berkshire Atheneum, and to so administer its affairs that his name shall be blessed by good men in all the generations to come.
> Voted that these minutes be entered upon the records.

Mr. ALLEN had two homes, Saint Louis and Pittsfield, both of which he honored and loved, and in both of which he was honored and loved.

The following resolutions were adopted by the board of directors of the Merchants' Exchange:

To the President and Directors of the Merchants' Exchange of Saint Louis, Missouri:

GENTLEMEN: Your committee, appointed to draft resolutions out of respect to the late Hon. THOMAS ALLEN, beg leave to submit the following:

THOMAS ALLEN was a member of the Merchants' Exchange of Saint Louis, so distinguished in many ways that his death has caused a vacancy in our ranks of no ordinary kind. Now that he has gone, we are the more conscious of his extraordinary character.

A model of punctuality in all dealings, sincere and earnest in all he did, thoughtful and considerate in all he said, uniting public spirit with his plans for personal profit, the influence he exerted was at once to his own credit and for the general advancement.

Dignified, yet courteous; cool, yet energetic; intellectual, yet candid; he has left behind him an honored name, more valued than the immense fortune which crowned his career with success.

It was equally his good fortune to accumulate property and command respect. While toiling for himself he did not forget others, and in advancing his own interests he studied to promote the general welfare.

As a projector of public highways, as a liberal contributor to public-spirited enterprises, he faithfully observed his obligations, and attached to himself the life-long friendship of honorable men, who loved him while living and cherish his memory when dead.

In order, therefore, to perpetuate the recollection of his extraordinary virtues and abilities as a member of this exchange,

Be it resolved, That the loss sustained by the nation, the State, and the city in the death of Hon. THOMAS ALLEN is deeply felt and lamented by the members of the Merchants' Exchange.

Resolved, That as a scholar, writer, speaker, legislator, banker, railroad president, capitalist, and business man, the character of THOMAS ALLEN was of exalted purity and excellence.

Resolved, That his social virtues and personal demeanor rendered him an example worthy of imitation.

Resolved, That we mourn his death as an irreparable loss to his family, to the community, and to the members of the exchange.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon our records, and a copy forwarded to his bereaved widow with the sympathy of his fellow-members.

S. H. LAFLIN.
D. P. ROWLAND.
GERARD B. ALLEN.

SAINT LOUIS, April 22, 1882.

In his last illness he said to his pastor, "I would like to live a few years longer. There are some things I would like to do for Missouri."

In the annual town meeting of Pittsfield, held on Monday, April 10, 1882, the following proceedings were had:

All business but voting was suspended until half past two, and then, the meeting being called to order, Hon. J. N. Dunham took the floor, saying that, though in the ordinary business of a town meeting there were matters about which there would be disagreement and difference of opinion, he desired to call attention to a matter in which there would be no disagreement. He would turn aside for a moment from the business of the warrant and review for a short time the past year. From the meeting to-day we miss many distinguished men who have died during the year—men who had taken active part in the proceedings of the town in the past, and by their influence had done much to shape, improve, and preserve the good name of Pittsfield. He then alluded to John C. Parker, Judge Colt, Ensign H. Kellogg, Zeno Russell, Theodore Pomeroy, Solomon L. Russell, and George P. Briggs, and closed with fitting reference to THOMAS ALLEN'S death, and offered the following, which, by a unanimous rising vote, was adopted as an expression of the sentiments of the meeting and ordered inscribed in the records of the town:

"THOMAS ALLEN, a native of Pittsfield, a Representative in the Forty-seventh Congress of the United States from Missouri, his adopted State, died at Washington, District of Columbia, at his post of duty, April 8, 1882, and his remains have to-day been brought to this town for burial, the home of his boyhood and his abiding place when seeking rest or recreation, and it is meet and proper that the citizens of Pittsfield, while assembled this day at its annual town meeting, should, for a moment at least, pause in their proceedings to consider the life and death of one of her most distinguished sons, one who for a lifetime has taken a deep and lively interest in the welfare of the town; one who in time of the war exhibited his patriotism by word and deed, by his liberal contribution to equip the Allen Guard for immediate duty in the field, for his various and varied work and charities while the war lasted; one who by his magnificent and munificent gifts to the town of Pittsfield, by causing to be erected at his expense that enduring monument known as the Berkshire Atheneum, thereby insuring the establishment of a free public library, open to all alike, rich and poor, native and foreign born, an educational institution of itself, its benefits beyond computation. The citizens, yes, the town of Pittsfield will ever remember THOMAS ALLEN with pride and gratitude, and now that he is dead we tender to his afflicted family our hearty sympathy, and desire that this statement may become a part of the records of this town as due not only to the present but future generations."

and Pittsfield portray the true character of Mr. ALLEN and show the friendship and love entertained for him by those who knew him best.

Mr. ALLEN inherited a sound body, full of vitality, a vigorous mind, a clear judgment, a firm will, and a high moral sense—was "well born." So it has been said Mr. ALLEN derived his descent on one side from one of the revolutionary Whigs most noted for his uncompromizing zeal, and on the other, from one of the staunchest American adherents to the British Crown.

Mr. ALLEN was the head of an interesting and intelligent family circle—a wife and seven children—in whose cultured society and companionship he took great delight. He was a faithful and loving husband, a kind and affectionate father.

Mr. ALLEN was a member of the Congregational Church, and a man of faith and of prayer. In his last illness he said, "I know not how it is with other men, but I have been a man of prayer all my life. I have always, before important decisions, sought guidance from God."

His pastor, in the conclusion of the funeral discourse, portrayed the true Christian character of Mr. ALLEN in these words:

He felt the imperative claim of the right. He revolted from the wrong. At the base of his character was this firm rock. Allied to his moral sensitiveness was Mr. ALLEN'S faith in God. He had this not as an inheritance but as a conviction. God was an intelligent person to him, a being from whom direction could be received, to whom service was due. Mr. ALLEN believed in immortality. He may well have believed in it. He could not easily conclude that a force that had been what his personal will and energy had been should suddenly cease. He never supposed it would. In the long sickness which he suffered from, his mind was naturally much engaged with the supreme problems of life and death. He was able to think calmly and protractedly. His thoughts were high. He had, he said, during his last illness, revelations. Yes, revelations, of God, and in many ways. Evidently God was in his thoughts much. So in those weeks, months of pain, of confinement, as he was drawing nearer to God, God drew near to him. And at last he was not, for God had taken him.

Mr. DAWES. The late Representative from the second district of Missouri was a native of Massachusetts. He was born within sight of my own home, and thither a committee of this Congress have recently borne his remains for burial.

I may be permitted, I trust, a few words of tribute to the character and worth of a departed friend and townsman. THOMAS ALLEN was of the sternest revolutionary stock, mingled with the stoutest of loyal blood. His grandfather, the Rev. Thomas Allen, whose name he bore, the first clergyman af Pittsfield, was the soul of the patriot cause in his native town, and weekly from the pulpit stirred the blood of his hearers to face danger and make sacrifices in the struggle for national existence, sharing all they dared or suffered.

News of the British march upon Bennington, forty miles distant, reached him in the pulpit on Sunday. Dismissing his congregation, he called for volunteers on the church green, and, putting himself at their head, hastened to the scene of that memorable battle, where his valor earned for him the name of the "Fighting Parson." On the side of his mother, on the contrary, the grandfather of Mr. ALLEN was one of a little band of loyalists in a neighboring county, equally firm in his convictions, and equally ready to encounter peril or make sacrifices for their maintenance. Fidelity to his king was a part of his religion, harboring no doubt and leaving no stain.

The qualities which make up a man sprung of such stock were sure to be sterling; and all the conditions under which he entered upon life and essayed its work were sure to make of him a robust and aggressive character. The mountains round about the home of his youth were not more firmly fixed in their abiding place than the faith in God and His law which came to him with his first breath; and their sides were not more rugged or hard to climb than the path along which his early footsteps were led. By the fireside and on the mother's knee and in the school-house by the road-side scant in comfort and appointments, was begun that training of faculties in Mr. ALLEN, of a quality and temper sure to develop a force in the world.

He was the fifth of a family of ten children, whom his father was able only by the most rigid economy to support upon the products which a small Berkshire farm reluctantly yielded to unremitting toil. Little beyond the time spent in attendance upon the district school was it in the power of his father to bestow upon him in preparation for his work in life. But this time was so well spent that he found others willing to help him build upon the foundation thus laid, and under the preparatory tuition of Chester Dewey, one of the best of New England teachers, in his native town, and the teaching of the celebrated Dr. Nott, of Union College, he took with the honors of the college the degree of Bachelor of Arts from that institution before he was twenty years of age.

He was admitted to the bar in New York City at twenty-two, and came to Washington in the winter preceding the inauguration of Mr. Van Buren on his way to New Orleans to commence the practice of his profession. He had inherited a taste for politics. Jeffersonism was preached weekly from the pulpit of his grandfather, and Federalism from a neighboring church which had colonized from the mother church for the very purpose of securing political liberty. This natural taste for politics cultivated from his early youth had frequently engaged him in contributions for the press. Even before entering college he was editor of a paper published in the institute at which he was a student, and while pursuing his law studies in New York his political writings and literary criticisms not only contributed to his support but attracted the attention of the leading politicians and men of letters in that city.

Few, if any, men of his years had written so much for the press as had Mr. ALLEN before he came to this city. He was here caught in that excitement and whirl of politics which ushered in and distracted to the end the administration of Mr. Van Buren. He plunged at once into the fight, and forgot New Orleans. Espousing the side of the Conservatives of that day, he sent back to the New York press such sharp criticisms of men and measures, and such able discussions of the issues then just beginning to divide the Democratic party, that he was at once recognized as no mean force in the approaching struggle. In August of that year, a month before the extra session called by Mr. Van Buren, in the midst of a political hurricane, the Madisonian newspaper was established by the Conservatives as a rival of the Globe, and as the organ of that wing of the Democratic party which refused to follow Mr. Van Buren in the new financial policy that ultimately wrecked his administration.

This young man, with no other capital than his brain, and with no weapon but his pen, was called to the editorship and management of that paper, and compelled to meet in political controversy and conflict the Globe, then edited by the elder Blair, the ablest political editor of his time, and the National Intelligencer, under the management of those veterans of the press, Gales and Seaton.

At the opening of Congress Mr. ALLEN, then only twenty-three years of age, was elected by the House of Representatives Public Printer, and two years later he was elected to the same office by the Senate, each branch of Congress at that time choosing its own printer.

The office was one of great political power and influence. The disbursements and responsibilities of Public Printer in those days were very great, and few came out of the office unstained. Mr. ALLEN was one of the few. Our history furnishes no parallel to this bestowal by the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States successively of such power and responsibility upon one so young. Here he remained doing extraordinary work with extraordinary success for nine years. With a spotless name and a fame already established, at thirty-two he left Washington for Saint Louis, then in its infancy, to commence the permanent work of his life amid the grand possibilities just opening up on the other side of the Mississippi.

His life thus far had been one of preparation and training. It was a New England product, rounded out somewhat by unusual culture and contact in a broader field, but nevertheless essentially the tough fiber, the stiff will, and the quick wit, elements of New England character. He was clear of sight, persistent in purpose, and firm in faith. He believed that a dividing line separated right from wrong in all the affairs of men, and that the right ever and everywhere was better than the wrong. As light was given to discern that line, it was followed wherever it led. Many things distorted the vision, but nothing ever confounded the distinction or tempted him to barter the one for the other. New England does not furnish field or scope enough for the trained faculties and widening vision of all her children, and she parts with them to grapple with the greater opportunities and grander conditions of Western life. She has thus made large contributions from her wealth of intellectual and will force to the tide which has flown in through the wide gates of opportunity and promise the West has opened to healthy adventure and intelligent enterprise. She has not repined at her consequent impoverishment, nor envied the younger and more ardent of her sisters the rich endowment brought to them by this espousal of the vigor and burning zeal of the best of her sons.

Mr. ALLEN was among the most amply equipped and best trained of that army of young men who have, for the last forty years, in one unbroken column, marched out from New England homes and institutions and pitched their tents, and, unfolding banners woven at home, have planted under their folds great States, builded noble institutions, and developed wealth and power not possible to those who remain behind. Saint Louis was henceforth to be his permanent home, and the State of his adoption was thereafter to command his powers and to stimulate and reward his ambition. Missouri was forty years ago more like a sleeping giant than the great and powerful empire into which she has since developed, richest among the rich in all mineral wealth, strongest among the strong in the heart and nerve and confidence of more than two million people, with a commerce of national importance and a railroad system of continental limitations.

How large a part the far-reaching sagacity and the broad and catholic comprehension of opportunities and possibilities which Mr. ALLEN brought to that State at a most fortunate time in the tide of its material growth and development have borne in arousing this giant from its slumbers and arraying it in the panoply of its own power and glory, I leave to the justly appreciative and more appropriate utterances of its own representatives to estimate.

We of the older States have wondered at and admired the marvelous rapidity with which this great State has marched to the commanding position to which its wealth of resources summons it, and we of Massachusetts are proud of the agency one of her sons has had in the grand result. Next to the founders of States the greatest characters in history are those who build the institutions, awaken the agencies, and guide the forces which make States great, powerful, and imperishable. Such a place in history will those who write of Missouri assign to Mr. ALLEN.

But, Mr. President, I turn from this too attractive page in his career back to the place of his birth and the home of his fathers. How his love for it increased with his years! How, in the midst of his prosperity and affluence, his heart and hand opened with generous appreciation of its welfare! Early in that career of remarkable prosperity, which was continued to the end of his life, he repurchased from strangers the place of his birth and the home of his fathers, and erected there an elegant and enduring mansion of stone, which was his summer home for thirty years. How fitting that his remains, now that his work here is finished, should be borne by Missourians back to this resting place, toward which his thoughts and heart ever turned, and be deposited by them beneath the roof erected by him over the spot where he was born!

He was in all respects a true Missourian, and was thoroughly identified with the interests of the State with whose fortunes he had cast his lot for life. But this did not abate one jot or tittle of his love for the home of his nativity. All its best interests were near his heart, and he was ever ready to promote its highest welfare. He erected close by the place of his birth an elegant and costly edifice of exquisite taste in architecture and design, and donated it to his native town for a library, free to all its people, and a museum for the preservation for coming generations of works of art and historical interest—optima seculorum in secula servare—an enduring monument to the true nobility of his nature, and to the clear-sighted comprehension of lasting results, which guided him in all his acts of beneficent generosity as well as in all his business undertakings.

Missouri was one of the border States during the war of the rebellion, and suffered terribly from the conflict and dissensions which divided its people, and arrayed communities, neighborhoods, and households in bitter feuds and bloody warfare. At the outset and throughout the struggle Mr. ALLEN was a Union man to the core, firm in his faith, and unyielding in his patriotism. His large influence, his zeal, and his fervent voice contributed much to turn the doubtful scale on the side of the Union and to keep his State true to the flag and the Constitution. His contributions of money and personal effort and sacrifice were not confined to Missouri, incalculable as were their value in determining the ultimate status of that State in the conflict. They were also influential in his native State. A military company of Pittsfield, organized before the war under his auspices and bearing his name, marched out of town at the first call, meeting its absent commander on the way, and, taking its colors from Mr. ALLEN'S own hand as it passed through New York, entered Washington among the first of the troops that reached the capital.

The recruiting service, the Army in the field, and the hospital commanded his influence, his mind, and his means till peace was restored. And in the solution of the many difficult and complicated problems which at the close of the war confronted the statesman and distressed the patriot, his influence and counsel were ever bent to such an adjustment of discordant elements that peace born of the eternal and unchangeable principles of justice and right might come to stay, and with healing in its wings rehabilitate the Republic. He lived long enough to see his adopted State yield to such counsel and to early enter upon the enjoyment of the beneficent results which are the compensatory glory of the terrible struggle through which, as through fire, this people has been led.

Mr. Allen lived and died a Democrat, and the love of politics, of which he had a taste in early life, never abated amid the absorbing demands of vast and varied business relations, that engrossed his mind and taxed his strength through the larger part of his life.

He occasionally held offices of distinction and responsibility in Missouri, was more than once a State senator, and at different times was brought before the people for their suffrages as Representative in Congress; but the claims of large business enterprises, reaching out into other States and ever growing upon his hands, still unfinished, were long too strong to be disregarded and too important to be neglected. It was only recently that he was able to relieve himself from their burdens and exactions and to seek in the relaxations of leisure and the delights of foreign travel renewed health and vigor. The electors of the second Congressional district of his State immediately called him into their service, and he was elected by a large majority, in November, 1880, to the Forty-seventh Congress. He spent the interval between his election and the assembling of Congress, in December, 1881, in seeking to regain his shattered health by rest and foreign travel. It was a vain search.

The draft upon his strength had been continued too long for recovery, and all effort to regain ground lost proved unavailing. He returned from an extensive tour in Northern Europe in November last only to realize that his work was over. The fatal disease had already so far advanced that he was unable to reach Missouri and again meet his constituents. He turned with longing to his Massachusetts home, and came to it for the last time, feeling with the poet—

> Where'er I roam, whatever realms to see,
> My heart, untraveled, fondly turns to thee.

He came to Washington and took his seat on the first day of the session, all too weak for the effort, but was unable to appear in the House more than once or twice afterward. The fatal result became early apparent to him, and he awaited it long, upon a bed of great pain and anguish, with patience and calmness. It was a disappointment to him not to be permitted to discharge the public trust which had been committed to him. Among his last words were: "I would like to live a few years longer. There are some things I would like to do for Missouri." But it was ordered otherwise. He was bidden to lay off the harness, and he obeyed the command in the inspiring faith that it was but a summons to a higher life and a nobler work. This command came to him on the morning of the 8th of April last.

Thus ended a life which, by whatever standard man may measure it, fell little short of life's great end. It was a busy life, leaving no known duty undischarged, no known wrong unrighted; full of amenities and sympathies, hopes and aspirations. It encountered all life's antagonisms and conflicts with wisdom and courage, meeting all its responsibilities and shrinking from none of its burdens. He lived ever true to the motto handed down to him by his fathers, Fortiter gerit crucem, and died in the Christian's faith that beyond this life there awaited him an immortal crown.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I have been informed by some of the friends in this body of Mr. ALLEN, the deceased, that it would be agreeable to them for me to submit some remarks on this occasion. If the condition of my health had permitted I should have availed myself, with great pleasure, of this opportunity to attempt to pay a just and appropriate tribute to the memory of the deceased, whose death we all mourn as a public calamity. But such is the condition of my throat that I must not at present attempt to speak at any length on any subject. Before I take my seat, however, I feel it my duty to remark that I had a very pleasant acquaintance with Mr. ALLEN for a number of years, mostly as a railroad man, in connection with important railroad interests. He spent much of the more active portion of his life as such manager on a large scale, conducting some of the most important and extensive enterprises of the country. And I take great pleasure in testifying that in the line of his profession he had few equals. His business tact, quick perception, keen penetration, and executive capacity were remarkable.

Mr. ALLEN was always courteous, kind, and considerate of the feelings and wishes of others. In social life he was a general favorite. He leaves a most interesting family to mourn their irreparable loss; but he leaves them the rich legacy of an irreproachable character, and the bright example of his useful life as a safe guide for their future conduct. But, Mr. President, I must leave it to others more able and eloquent, who are in better condition, to do full justice to the life, services, and memory of the distinguished dead.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, New England has sent many of her sons to wealth and honor in the West, but her energy, courage, steadfastness of purpose, and intellect have never been more fully illustrated than in the life and characteristics of THOMAS ALLEN. The story of his life is peculiarly American, and marked with all the salient points of our pushing, aggressive civilization.

When nineteen years old, young ALLEN left his home at Pittsfield, Massachusetts, with $25 as his patrimony, a sound constitution, an honest name, and a collegiate education, to enter the arena where so many fall wounded and vanquished and so few are crowned with the laurel wreath. Not for an instant was there any question of his success, for, besides health, talent, and education, the young adventurer had those priceless jewels, self-control and systematic labor.

For three years Mr. ALLEN read law in the city of New York, but soon became engaged in journalism, for which pursuit he had decided taste and talent. In 1837 he established in this city a paper known as the Madisonian, and while engaged in its publication was elected Printer of the House of Representatives and then of the Senate. In 1842 he removed to Saint Louis, and there entered upon the eventful career which has bound up his history for all time with that of the State to whose welfare and greatness he contributed so much. His broad, comprehensive, active mind seized at once the necessities of the vast region west of the Mississippi, then just beginning to pulsate with a new life, and he devoted himself to railway transportation. In 1850 he became president of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, now extending across the entire State from east to west, and brought the first locomotive to the western shore of the great river. In the same year Mr. ALLEN was elected to the State senate, and there he originated and organized the system of railways now reaching every portion of Missouri. Subsequently he built the Saint Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern Railroad from Saint Louis to Texarkana, binding together the two great empires of Missouri and Texas.

Mr. ALLEN was elected to the Forty-seventh Congress from the second district of Missouri, but his physical condition prevented his active participation in the public business.

Such is the brief résumé of a singularly active and useful life devoted to the best interests of men and not to self-indulgence. Of such lives it has been well said:

> The seeds of good they sow are sacred seeds,
> And bear their righteous fruits for general weal,
> When sleeps the husbandman.

Essentially a man of business, and the possessor of large wealth, Mr. ALLEN never hoarded money, or regarded it but as the instrument for great and beneficent purposes. His personal habits were simple, almost to austerity, while to public objects and enterprises he gave with princely liberality. Nor did the pursuit of wealth or his practical life harden his nature, or cause him to forget his Alma Mater and the classic tastes of his youth. He was the first president of the University Club of Saint Louis, whose membership embraces the literary culture of that city, and he was annually re-elected, filling the position at the time of his death.

Of education, whose magic wand can alone exorcise

These twin gaolers of the human heart,
Low birth and iron fortune,

he was the earnest advocate. To literature, science, and the arts, advance and improvement in all that elevates mankind, his time and fortune were freely given.

And so, another earnest, active intellect is stilled, another toiling life is ended. Helpless, we stand at its close, and with feeble, imperfect words attempt to tell the story of the years of labor, ambition, success, misfortune, joy, and sorrow which checkered this long and eventful career. All that we know certainly is that it has ended, and that our friend has at last laid down his burden. For the rest, faith and hope!

The Hindoo maiden, whose lover or relative has gone upon a long or dangerous journey, as the shades of evening fall, places upon the bosom of the Ganges an earthen vessel, wreathed with flowers, containing a lighted taper, and watches its progress down the stream, believing that its fate is typical of that of the absent loved one. For many long and sad months those who loved him watched the feeble light of the life now ended, as it floated away upon the river of Time. It can be seen by mortal eyes no longer. But may we not hope that upon the great ocean of eternity it has burst into noontide splendor!

Missouri thus reverently closes the last page of the life's history of her beloved son, her honored Representative, her most illustrious citizen.

I move the adoption of the resolutions.

The resolutions were adopted unanimously; and (at five o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 23, 1882.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

DEBATE ON REVENUE-TAX BILL.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire a brief indulgence from the House to arrange if possible the time for closing general debate on the bill now under consideration. I have no desire to restrict the debate, but there are funeral ceremonies fixed, I think, at three o'clock to-day, or is it two o'clock?

The SPEAKER. Three o'clock is the hour fixed.

Mr. DIBRELL. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he is not willing to let us have the Private Calendar to-day? We have not had it now for two months.

Mr. KELLEY. I hope this bill, which is a very important public measure, will be proceeded with to a conclusion; and I was about to suggest to the House that by consent general debate be closed at two o'clock.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, and Mr. DIBRELL objected.

Mr. RANDALL. Say three o'clock.

Mr. KELLEY. The funeral ceremonies set for to-day begin at three o'clock.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the general debate run until three o'clock, when by consent it is to be closed. That gives us up to the funeral ceremonies, and we can commence to-morrow morning to read the bill by sections under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. That ought to be satisfactory.

Mr. KELLEY. I have no desire to restrict the debate.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Why is it necessary to fix a limit to the debate?

Mr. RANDALL. Because we don't want to stay here till August.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to fixing the time for closing the general debate at three o'clock to-day?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EVINS. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 1014) for the erection of a public building at Greenville, South Carolina, and ask that the same be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think we had better have the regular order.

Mr. RICH. I shall object to the consideration of that bill at this time.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the morning hour for the call of committees.

Mr. KELLEY. I move to dispense with the regular order of business in order to proceed with the revenue bill.

Mr. STEPHENS. Before that motion is submitted I wish to make a personal request to the House, and it is to take up the bill (H. R. No. 4180) for the erection of a public building for Federal uses in the city of Augusta, Georgia. I have not been able to attend the House for six weeks, and this is an important bill, and I therefore ask unanimous consent to take it up and let me have a moment upon it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is in the nature of an objection, and will prevent the consideration of the bill suggested by the gentleman from Georgia.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. WARNER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled joint resolutions and bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 229) authorizing the Secretary of War to turn over to the governor of Minnesota such tents, poles, and pins as he may require for the use of the militia and volunteer organizations of the State at their summer and fall encampment;

A bill (H. R. No. 4710) to vacate a certain part of Rock street, in Georgetown, in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 713) granting to the Springfield Street-Railway Company the right to lay tracks in Mill street, in Springfield, Massachusetts; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6014) to admit free of duty articles intended for the exhibition of art and industry to be held at Boston, Massachusetts, during the year 1883.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 176) authorizing the Secretary of War to erect at Washington's headquarters, in the city of Newburgh, New York, a memorial column, and to aid in defraying the expenses of the centennial celebration to be held at that city in the year 1883.

PUBLIC BUILDING, UTAH TERRITORY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a memorial from the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah, in relation to the construction of a public building for the Legislature and district courts and for post-offices and land offices, &c., in said Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

UTAH AS A STATE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a memorial from the delegate convention of the Territory of Utah, asking Congress to admit the Territory of Utah into the Union as a State; which memorial was accompanied by a draft of a constitution said to have been approved by the citizens of that Territory.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed.

VIRGINIA MILITARY LANDS, OHIO.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ROBINSON] asks leave to offer at this time certain documents relating to Virginia military lands in the State of Ohio, with the request that they be printed and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, a bill relating to the subject being now before that committee.

Mr. TAYLOR. That bill, Mr. Speaker, has been already reported to the House.

The SPEAKER. The subject is before the committee, however. Without objection the reference will be made accordingly.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I do not desire to object, Mr. Speaker, but in such matters where the committee have reported, should not these papers be laid upon the table for the benefit of the House?

The SPEAKER. The House will have the same benefit. This will be printed as an executive document.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I merely suggested it as a matter of practice; not with a view to objecting.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. KING for two days.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. URNER] asks unanimous consent to withdraw from the files of the House the bill and papers relative to the claim of R. T. Bryan. Without objection the request will be granted.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I think that the withdrawal of the original papers in such cases ought not to be allowed unless the request is accompanied by a statement that there has been no adverse report.

The SPEAKER. Under the standing rule of the House these papers may be withdrawn by the consent of the House where a certified copy is left in the office of the Clerk.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the original papers ought not to be withdrawn if there has been an adverse report. Now, as I understand the rule, it only requires copies to be left. The original papers may come back at some future time for the action of the House, while the fact of the adverse report originally made will be lost sight of. I am satisfied that these papers belong to the files of the House and ought not to be taken away in this manner.

Mr. RANDALL. The papers belong to the claimant.

The SPEAKER. The standing rules of the House permit this to be done. It may be that the rule is not right, but the Chair is not responsible.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is not allowed to be done when there has been an adverse report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the rule to be read, as this is a matter of some importance.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE XXXVIII.

PAPERS.

1. The clerks of the several committees of the House shall, within three days after the final adjournment of a Congress, deliver to the Clerk of the House all bills, joint resolutions, petitions, and other papers referred to the committee, together with all evidence taken by such committee under the order of the House during the said Congress, and not reported to the House; and in the event of the failure or neglect of any clerk of a committee to comply with this rule, the Clerk of the House shall, within three days thereafter, take into his keeping all such papers and testimony.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Does the Speaker rule that under the rule which has just been read papers may be withdrawn without the leave of the House, provided parties will leave copies?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not so rule.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I understood the Chair to ask unanimous consent for the withdrawal of those papers, and that on the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] objecting the Chair ruled that his objection was out of order because of that rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not rule an objection was out of order. The Chair understood the gentleman from Indiana to suggest that another course be taken. In this case the Chair will state it is informed there has been no adverse report.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection in this case.

Mr. RANDALL. The ground of that rule was that the original papers where a person was to be benefited by the granting of the claim to which the papers relate were in fact the property of the claimant, and that we could go no further than to demand for the information of future Congresses that he should leave copies. That, as I understand, is the ground of the rule. I differ from my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] in this particular, that I believe that papers sent to Congress are the property of those who send them after Congress shall have concluded its review of them. Only a tribunal of last resort has the right to keep possession of original papers.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think they are a portion of the records of the House. Where there has been no action they can be properly withdrawn, but where there has been action, and especially adverse action, I think they should not be withdrawn.

Mr. RANDALL. Where there has been adverse action it is proper that copies shall be left so that the information shall be within the reach of Congress and future Congresses as to what character of papers were before the House at the time the reports were made thereon.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not mean to intimate the House could not refuse any application of this kind if it saw proper. But in this case the Chair understands there is no adverse report, and no objection is made to the withdrawal of the papers.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. No. 4167) to enable national banking associations to extend their corporate existence.

ALEXANDER JUDICE.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report on the private land claim of Alexander Judice, number 2 of class 1; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

DECISIONS OF FIRST COMPTROLLER OF THE TREASURY.

The SPEAKER. The Chair also lays before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting decisions of the First Comptroller of the Treasury for 1881 and 1882. In this case the Chair is requested to ask that the accompanying papers be printed. If there be no objection such order will be made.

There being no objection, the communication was laid on the table, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to be printed.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. MURCH. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MURCH. The Portland Advertiser, a Republican paper published in Portland, Maine, and by the way a very fair Republican paper, publishes a letter from the Comptroller of the Currency, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MR. MURCH'S MISTAKE—A LETTER FROM COMPTROLLER KNOX.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY,
Washington, May 18, 1882.

SIR: In your speech in the House of Representatives, as reported on page 24 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 18th instant, you say:

"For ten years the plates, printing, ink, paper, and labor required to prepare and furnish the national-bank notes were paid for by the Government. The notes were given to the banks without cost. We are not able to state these expenses accurately. The Comptroller of the Currency is particular to furnish the public no data from which the sum could be stated. This has been studiously kept from the public. * * * We have no doubt that all these expenses incurred by the Treasury in furnishing national-bank notes were $1,000,000 each year."

The Comptroller of the Currency has annually furnished to Congress the information to which you refer, as he is required to do by the last paragraph of section 333 of the Revised Statutes, which provides that he shall make an annual report to Congress, exhibiting among other things "the whole amount of the expenses of the banking department during the year."

By reference to page 64 of his report for 1880 and to page 72 of his report for 1881 you will find that the Comptroller not only gives the expenses of his office for the fiscal year, as required by law, but also the total expenses of his office from its organization to June 30, 1881, including salaries, special dies, plates, printing, paper, &c.

You will also find on page 56 of the report for 1876, page 31 of the report for 1877, page 43 of the report for 1878, and page 47 of the report for 1879, a statement showing the total amount of expenses of this office from its organization to the end of each fiscal year.

By reference to the report for 1881 it will be seen that the total expenses from the organization of the system on February 25, 1863, to June 30, 1881, more than eighteen years, were $5,148,649.01, while the estimate as given in your speech would be $10,000,000 for the first ten years that it has been in operation.

Very respectfully,

JNO. J. KNOX, Comptroller.

Hon. T. H. MURCH, House of Representatives.

Mr. MURCH. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to have the Clerk read from the last annual report of the Comptroller of the Currency what I send to the desk.

Mr. CAMP. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CAMP. The article just read by the Clerk does not contain any charge against a member of this House. It is not an article containing such matter as to justify a member making it a question of personal privilege.

Mr. MURCH. The statement is untrue, and I think I have a right to defend myself.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think this makes a question of personal privilege. The gentleman may be entitled to make any explanation in the form of debate; but the Chair does not think the time of the House can be taken up under the rules with a matter of this kind under the form of a question of personal privilege.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman only desires, as I understand, a very few minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is quite willing to hear the gentleman from Maine if objection is not made; but the Chair must state it is not a question of personal privilege.

Mr. ERRETT. I object.

Mr. MURCH. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The getleman will state it.

Mr. MURCH. I want to know if a chief of a bureau of the Treasury Department can impeach my statements, laying me under a lie, and publish that all over in the papers of the State of Maine, and that I shall be permitted no opportunity to reply? I propose to show that I stated the truth in the statement I made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that to enter into a question of that character presents a question of privilege or that it is a matter on which the gentleman can occupy the time of the House in the way of explanation if objection be made.

Mr. MURCH. I do not want more than a minute.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asked unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to make an explanation, but objection was made.

Mr. REED. The gentleman can address a letter to the Comptroller of the Currency and publish it in the papers.

Mr. MURCH. Then I will ask leave to print in the RECORD my reply to that communication.

There was no objection. [See Appendix.]

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I desire to ask if any action has been taken by the Committee on Ways and Means looking to the introduction of a resolution providing for the final adjournment of Congress?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not aware.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I desire to give notice that unless some action is taken soon on that subject I shall myself introduce a resolution relating to it. I observe the Senate is discussing the propriety of an adjournment of several days with a view to putting down matting, which looks as if they anticipated that the session would continue for a considerable time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to state anything about the action of a committee not reported to the House.

Mr. KELLEY. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] that the report he speaks of will, I have no doubt, be presented to the House after the next meeting of the committee.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will present it.

DUTIES ON SUGAR.

Mr. KASSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to report back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 2222) to amend section 2983 of the Revised Statutes so that the duties paid upon sugars shall be assessed upon the quantity delivered from instead of the quantity entered into bonded warehouses; and to move that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KELLEY. I move that private business for to-day be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

Mr. KELLEY. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. CAMP in the chair.

REDUCTION OF INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of further considering the bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation.

Mr. ARMFIELD. I desire to submit at this time to be printed in the RECORD an amendment which I propose to offer to this bill.

There was no objection.

The amendment is to add to the bill the following section:

SEC. 5. Hereafter when any whisky, brandy, or tobacco shall be seized for violation of the internal-revenue laws of the United States, and the same shall be confiscated for such violation, it shall be sold by public auction to the highest bidder, for a sum not less than the tax due thereon, and no tax on said whisky, brandy, or tobacco shall be charged against or collected from the owner of the same; and where any whisky, brandy, or tobacco has heretofore been seized for violation of the internal-revenue laws of the United States and confiscated for said violation, if the same has been sold, or shall hereafter be sold for an amount as great as the tax due thereon, no tax on the same shall be charged against or collected from the owner of said whisky, brandy, or tobacco.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HASELTINE] is entitled to the floor to complete his remarks begun on yesterday.

Mr. HASELTINE. How much time have I remaining of my hour?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has fifty minutes remaining.

Mr. STEPHENS. I ask the gentleman from Missouri to yield to me for three or four minutes that I may briefly express my views upon this bill.

Mr. HASELTINE. I will yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] for three or four minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Chairman, I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Missouri for yielding to me a few minutes of his time to enable me to give my views very briefly on this bill.

I am in favor of the bill, and I shall vote for it as it stands, if I cannot get some amendments to it adopted which I would like to have incorporated in it. But, in my opinion, the bill as it now stands is right as far as it goes. But it does not go so far as I would wish to have it go, by a great deal.

I think we ought to abolish the internal-revenue system of taxation entirely. I would extirpate it root and branch. Allow me to say to both sides of the House that except in time of war these internal-revenue taxes, excise and stamp duties are in my judgment in principle anti-republican, anti-democratic and anti-American. They are in opposition to the general principles or policy of this Government as taught by the fathers of the Republic.

The best way to raise revenue is by duties on imports. They bear less heavily on the tax-payers, and as legislators that is what we should look to. In levying duties on imports you can at the same time make foreign producers pay for the use of your markets, and in that way incidentally and properly give aid and protection to American industry. It is not true, as a general proposition, that the consumer pays all the duty imposed upon commodities brought from other countries. This is a question that I cannot now argue. In most instances where the duties are judiciously laid they are borne partly by the importer and partly by the consumer.

To allow Congress thus to raise revenue by duties upon imports was one of the main objects in establishing the Federal Constitution of 1787. This system of internal-revenue taxation by excise and stamp duties was not favored by the fathers of the Republic in times of peace. I speak plainly, and say that it was looked upon then as not only of British origin but there was always the odium of British Toryism attached to it in the American mind. There was never any legislation more abhorrent to the people of this country, even in their colonial condition, than what was known as the infamous stamp act.

In time of war, when foreign trade is interrupted, this country has been compelled to resort to this method of raising revenue. It was thus resorted to in the Revolutionary war by the States. In the war of 1812, after the adoption of the present Constitution, it was again resorted to of necessity. But it was not adhered to one moment longer than the necessity existed. The system was adopted in the administration of the elder Adams, when war was expected with France; but nothing tended more to excite popular opposition to his administration than this system of taxation, except the alien and sedition acts. One of the first acts of Mr. Jefferson's administration was to wipe them from the statute book. The present system was adopted during the late lamentable war between the States. We do not now require its continuance. Tariff duties, if properly laid, will yield us an abundant revenue. These internal taxes bear much more oppressively upon the people than do import duties. I would take off the tax not only on matches, and the tax on bank-checks, and all else that is embraced in this bill, but I would if I could, as I have stated, repeal the whole system. I would abolish entirely the onerous and unjust tax on tobacco, on whisky, and on distilled and refined spirits. These are taxes which come upon the laboring masses. I would let the burdens of our Government fall elsewhere than upon the labor of the country.

Mr. WILSON. I would ask the honorable gentleman if he would take off the tax now levied on national-bank capital?

Mr. STEPHENS. I certainly would. I would take it off national-bank capital, national-bank deposits, and everything on which it is now levied. I would repeal and abrogate the entire system. This is my view; but as I know I cannot get all I wish, I will take what I can get. A half a loaf is better than no bread. I hope, by amendments, we will be able to get a reduction on the present tax on tobacco, on whisky, and other distilled spirits; because I cannot get all the relief for the people I want, I would not refuse to take as much as I can get. I will remove the existing burdens upon the people one by one until I get them all removed, if possible.

I suppose, Mr. Chairman, that the time which was yielded to me so kindly by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HASELTINE] has about expired. I will simply repeat, to be distinctly understood, for the benefit of those who may not have heard me, that I am for this bill, as far as it goes, out and out. I am in favor of amendments looking to the ultimate abolition of the entire internal-revenue system and all the stamp duties. I believe it is wrong in principle and oppressive in practice.

I thank the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HASELTINE] for his courtesy in thus permitting me briefly to state my position upon this bill under consideration.

Mr. HASELTINE. Mr. Chairman, I will now proceed to answer the personal charges of my colleague from Missouri, [Mr. BLAND.] But first I will more definitely answer the gentleman's question, "Was the Rice amendment to the bank bill a promise to pay or not?" I ask my colleague is 12 cents fiat on each standard silver dollar a promise to pay or not? Is the $12,000,000 fiat on the 100,000,000 standard silver dollars coined a promise to pay or not?

Is the $4,300,000 fiat on $5,000,000 of five-cent pieces a promise to pay or not? Was the $50,000,000 of fractional paper currency a promise to pay or not? The gentleman will understand me to answer him distinctly in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. That promise to pay, or intrinsic value, has nothing to do with the money of the great American Republic.

The Supreme Court in 1870 spoke as follows:

Legal-tender Treasury notes have become the universal measure of values.

That—

Making the notes legal tenders gave them a new use, and it needs no argument to show that the value of things is in proportion to the uses to which they may be applied.

That—

Whatever power there is over the currency is vested in Congress. * * * If the power to declare what is money is not in Congress it is annihilated. * * * The Constitution does not ordain what metals may be coined, or prescribe that the legal value of the metals when coined shall correspond at all with their intrinsic value in the market. * * * Nor does it even affirm that Congress may declare anything to be legal tender for the payment of debts. * * * It is hardly correct to speak of a standard of value. * * * The Constitution does not speak of it. * * * It contemplates that which has gravity or extension; but value is an ideal thing. * * * The coinage acts fix its unit as a dollar; but the gold or silver thing we call a dollar is in no sense a standard of a dollar. It is a representative of it. * * * These cases have been heard before a full court, and they have received our most careful consideration.

I would further call the attention of the gentleman to the language of President Grant in his message of 1873, declaring that the greenback was "the best money ever devised." This was before the resumption law and when there was no pretension of any specie basis. I desire also to ask the attention of the gentleman to the language of the honorable Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] in his speech three days ago. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] asked him the following question:

I should like to ask the Senator if there was need of $500,000,000 more of greenback currency, does he believe as a lawyer that there is authority under the Constitution to issue it?

To this question Mr. VEST replied:

I will answer for myself as cheerfully as I would answer at the last day to the last tribunal, yes; a thousand times yes. I say the power exists. That is my own individual opinion, and I am responsible for it alone. The Government has the right. If I ever had any doubt about it I have been taught differently by the Republican party. I have been taught it by a court made for the purpose, after it had decided one way, to take back the decision and teach the people of the country that the power did exist. We are now asked here tauntingly if it does exist. You have taught us the invention and device, and we propose to use it.

I would ask my colleague from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] whether he has made progress equal to that of the Democratic Senator from Missouri? If he has not yet reached this point, there is room for growth.

Mr. BLAND. Do you want me to answer now?

Mr. HASELTINE. When I get through you will have an opportunity. I can consent to no interruption. I would have been very glad if the remarks of my colleague made yesterday were published in the RECORD this morning that I might have the benefit of them in making this reply; but as they do not appear to-day I cannot fully criticise them as I would wish to do.

Mr. VEST further says:

I say the greenback circulation saved my country in the West. If it had not been for the greenback money Missouri to-day would be bankrupt and ruined. It was a blessing untold in its effects. Not your national banking system, but the greenbacks of the country that you were striking down and murdering by your legislation brought the Democratic party into power and stopped you by the force and power of the popular verdict given at the polls. Still you make war upon the greenback. In your heart you desire to strike them down and to make the sole basis of the country gold and the representative of gold the national-bank circulation. That is the whole of it.

Mr. VEST concedes the power to issue the greenback, yet he would limit the currency of civilization to the accidental discovery of the metals. He concedes the power to liberate the people, yet he would enslave them.

I also call the attention of the gentleman to the platform of the national Democratic party adopted in 1840, which declares—

That Congress has no power to charter a national bank; that we believe such an institution one of deadly hostility to the best interests of the country, dangerous to our republican institutions and the liberties of the people, and calculated to place the business of the country within the control of a concentrated money power, and above the laws and the will of the people.

This appears to have been the doctrine of the national Democratic party down to 1868, when it makes use of this language:

The payment of the public debt of the United States as rapidly as practicable. * * * Where the obligations of the Government do not expressly state upon their face, or the law under which they were issued does not provide that they shall be paid in coin, they ought in right and justice to be paid in the lawful money of the United States.

This was the declaration of the Democratic party in 1868; but in 1880 the national Democratic platform was—

Honest money consisting of gold and silver and paper convertible into coin on demand.

Now, I call the attention of the gentleman to the platform of the Democracy of the State of Missouri in 1878. The language is this:

We regard the national-banking system as being oppressive and burdensome, and demand the abolition and retirement from circulation of national-bank notes and the issue of legal-tender notes in lieu thereof, and in quantities from time to time sufficient to supply the wholesome and necessary business demands of the entire country; and that all greenbacks so issued shall be used in the purchase and retirement of the bonds of the United States, so that the interest-bearing debt of the country may be lessened to the extent of the greenbacks thus put in circulation.

In accordance with this platform adopted in the State of Missouri in 1878, my colleague [Mr. RICE] offered an amendment to the bank bill, which was perfectly in accord with the platform upon which the gentleman [Mr. BLAND] was elected four years ago. The similarity between the amendment and that platform of 1878 is so close that I hardly think any gentleman will be able to make a distinction. The amendment is this:

SEC. 11. That from and after the passage of this act all redemptions of national-bank notes shall be made by a new issue of legal-tender Treasury notes, to be issued by the Secretary of the Treasury as redemption notes, and such issue shall be in excess of the Treasury notes now in circulation and in amount equal to the national-bank circulation.

And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to prepare at the earliest practical period such amount of legal-tender Treasury notes as may, from time to time, be necessary for the redemption of all national-bank notes, as they may be presented for redemption or payment. All redemption of national-bank notes, whether made by the banks or by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be made in such legal-tender Treasury notes, and in no other lawful money or coin.

The Treasury notes authorized by this section shall be a legal-tender for all debts, public and private, and in practicable denominations of one dollar and upward.

Yet upon the question of adoption of this amendment my Democratic colleagues from the State of Missouri were about equally divided—some voting with the bankers against the amendment, in open violation of the platform adopted by that party in Missouri in 1878, and in opposition to their own principles as declared by their own national convention of 1868.

Mr. BLAND. Is there anything in that to warrant this statement?

Mr. HASELTINE. Please be seated; I permit no interruption.

Mr. BLAND. Then do not ask any question.

Mr. HASELTINE. I will permit no interruptions from the gentleman. Now I call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri more particularly to special charges, and I send this certificate to the Clerk's desk to be read as a part of my remarks upon this subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

COMMITTEE ON PRINTING, UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., January 10, 1882.

DEAR SIR: As you were not here at the extra session of the Senate—as was the case with nearly every Representative—I only gave in the Directory then published your name, post-office address, and the vote at your election, taken from the almanac. This classed you as a "Greenback Republican." This session you sent me the statistics of your life, in which you described yourself as a "National Greenback Labor candidate." But the clerk who inserted the statistics into the "copy" for the Directory did not change the portion concerning the election, already in type.

This omission makes you appear as of different politics from what you stated yourself to be.

I regret this mistake, and I will see that it does not occur in the forthcoming editions of the Directory.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

BEN: PERLEY POORE.

Hon. IRA S. HASELTINE.

Mr. HASELTINE. I hope that statement from the clerk of the Committee on Printing Records, who had charge of compiling the Directory made in January last, will answer the unfair criticisms and assaults of the Democratic papers of the State of Missouri. Democratic editors charged that I had paired with Mr. BLAND as evidence that I was a Republican. Mr. BLAND signed a written statement at my request to correct the Democratic papers upon that matter. I have never paired with either Democrat or Republican, but have been present to answer to my name on almost every roll-call. Now the Democratic papers of Missouri charge our Greenbackers with having voted for the rechartering of the national banks. Will my colleague from Missouri, [Mr. BLAND,] who lost sight of the subject under discussion and blundered onto an old stump speech, please be true to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and tell the Democratic editors of Missouri that the Greenbackers voted solid for the Rice amendment and against the bank bill? Tell them that only 34 out of 133 Democrats voted for the legal-tender Treasury notes instead of national-bank notes. Tell them that 99 Democrats out of 133 either voted with the bankers or dodged on the Rice legal-tender amendment. Tell them that the leading Democrats upon this floor made more speeches for the national banks than the Republicans. Tell them that the bankers could not have had several days' time of this House for special legislation without speeches and votes of the leading Democrats. Tell them that on the final passage of the bill 21 Democrats voted for it; that there were only 67 votes against it; take the solid Greenback vote and 2 Republicans from the 67, and you have only 57 Democrats who voted against rechartering national banks. Then read your national Democratic platforms of 1840 to 1863, and your State platform of 1878 in the State of Missouri. Who has been true to that Democratic platform of 1878 upon this floor? Who has been true to Franklin, Jefferson, Madison, and Jackson Democracy? What fraction of the Democrats have been true to that platform of principles? About one-fourth voted for the Rice amendment, which is precisely in accordance with the Missouri platform of 1878. About one-third of the Democrats voted against the national banks. Will my Democratic colleagues of Missouri please read the RECORD?

You made the charge upon this floor that our Greenbackers made pledges to the Republicans. That was false; we made no pledges. You charge us with voting with the Republicans in the contested-election cases. To this charge we reply, that we voted in accordance with our convictions of right, and the Republicans voted with us in some cases. But that in the Finley-Bisbee case Mr. JONES (Greenbacker) made an able speech in favor of Mr. Finley, (Democrat,) and the Greenbackers voted for Mr. Finley; but neither Republicans nor Democrats voted with us. The Democrats did not vote, and hence lost their man by pure obstinacy.

We are opposed to filibustering. We believe in a people's government, in a free vote, and a fair count. We do not believe in putting a Congressman upon this floor by force, fraud, or tissue-ballots, then holding him here by filibustering. We do not believe in treating the voice of the people with contempt.

At the close of the late war the Republican party had the control of the State of Missouri. They enfranchised those who fought them and had been disfranchised during the war.

When the Democrats got possession of the State government they made haste to gerrymander the State so as to disfranchise their political opponents. They gerrymandered in 1877, and lost five Congressmen in 1880. The Democrats of Missouri recently called a special session of the Legislature to make a new apportionment in order to disfranchise their political opponents, (about 200,000 voters.) It is a great question to be settled in the immediate future whether we have a people's government. When sectional feelings and partisan prejudice control State governments in such manner as to disregard the just rights of American citizens it becomes a real cause of alarm, and the people should be educated to greater independence and less intolerance. Americans living under a republican form of government must have a free vote and a fair count.

How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Five minutes.

Mr. HASELTINE. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. MURCH.]

Mr. MURCH. I am opposed to this bill because it provides for taking the taxes off deposits of bankers, and the property of other people has got to pay the taxes. I shall vote against it. That is all I care to say about the bill.

There is an old adage that there is more than one way to skin a cat; and I propose to take the other way. On the 18th of May I submitted some remarks in this House on the bank bill, the bill to recharter national banks. In my remarks the following language occurs:

We are not able to state these expenses accurately. The Comptroller of the Currency is particular to furnish the public no data from which the sum could be stated. This has been studiously kept from the public. We have no doubt that all these expenses incurred by the Treasury in furnishing national-bank notes were $1,000,000 each year.

The Comptroller of the Currency in an open letter published in the various Republican papers in my State denies my proposition, and states that the total expenses of his office have been but $5,148,000 in eighteen years. He further states that the contingent expenses of his office are not paid by the Comptroller, but are paid out of the general fund of the Treasury Department and consequently he cannot state them.

Mr. Chairman, here is where the nigger in the wood-pile lies. The Comptroller states the expenses of his office, barring the contingent expenses; and these he says he cannot state—in open violation of section 333 of the Revised Statutes, which reads as follows:

The Comptroller of the Currency shall make an annual report to Congress, exhibiting * * * fifth, the names and compensation of the clerks employed by him, and the whole amount of the expenses of the banking department during the year.

He violates the very express provision of this statute in not giving the contingent expenses of his office. I still reiterate my statement made on the 18th of May, that in my opinion, and to my best belief from the researches I have made on this subject, the expenses as I have stated will aggregate $1,000,000 a year; and until the Comptroller of the Currency can submit figures to this Congress, or to me, denying this proposition, I still will adhere to my statement. When he does I will correct it, if need be, but not until then. It seems as if he could attack a member of this House, laying him in a lie with impunity, that when he does so he has some champion rising up here to debar a man from defending himself. If these are the rules of this House, they should be amended so that every man should have a chance to defend his honor and his truth.

These banks have special privileges, not only here but all over the country, and here you are submitting a bill to take taxes off deposits of bankers while the people are taxed to the last shilling, almost, to sustain the Government. Why do you not take your tax off tobacco?

Mr. RANDALL. I propose to offer as an amendment what I send to the desk, which need not be read.

The proposed amendment of Mr. RANDALL is as follows:

SEC. —. Apothecaries who sell liquor only for medicinal purposes, and according to the restrictions hereinafter specified, shall pay a special tax of —— dollars annually.

When any apothecary who proposes to sell liquors shall, at the proper time for making application for the special-tax stamp of a liquor dealer, make and file with the collector of his district an oath or affirmation in writing, in a form to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, that he is carrying on the business of preparing and compounding medicines according to prescriptions of physicians; that he does not intend to, and will not sell, or offer for sale, or permit to be sold or offered for sale at his place of business, any distilled spirits, wines or malt liquors, excepting only for medicinal purposes, and not to be drank on the premises, and in quantities of less than one —— at any one time, such apothecary shall, on payment of the special tax, receive from the collector an appropriate special-tax stamp, prepared and furnished by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and to be subject to all the provisions of law relating to special-tax stamps.

Mr. RICE, of Missouri, addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. KASSON. I have but a few minutes in which to call the attention of gentlemen on both sides of the House to the effect of the proposed bill and to the principle upon which it is framed. It is because I have not heard any statement that gave the substantial principle and reason for the bill as submitted to the House that, in the discharge of my share of the responsibility of the Committee of Ways and Means, I would like to make a few remarks prior to voting upon the bill or the amendments proposed to it.

At the beginning of this session we were confronted with a statement from the financial officers of the Government that there was more revenue coming into the Treasury than could properly be disbursed. In other words, that under existing laws we were deriving more money from the people than the needs of a justly administered and an economical government required. That statement we believed; that statement, so far as I know, has not been disputed on either side of the House.

The next question then was, Where will you reduce the revenue? There were two modes of reducing it. One was to attack the tariff system at once by a reduction which might or might not have the effect of reducing the revenue; because upon the theory of importation of foreign goods the more you reduce the duties on imports the more goods are imported, and whether that excess of importation would result in increasing the revenue would of course depend upon the amount introduced.

It involved also the other and more serious question of the effect of a sudden change of the tariff upon the industries of the country which had been greatly modified and developed within the last few years.

The Committee on Ways and Means felt that for two reasons they could not at this session attack the revenue derived from the tariff. One reason was that which I have named. The other was the disturbance to be produced in the great industries of the country by an unadvised action of the House, without notice to those industries enabling them to prepare for that reduction.

Hence the Committee on Ways and Means reported the tariff-commission bill, to serve the double purpose of, first, a notice to all the interests of the country that it was proposed to revise a tariff which affected them; and, secondly, to learn from them what would be the effect upon their interests of reductions or changes to be made in the tariff. Therefore the reduction of revenue to be derived from the tariff remains for the consideration of this Congress at its next session.

That left us the question of internal revenue to consider, which had been left out of the tariff-commission bill as originally introduced. Here we could reduce the revenue, and except in two or three respects we could do it safely, without deranging the business of the country.

Those two or three respects were the tax on distilled spirits, the tax on tobacco, and perhaps the tax on malt liquors. Of the two former articles there were great stocks on hand, and any sudden change in the rate of taxation would operate to affect those industries to a great degree, being done without notice, and without opportunity to them to dispose of the accumulated stocks on hand.

Another reason was this: there are a great many people who think that the taxes levied on distilled spirits and on tobacco are the easiest collected and the least felt, as those articles are in the nature of luxuries, and they consider that the taxes ought not to be taken off those articles unless there is no other place from which to reduce the revenue. We therefore felt that we should turn to those things about which there was less opposition to the removal of taxes and for the continuance of which there was less reason. We accordingly looked over the entire list of internal-revenue taxes and inquired which of them should be entirely abrogated without injury to the business of the country and at the same time giving relief to the country.

If gentlemen will pursue that mental process by taking the list of articles in the internal revenue and inquire where will business be deranged the least, and at the same time where most relief will be given to the tax-payers of the country by a reduction of the tax, beginning with the first article on the list and running through, I challenge the honest judgment of this House, irrespective of party politics, whether we could do it more wisely than this bill recommends should be done. For example, there is the tax upon the general movable capital of the country, which no government desires to burden with taxes if it can help it. You have several subjects of taxation which produce a very slight revenue, too little to be taken into account separately, but by aggregating them together you can get a considerable reduction of the tax levied upon the people of the country.

In regard to the bank tax, the question first arose, Shall we reduce the tax on bank circulation? We said no, because that is in the nature of compensation for the privilege of issuing a circulating medium, and therefore as compensation the tax is sound in principle, and being paid by the corporation itself, it does not affect the business interests of the country, and therefore it is unnecessary to relieve the corporations from that taxation.

Then we come to the question of tax on deposits. We found that many hundreds of thousands of people were involved, because wherever the banks pay taxes on deposit the amount of interest that they can pay to the people who deposit the money is accordingly diminished.

Then there was the stamp-tax on checks. That affects a great number of people, yields a small sum of money, is a vexatious tax against which remonstrances have come to us year after year.

So it was in the case of the small tax on matches, which yields a considerable sum of money, but through monopolies has a direct effect upon the cost of an article that is consumed by perhaps the greatest number of people in this country that any article is consumed by.

We said, therefore, we will simply leave for this session untouched the tax upon distilled spirits, malt liquors, and manufactures of tobacco, barring the one question of cigars and cigarettes, (which has been explained,) leave the tax on bank circulation, and for the rest we will wipe off the entire taxation, thus relieving all these various classes of people from the injurious effects of this taxation. [Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, and Mr. ANDERSON rose.] I must beg gentlemen to excuse me. My time is limited, as I am obliged to leave the Hall.

Under these circumstances if our principle was right—to touch those things which did not disturb the business of the country, and to leave to the next session what, if God please, I hope will be done, a further reduction—I say if gentlemen admit the principle upon which we have acted, there is no other result that can be arrived at.

One thing more: we found that with the reduction of all tax except upon the articles named we did not make so large a reduction as we thought the Government could afford. There remained, then, the question of the license tax, originally levied for revenue, now retained for nothing but its benefit in holding a grip upon the business interests to detect and prevent frauds upon the revenue. When we came to this question we found that we could relieve about six hundred thousand people from the burden of a taxation which we did not require for the purpose of revenue. We therefore said, Here is another large class of people representing, with their families, perhaps three millions of people who will feel the effects of lightening this taxation.

But gentlemen say, "We do not like the business that these men do, and therefore we will keep the tax on their licenses for doing the business." I ask gentlemen whether they can stand on a principle like this, that when a business is operated under the law they will then impose a tax upon the man for exercising the privilege through which your revenue is derived? Has there ever been adopted in the history of this Government a mode of punishing a man for engaging in a lawful business by putting upon him a tax that we do not want? I cannot stand on that principle. I may not like the business, but I will not impose a tax upon any class of business men in this country as a punishment for engaging in a business allowed by law.

There is another thing that explains why the committee went to this source to further reduce taxation; it is something that is not charged over to the consumer, as is the case with many other taxes. It is a personal tax coming out of the pocket of the man who pays it. The largest number of these people are those engaged in the manufacture of tobacco, cigars, &c. Out of the 600,000 there are 400,000 engaged in the manufacture of tobacco in its various forms. Does any man want to punish these men for engaging in a business from which the Government has derived so enormous a revenue?

If you include in the calculation the persons dependent upon those who are engaged in this branch of business, the number affected by this measure of relief would be swelled to millions, residing in all the States and Territories of the Union. I affirm that our principle is the only one upon which intelligent statesmen can stand; that is, to levy a tax on no man for doing business, unless you require the tax for revenue, or want it simply large enough to hold the man in the sight of the officers of the Government to prevent frauds and violations of the law.

Here, then, is where the committee stands on principle. These taxes affect a large number of honest men whose business you do not dislike; they are the majority, and you ought not to separate on principle the class that you dislike from the class that you like. I repeat, that as statesmen we cannot stand on that principle.

Here, then, is the whole sum and substance of this bill. With the information before the House to-day, we know that without deranging the business of the country we can reduce taxation twenty-odd millions of dollars at this session. We also know that if we are not disappointed in the payment of arrearages of pensions we shall be able at the next session to grant to the people of this country a further reduction of taxation. We see clearly that this can be done. I want to make my statement distinct. I desire now and here at this session of Congress to go to the extreme extent mentioned by this bill, which affects all classes of the community, doing business I may like or may not like; but they are the tax-paying people of the country. We have no right to impose taxes upon them as punishment for the business they are doing.

One thing more, to complete my statement. I do not like the establishment of saloons all over the United States. I believe their effect to be bad upon the general morality and prosperity of the country. In England the government has stood for years upon the positive necessity of the revenue to be derived from whisky, and has, therefore, refused from year to year to pass any law whatever restricting the sale of liquors in the interest of temperance and sobriety. I do not desire the Government of the United States to learn to shape its legislation to depend forever in point of revenue upon the maintenance of the saloon and the whisky interest of this country. I will not attack it suddenly now at this session; but in the interest of temperance itself I want no legislation now or hereafter that shall make this Government permanently dependent upon open whisky-shops and whisky-saloons for its revenue. Therefore, I say that, while I will strike no sudden blow at this interest, while I will maintain this source of revenue as long as the great interests of the country require it, I shall gladly see the time come when the entire legislation upon whisky interests may be turned over to the States to suppress the traffic if they see fit and can do it constitutionally, or so to legislate as to diminish the use and consumption of this article of distilled spirits in this country.

I have said, sir, all I desire to say in explaining the theory of the bill now under consideration, and the reasons why I think there should be no amendments adopted, but that it should be passed in the shape reported from the committee for the relief of the people so far as it goes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. KASSON. Certainly, although I am just about leaving the Hall.

Mr. ANDERSON. I would like to inquire for information whether in the opinion of the gentleman, in case all of the internal-revenue taxes were abolished and the revenues derived from the protective tariff as it is were continued as they are and were the same as now, or approximately so, if there would then be any surplus in the Treasury next year; in other words, whether if you wipe out all of the internal-revenue taxes you will not then require the tariff as it is to-day, or even increased, in order to supply the means for carrying on the necessary expenditures of the Government?

Mr. KASSON. I do not believe the condition of the business of the country would allow us now to wipe out all of the internal-revenue taxes. I hope we will not undertake to do so, but will maintain it as a system until we see the effect of the arrearages of pensions, and various other acts of Congress, and then determine whether it will be safe or wise to do so. For the present I desire only to go so far as in my judgment is safe or prudent.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman does not answer my question.

Mr. KASSON. I was under the impression that I had answered the gentleman's question.

Mr. ANDERSON. Not as I understand it. I want to know this: whether if the internal-revenue taxes were all abolished, you would not then require all the revenues you now get from the tariff system for the support of the Government?

Mr. KASSON. We would have, in my opinion, to depend upon a tariff sufficient to produce the requisite revenues for the Government. What the requirements of the Government will be, the future must determine. This tariff may be modified so as to produce more revenue to the Government in some respects, and in others modified so as to produce less.

Mr. ANDERSON. But you would still need to have about as much revenue as you get now?

Mr. KASSON. That depends upon the extent of the appropriations which may be made by Congress.

I yield now the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY.]

Mr. WILSON addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. KELLEY. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. WILLIS.]

Mr. WILLIS. In the course of several years' experience on this floor I have discovered as a rule that the attention given to a member was in the inverse ratio of the importance of the subject on which he spoke; and as the amendment which I have offered and which I shall briefly discuss is of a very important character, I doubt very much whether I will have the attention of more than a fifth of the members on this floor.

I listened with great interest to the suggestions and remarks just made by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] of the Ways and Means Committee, as to the line of conduct which they had pursued in presenting the bill which is now before this committee. I understood him to say that the committee had carefully surveyed the whole field and had selected, of all the objects upon which taxation was levied, those upon which they believed the taxes could now with propriety be dispensed with, and which when dispensed with would redound most to the interests of the whole country.

He then enumerated these taxes. As to the most of these I heartily agree with him. The tax on bank-checks is not only a continuing nuisance but unjust and unnecessary. The poor woman who draws her pittance of $5 pays the same tax as the millionaire who checks out his thousands at a time. The tax on proprietary medicines is also a burden chiefly upon the poor, as they are unable to employ physicians and must rely upon these means of cure. So also as to the tax on matches. But while the honorable gentleman was making his enumeration I desired to ask him a question, and that was whether he believed, or whether any member of the committee which he represented believed, that a continuance of the tax on alcohol to be used in the industrial pursuits was not as unjustifiable as any he named, and why it was that his committee had not favorably reported to this House a bill for the removal of that burden?

NATURE OF PROPOSED AMENDMENT.

It is in that direction that the amendment which I have made tends.

What is the nature and effect of this amendment? Its substance is comprehended in the first section:

That the Secretary of the Treasury shall grant permission to any firm, individual, or corporation to withdraw from bond alcohol, or any spirit containing alcohol, and subject to internal-revenue tax, in specified quantities of not less than three hundred proof-gallons, without the payment of the internal-revenue tax on the same, or on the spirits from which it may have been distilled, for the sole purpose of use in industrial pursuits.

The amendment further provides for the use of this free alcohol under two distinct conditions of things: first, where, as in the manipulation of tobacco, the complete destruction of the spirits is entailed so that they cannot be recovered by any process of distillation, and, secondly, where such destruction is not the necessary result. In this latter case the amendment provides that the spirits shall first have been mixed with one-ninth of their bulk of methyl, or wood alcohol, of equal proof-strength. The amendment then details the machinery by which such withdrawals of spirits can be made and prescribes the penalties for evasion or violation of the law.

IS THE PRINCIPLE OF THIS AMENDMENT CORRECT?

The first question, Mr. Chairman, which presents itself is, whether the principle of this amendment is correct? Is the object to be attained a good one, and is it in accord with a sound public policy? Upon this point I will submit the argument of Mr. Goldsborough Robinson, one of the most active and intelligent manufacturers of tobacco, of Louisville, Kentucky, before the Ways and Means Committee when this subject was pending:

Alcohol is nature's great solvent, and is required in nearly all industrial pursuits. In this use it is as absolute a necessity as machinery or a paint-brush, and in taxing it we tax a product of our own industry, and through it lay a burden upon our own manufacturers.

The tax is so excessive as to be almost prohibitory, and our people are placed at a great disadvantage in competition with those of foreign countries who have free alcohol.

No government wisely conducted will lay excessive taxation on its own industries.

This principle is so well established that machinery is in many cities exempt from local taxation.

The only justification of the extreme tax on spirits (it is six times their value) is the popular belief that they are harmful luxuries and should, therefore, bear the burden; but this justification fails utterly where spirits are used in manufactures, in the preparation of drugs, as a burning fluid, and in all the common wants of the people. The tax being almost prohibitory, every shift has been adopted to escape its burden; benzine (dangerous always) is substituted as a burning-fluid, and fusel-oil (a poison) as a solvent.

All inventions leading in the direction of the use of alcohol are barred. It has great bleaching powers and might be employed with advantage on textile fabrics, but its cost prevents any experiment in this direction. For nearly twenty long years, the most progressive years in the world's history, the American people have been practically deprived of the use of this great solvent. Its absolute necessity in scientific pursuits has been admitted and colleges have been granted by special enactment its use without tax, but no provision has been made for "an army of humble laborers in the scientific fields to whose efforts all our great inventions are due and who have no access to college laboratories.

The constantly increasing surplus in the Treasury, the impossibility of applying that surplus to our debt except by buying bonds at an extravagant premium, forces the conviction on all minds that taxation must be reduced.

What is more reasonable than that this reduction should take place in that direction which will encourage industries, and remove from the burden which the people carry those points of friction which gall and irritate more than the weight of the burden itself? The people have made no complaint of the tax on matches, and who will thank the representatives of the people for its removal. But for many years, petition after petition has come to this committee-room for relief from this alcohol tax on industry.

The plumber, for instance, goes out and buys a box of matches, the tax on which is only two cents. But he is obliged to get a pint of alcohol, and he pays on that a tax of some thirty cents. It bears so unevenly and highly on that side that he feels that the Government is robbing him.

There can be no relief granted which will accomplish so much with so little cost to the revenue, for it must be borne in mind always that it is not only the amount paid but the practical prohibition which is so burdensome. Before the war it was estimated that one-third of the spirits produced were consumed in industrial pursuits; now the most careful estimates made by parties in a position to know are that only one-twentieth of the amount produced is consumed in arts and manufactures. Relief granted therefore from this oppressive and prohibitory tax upon a necessity will only reduce the revenue some three millions of dollars, (one twentieth of sixty millions, the total amount collected on spirits,) but will aid the industries of the country in many times that amount.

I also call attention in this connection to an editorial of the Oil, Paint, and Drug Reporter, of New York. It represents the trade of all the United States. In its issue of March 22, 1882, I find the following:

"The relief for which this bill provides has long been contended for by this journal. Taxing distilled spirits used in manufactures is to the last degree exorbitant and unnecessary, and is as burdensome to the people as would be a tax upon the grain from which it is produced. Hundreds of manufactures, now in a flourishing condition, and which are vitally essential to our national prosperity, could not exist were it not for this useful material which enters into their processes or products, and a tax upon it therefore becomes one upon the very substance of the community. An offspring of war legislation, at a time when it was necessary to swell the revenue of the country by every means in the power of the Government, it has since been continued under a mistaken system of economy which taxes the present generation for the benefit of posterity. It has been pleaded on the part of the Government that the tax was necessary to the speedy reduction of the public debt, but the fallacy of this claim is readily apparent.

"The loss of the amount collected from alcohol might be counterbalanced by an increased protection to American industries in the shape of import duties upon articles of luxury, which would not affect the great mass of the people. It is manifestly unfair, for the purpose of saving the interest upon a certain amount of bonds, annually to draw from the pockets of the laboring classes an amount of tax upon the essentials of their daily subsistence equal to both principal and interest of these bonds, especially in view of the fact that not we but our survivors are to reap the benefit of this drain upon our pockets. The political economy of this question involves too many subtleties to be discussed at length here, but it may be sufficient only to say that opinions as to the advisability of reducing the national debt to a merely nominal point differ as widely as upon most other questions of a kindred character, and in view of this contrariety of opinion the abrogation of the tax upon alcohol used for manufacturing purposes could certainly not meet with a degree of opposition from the people which would make it a serious step for Congress to undertake, even if the amount so withdrawn from the revenues were not raised by some other method.

"It is probable that the opposition to such a measure would and does come from a wholly different source, namely, the office-holding class, who would see in the taking off of this tax a large amount of patronage and political power removed from their grasp. The influence of this class with Congress is too well known to be ignored, and can only be overcome by the strenuous efforts of the people themselves. Our representatives must be made to understand that it is the general desire of the community that they no longer be required to pay a tax upon a domestic product which is fully as essential to their comfortable existence as the bread which they eat. We are desirous of seeing this proposed measure become a law, and feel assured that the manufacturing industries we represent are in full sympathy with us in this matter. We therefore call upon all who feel an interest to exert their influence with their respective Representatives to secure its passage. A powerful movement in this direction may reasonably hope to overcome the efforts of the lobby, which will certainly be put in active operation to defeat it. Let the friends of this proposed legislation now come to its support, and such influence as this journal is able to exert will be cheerfully accorded the enterprise."

There is one class of manufacturers as to whom this amendment will certainly be recognized as just and necessary. Tobacco manufacturers require alcohol in order to make their tobacco pliable, and they are really compelled to pay a double tax; they pay $1.80 on the alcohol and sixteen cents a pound upon the tobacco into which the alcohol is incorporated. This is therefore especially unjust to them. But there is no argument in the present condition of our finances that can be offered against this amendment as applied to all industrial pursuits.

We have seen from Mr. ROBINSON's statement that, while 33 per cent. of the alcohol produced in this country was consumed in the arts, now only 5 per cent. is used. As a war measure, this high tax of $1.80 per gallon was imposed.

EVIL EFFECTS OF TAXING ALCOHOL.

What was the effect of that? In the first place, as regards health. It has, as the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee upon a former occasion stated, caused the substitution of wood alcohol and fusil oil in the preparation of many drugs that are material in the business of our apothecaries; it has caused the introduction of benzine, a burning fluid dangerous to human life; it has compelled our manufacturers to come into unjust and unsuccessful competition with Germany and with England, where no such tax as this is levied.

I read here a letter from a firm manufacturing percussion caps to illustrate the disadvantages under which we place our own people by this tax:

NEW YORK, March 17, 1882.

House Committee on Ways and Means:

GENTLEMEN: We use from fifteen to twenty barrels alcohol per month. We ought to use fifty barrels with tax reduced. We are obliged to export alcohol to Saint Thomas and make crude material and import same back. By so doing we are able to hold a portion of trade; but if we were to pay present price of alcohol in States we could not do business, even with 40 per cent. duty on blasting caps, which is in force. Germany sends most all that is used here.

Yours, respectfully,

METALLIC CAP COMPANY,
H. S. CHAPMAN.

Should we not seek to remove evils and disadvantages such as these? What higher duty is there upon us as Representatives than to promote and protect the health of the people? What subject today is exciting more discussion than the adulteration of our drugs and of our food? If we can remove all temptation, so far as the use of pure spirits is concerned, to employ injurious or poisonous substitutes, ought we not to do it, and do it promptly? Will any gentleman on this floor admit that fusil oil is a proper ingredient of medicinal preparations?

WHO WILL BE BENEFITED BY REMOVAL OF TAX.

But it may be asked who will be benefited by the removal of this tax? Very few persons are aware of the number and variety of uses to which alcohol is put in the arts and industries.

When this subject came up in the early part of this session before the Ways and Means Committee its honorable chairman [Mr. KELLEY] made a statement, which I will read from the report of the committee's proceedings:

This bill, introduced by Mr. WILLIS, suggests the reason why so many of our Northern manufacturers and artisans desire a reduction of the duty on alcohol. A day or two before I left Philadelphia the last time, a young man whom I have known from childhood up, who is a plumber in my neighborhood and does my plumbing, said to me: "You are going to Washington pretty soon?" I said, "Yes." "I wish," said he, "that you would get that tax off alcohol." Said I, "Why do you wish that; you do not use alcohol, do you?" "Yes," he replied, "I do. I wish that as you pass down to the cars you would just step in and look at my books and see how large a sum, in proportion to the business I do, I have to pay for alcohol." Again, I was talking with a carpet manufacturer on this subject, and he said to me, "You would not suppose, probably, that I was a consumer of alcohol; yet, with this tax of $1.80 a gallon, you make me pay a good many hundred dollars a year."

But, sir, it is not only the plumber, the carpet manufacturer, but also, as we have seen, the manufacturer of percussion caps, of tobacco, and numerous others.

Commissioner Raum has undertaken to enumerate some of those who use alcohol and who would come under the provisions of this amendment. I quote from his statement before the committee:

It is important to consider the number of persons who would be authorized to withdraw alcohol free of tax under this bill. We had last year in operation in the United States 1,240 grain distilleries, 7 molasses distilleries, and 3,963 fruit distilleries, so that the total number of distilleries operated and from which methylated spirits might be put upon the market under this bill would be 5,272. Those distilleries, of course, are scattered all over the United States. The English act provides not only for the withdrawal of methylated spirits from distillery warehouses, but also authorizes the establishment of warehouses for the purpose of methylating spirits. It is very difficult, as was said in a pamphlet that was read to you the other day, to get at facts where there are no absolute data to be had, and I am very frank to say that I have been groping my way into the facts of this question as best I could. I endeavored to obtain from the Census Bureau the latest data as to the number of persons supposed to use alcohol in manufactures, but their figures are not in condition to be used.

The manufacturers of tobacco are specially spoken of in this bill as a class who would be authorized to use alcohol free of tax. There are 949 of those. Dealers in leaf tobacco would also be authorized to use alcohol. There are 3,618 of them; and there are 5 retail dealers; in all 4,672.

From the best information I can obtain I would say that there are 1,321 manufacturers of perfumery, chemicals, and patent medicines in this country, and 22,579 druggists; so that there would be 28,572 persons of these classes who would be authorized to withdraw alcohol free of tax, upon a bond, and dispose of it without supervision.

Then there are 3,640 photographers; 110,660 painters and varnishers.

I do not know how many hat manufacturers there are, but there are 16,412 hatters, who now use about one gallon of alcohol to every hundred silk hats manufactured.

I have not the figures as to the number of plumbers or the jewelers.

I am only giving a few of the persons who would be authorized to use alcohol in this way under the provisions of this bill. This makes an aggregate of 159,284 persons who would be authorized to use alcohol in one shape or another under this bill.

These, as the Commissioner states, are but a few of the large number who would be benefited by free alcohol.

THE FARMER INTERESTED IN THIS LEGISLATION.

But, Mr. Chairman, not only would the artisan and the manufacturer be aided by this proposed legislation; not only would the general public gain in the purer character of the drugs consumed, but the agricultural interests of our country would be largely promoted by the reintroduction of alcohol into its former place in the arts and manufactures. There is a close relation between the distillery and the farm. Pass this amendment and you increase the demand for grain. You put back alcohol in its old place in the arts and manufacturing and you compel our distilleries to increase their production. From the last report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, I find that there was used for distilling during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1881, of corn, 23,109,000 bushels; of rye, 4,630,000 bushels, and of barley, 2,579,000 bushels. It is well known that a large part of the corn thus used is of an inferior and unmarketable quality. Much of it, if not taken by the distiller, would rot in the granary.

If you create new uses for alcohol, or restore it to its former uses by making it free of duty, as this bill provides, there would be an immediate increase in its production, and a corresponding benefit to our farming interests.

Now, this fact that refuse corn can be used in distilleries is a material one to be remembered. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue tells you in the same statement from which I have already quoted that if you increase the production of alcohol to the extent of 20,000,000 gallons annually by the removal of this tax you will increase the consumption of this refuse corn to the extent of 5,000,000 bushels. So that not only the artisan, the tobacco manufacturer who uses alcohol in the manipulation of his tobacco, but also the great farming interests of the country are interested in the removal of this unjust and unnecessary war tax.

WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE SHOULD APPROVE THIS LEGISLATION.

But passing from this point I submit that this amendment should have come from the Ways and Means Committee itself, and should now, when offered, meet with its hearty approval. Has that committee not recognized the principle of this proposed legislation? What is that principle? It is that spirits shall be taxed only when used as a luxury. Is not that principle recognized in the very bill now under discussion? In this bill they ask that all taxes on proprietary medicines be abolished, regardless of the per cent. of alcohol. It has so declared because these proprietary medicines—especially to the poor—are a necessity. If this were absolutely true, then the use of alcohol in the arts and manufactures and the use of alcohol as a constituent part of many proprietary medicines would be on the same footing, and both would be equally entitled to exemption from duty.

But the use of alcohol in the industrial pursuits is purely a necessity and never a luxury, while its use in very many of the proprietary medicines is not as a medicine but as a beverage. Is it not a well-kown fact that a large per cent. of the so-called "tonic bitters," "elixirs vitæ," &c., are but thin disguises for the pure "juice of the corn," and are bought and drunk by many who have conscientious scruples against the "straight" article. To this extent, therefore, this committee has gone beyond the exemptions of this amendment. If the war tax is to be removed from alcoholic proprietary medicines, why not remove it from the arts and manufactures?

Not only is that committee, in my judgment, committed to the principle of this legislation by the bill now before us, but its previous action during the present Congress authorizes me to hope for the aid of its members now.

That committee by its action heretofore has declared two things: First, that the present revenue was entirely too large and should be reduced. It declared this by presenting a bill reducing the tax on whisky from ninety to fifty cents per gallon, and also reducing the tax on tobacco, beer, &c. The amount of these reductions per annum was somewhere in the neighborhood of $70,000,000. The subsequent judgment of the committee was that these reductions on tobacco and whisky should not be made. Why this change of opinion? Was it not largely due to the belief that the public sentiment of the country would not justify the removal or reduction of tax upon articles of luxury, such as whisky and tobacco, unaccompanied by any reduction of the duties of the necessaries of life?

I am not here to discuss the propriety of this committee's final action on this subject. I accept it, however, as conclusive upon this Congress. What then follows? That committee has decided that sixty or seventy million of internal-revenue taxes should be removed, and that it will not remove them from beer, whisky, or tobacco. Where, then, or upon what subjects shall this reduction be made? It has partly answered that question by presenting this bill removing the duty on bank deposits, proprietary medicines, reducing the charge for licenses of retail dealers of whisky, &c. But it appears that the very largest sum that will be derived from these various sources would not exceed $16,000,000, which is not one-fourth the amount which the committee has decided should be taken off.

Where, then, will you make up these forty or fifty millions? Where can it be done with more justice and with greater advantage to the whole country than by giving free alchohol to the arts and manufactures? The whole amount of revenue which would thus be taken off, according to the best estimates which have been presented to me, would not exceed three and one-half million dollars. The increaseed production of alchohol that might result from the passage of the bill would not decrease the amount now used as a beverage. The tax upon spirits would still yield its sixty or seventy millions of dollars per annum, increasing yearly with our increasing population and foreign demand.

SIMILAR LEGISLATION HERE AND IN OTHER COUNTRIES.

Not only has the committee having this subject in charge indorsed, as we have seen, the principle of this bill, but it is recognized by the law of our own and other countries. Our statute-books present two instances of the application of the principle. "Free alcohol" is now and very properly allowed to "any manufacturer of medicines, preparations, compositions, perfumeries, cosmetics, cordials, and other liquors for export." (Supplement Revised Statutes, page 533.) This withdrawal is "under such regulations and requirements as to stamps, bonds, and other security as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The execution of the amendment I am now considering is confided to the same officer, and with equally liberal discretion. If he has been successful, I may suggest here, in administering this "free-alcohol" law in one instance, why question his ability in the other? Is there not the same room for fraud in both cases? And in this connection, as one of the means of executing this provision, I call attention to the Revised Statutes, section 3433.

But, Mr. Chairman, as gentlemen are well aware, an act was passed February 21, 1873, (Revised Statutes, section 3,297,) which further recognizes the principle of this amendment by authorizing the withdrawal of alcohol in specified quantities "without payment of the internal tax on the same," for scientific purposes. At first this privilege was accorded only to an "incorporated or chartered scientific institution or college," but subsequently, on May 3, 1880, it was extended to such institutions even when unincorporated. How is the Government protected against fraud here? Simply by a "bond for double the amount of the tax on the alcohol to be withdrawn;" and the only penalty for using such alcohol for other purposes is the payment of double tax on the whole amount withdrawn.

Here, then, we have twice passed laws giving "free spirits." Will any one say that these laws have not been an advantage to our commerce and to our people?

But while we, for some reason yet to be explained, and with a willful disregard of our best interests that is lamentable, have given to our people "free spirits" in only these two instances, our rivals in trade, Germany and England, have for many years extended the same relief to all. As far back as June 26, 1855, England has had upon her statute books "An act to allow spirits of wine to be used duty free in the arts and manufactures." (Chapter 38, 18 and 19 Victoria.) The law has approved itself there; it has fostered the arts and sciences and been a "very present help" to the great industrial interests of the United Kingdom. Why should we not adopt its principles and give its benefits to our own people? If the tax on spirits is to remain let it be upon them as a beverage, as a luxury, not as a necessity.

The increase in the number of gallons of alcohol has steadily increased under this law of the United Kingdom during each year from 1857 to the present. In 1857 the number of gallons was 209,693. In 1881 it was 1,762,659, over eightfold increase!

IS THIS AMENDMENT PRACTICABLE.

Admitting the justice, the necessity, and advantages of this measure, the only remaining question is as to its practicability. Are the provisions of this amendment such as to attain the object in view, and that without permitting fraud upon the revenue. And here I again quote from Mr. ROBINSON'S statement:

> In considering this part of the subject it should be remembered that the general feeling of fear of fraud upon the revenue has been engendered by the difficulties which occurred in enforcing the laws during and immediately after the war, and we are apt to overlook the fact that those laws are now easily and thoroughly executed. At that time the people were in a state of turmoil, and the foundations of society seemed broken up; now order has regained its sway, and the convictions which followed each other with such rapidity in the United States courts have taught a wholesome fear of United States laws.
> It should also be remembered in considering this question of possible fraud that no law and no Government supervision can hold the people so closely that they cannot commit fraud, but that the laws are enforced by the good moral sense of the great majority of the people, and by the fear of the penalties on the part of the evil-disposed.
> Our immense internal-revenue tax is collected, practically, without fraud, by the use of four simple provisions in our laws; they are: the giving of bonds, the use of stamps, the menace of a penalty, and reasonable Government supervision. With these safeguards highly taxed articles are allowed to enter every avenue of trade, and to be transported through every part of this vast country.
> Now, if the Government can, by these simple means, enforce the collection of $135,000,000 per annum of internal revenue, it can certainly with the greatest safety remit to the people this tax of three millions on their industries by the use of the same provisions.
> You will observe that the bill provides for two classes of use, one that of spirits first adulterated with methyl or wood alcohol, and the other for its use pure in such manufacturing processes only as shall entail its ultimate entire destruction, so that it shall not leave the factory in any form from which it might be recovered by distillation.
> Under the first provision the manufacturers of Great Britain have been supplied with free spirits for over twenty years, and this adulteration with methyl has been found a practical method of preventing any fraudulent use.
> Methylated spirits under this bill would be the common and popular use of alcohol by individuals, and in the smaller and more numerous industrial pursuits, and this use as proven by experience would be abundantly protected.
> The second use provided for in those manufactures requiring pure spirits would be under the regulations of the Commissioner, and this use can be as carefully guarded, and by the same means, as the sale and use of spirits and tobacco now are.

The regulations necessary to this end the bill leaves wisely to the discretion of the Commissioner. He can best meet the exigencies of the trade or any necessity for the prevention of fraud, and under its provisions he has ample power to accomplish either.

Six or eight tenths of the whole use under this law would be methylated spirits. The use of pure alcohol would be limited to a few lines of manufacturing establishments with large investments and large plant. The whole law is placed right in the grasp of our own officers by its own terms.

CAN METHYLATED SPIRITS BE PURIFIED?

If methylated spirits can be purified and deodorized, then there is a tangible objection before us. But can it be done? Can it be done with so little expense as to justify the violation of law? I emphatically deny the proposition. I deny it upon the authority and experience for over a quarter of a century of the British law. I deny it upon the authority of the United States Dispensatory. In that work, on page 1700, I find the following:

The British Parliament, wishing to encourage the use of alcohol in the arts, but not as a beverage, passed an act, in 1855, allowing it to be used duty free, provided it be mixed with at least one-ninth of its bulk of pyroxylic spirit, which renders it unfit for drinking, but does not spoil it for use in the arts. This mixture is called methylated spirits, and is now employed extensively in Great Britain by hatters, brass-founders, and cabinet-makers for dissolving shellac and other resinous substances, and by manufacturing-chemists for making ether, chloroform, and sweet spirits of niter. From the purification of pyroxylic acid already referred to, so as to deprive it of offensive taste, it has been supposed that the intended operation of the British revenue laws might be evaded; but in opposition to this idea it is asserted that the purifying process is too expensive, on the large scale, to render it available for the purpose.

The process here referred to is very troublesome, and, as previously given in the Dispensatory, involves the use of lime, chloride of calcium, &c., and not by any process of distillation.

In this connection I read from a letter addressed to Mr. ROBINSON by Dr. J. P. Barnum, one of the most distinguished scientists and analytical chemists in the South or West, now a citizen of Louisville, Kentucky:

In regard to methylated spirits, I should regard the separation of 10 per cent. of wood-alcohol from grain-alcohol, so that it could be used as a beverage, as practically impossible, and entirely so except at several times the value of the alcohol obtained, and, even then, there would remain an exceedingly unpleasant odor in the grain alcohol from the acetate of methyl, which is always contained in larger porportions in commercial wood-alcohol, from which it can be freed only by uniting with chloride of calcium, driving off the acetate by heat, dissolving in water, and distilling. This acetate unites readily with grain-spirits, and does not vaporize when so united at a temperature lower than the boiling point of alcohol.

OTHER OBJECTIONS ANSWERED.

As Mr. ROBINSON has presented a complete answer to this and other objections urged by Commissioner Raum when this subject was pending before the Committee on Ways and Means, I will here read his reply:

The honorable Commissioner of Internal Revenue based his argument against the Willis bill made before you on April 4 on the ground of his fear of the fraudulent use of spirits withdrawn free of tax under that bill and his opposition to the appointment of the immense number of additional revenue officers which might be required.

He gave his reasons for this fear of fraud in the statement that a great number of people might withdraw alcohol under this bill; in his belief that methylated spirits might be subjected to a process of distillation which would free it from methyl and render it fit for use as a beverage; in his belief with the old prophet Jeremiah that human nature generally was deceitful above all things and desperately wicked, and that this bill would offer a temptation and open a gate to fraud not already offered and not already opened.

He illustrated his fears in a supposed case of how a retail druggist might apply for five barrels of Kentucky whisky and sell it for drinks or pass it through his back yard to a saloon-keeper for sale for that purpose.

Now what are the facts in the case and what are reasonable deductions from the same?

This bill provides:

1. For the use free of tax in industrial pursuits of spirits mixed with methyl according to the English standard.

2. For the use of pure spirits in those manufacturing processes only which shall destroy them so that they cannot be recovered, and this use is to be guarded by the giving of bonds, keeping of books, and Government supervision.

The bill provides still further that the sale, use, or willful permission of use of spirits withdrawn under it for any other purpose than industrial pursuits shall be punished with the usual severe penalties of the revenue laws.

Hon. BEN. BUTTERWORTH, as a revenue lawyer of experience, bore testimony before you that this law opened no gate to fraud not already wide open.

The revenue laws already in existence offer the temptation to fraud by taxing proof spirits $36 per barrel, and I propose to prove clearly that these laws offer much easier methods for fraud, and that without acceptance by the people, than any which can be offered under the operations of the Willis bill, and when this proof is made I respectfully submit the proposition that this cry of probable fraud, so easily raised, should and ought to be forever dismissed from the consideration of this subject.

Now for the proof. Let us test the question with the retail druggists and chemists. They number, according to the honorable Commissioner's estimate, about twenty-eight thousand in the United States, and have been selected by him as a class which would be peculiarly tempted, and have especial advantages for fraud under this bill.

The production of spirits by the fermentation and distillation of saccharine matter is one of the simplest processes known to chemistry, and is familiar to every druggist—nearly every druggist has a still. On their shelves are cans and jars filled with spirits upon which there are no stamps or brand to prove any payment of tax or identify the place of production. They can easily produce with these stills by a simple process proof spirits at a cost of 18 to 30 cents per gallon; they are now paying $1.15 for them. This process can be carried on in a back or attic room, apparently almost without risk of detection, and yet there is no record of any appreciable fraud by this class of men.

The people are either more honest or stand in greater fear of the penalty than the Commissioner believes.

Under the Willis bill these druggists would either have to attempt the practically impossible illicit distillation of methylated spirits, (see Note B.) or else, to obtain pure spirits, would have to file a bond for double the tax on the spirits withdrawn; make application stating a manufacturing process which would destroy, and then furnish proof showing such destruction and the reasonable ground thereof; they would also be required to keep proper books of detail.

Do thieves notify officers of their intention to steal?

This law presupposes ordinary common sense on the part of revenue officers, and could a retail druggist state in his application any reasonable manufacturing process necessary to his business which would destroy five barrels of Kentucky whisky, or could he furnish proof of such destruction!

I might multiply examples, but this class of men, so numerous and selected by the Commissioner himself, furnishes abundant proof of the statement that fraud is more easy under the present laws than it could possibly be under any provision of the Willis bill.

Our revenue laws are enforced by the honesty of the great mass of our people and because the evil disposed are held in check by the fear of the penalty and the certainty of ultimate detection through the betrayal of friends, servants, or clerks, or through the jealousy of trade.

The second ground of the Commissioner's objection, the employment of additional officers, is, I think, thrown in as a suggestion, without his having given the subject much consideration.

What are the facts?

The methylated spirits are to be mixed under the supervision of Government officers, in bonded distillery warehouses.

These officers are already there, and their duties are to watch and not to work. The pure spirits are to be withdrawn by application and bond through the collector, and their use will be subject to examination by himself or his deputy. These officers already exist.

Supervision over the sale of spirits throughout the United States is already exercised by officers already appointed. In conclusion, it will be more apparent the more this subject is considered, that this bill gives greater security to the revenue than the laws which are now enforced; that it involves no bad public policy, but, on the contrary, is a measure due to the people, and one which, if enacted, will meet with almost universal approbation.

CONCLUSION.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, what facts stand out as admitted on both sides of this House? It is admitted that we are now collecting from one hundred and twenty to one hundred and thirty millions of dollars annually in excess of the necessary and proper requirements of the Government.

What further is admitted? That this enormous drain upon the tax-payers of the country should be stopped; that these heavy taxes should be reduced. But when we come to consider some practical proposition for reducing taxation we are met on the one side by the friends of temperance who are unwilling to strike down the internal-revenue system, and on the other side by the friends of a high protective tariff, who are unwilling to take off the duties now levied on the necessaries of life.

I come now to you with a proposition which can meet with no objection either from the temperance men or from the friends of a high protective tariff. I come to you with a proposition to take off a burden from the arts and the industries of your country. I appeal to you in the name of these great tobacco manufacturers who pay their millions into your Treasury. I appeal to you in the name of that great army of artisans and of manufacturers who are deprived by this high tax on the use of alcohol in their business, to give them some relief.

It will take from your Treasury only about three and a half millions of dollars a year, hardly a drop in the great ocean of taxation. But it will inspire renewed life and activity in the industrial pursuits of the country.

Why should it not be done? Why should we, with a treasury full to overflowing, extort further tribute from either science, commerce, or industry? Why should we not, in imitation of our more far-seeing neighbors, by wise and beneficent legislation widen their operations and extend their usefulness?

Good policy, the dictate of sound business sense, the example of other nations, and common justice all demand that this relief should be given, and given without further delay.

NOTE A.

The following letter from a practical chemist and druggist of high standing shows that druggists already have stills, and that they can easily produce spirits at a cost of 18 cents per gallon, if they were willing to violate the law, but cannot practically, by any process, render methylated spirits fit for use as a beverage:

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY, April 10, 1882.

DEAR SIR: In answer to your inquiries, I would say that almost all the retail druggists and apothecaries have small stills, which they use for recovering alcohol from the percolate obtained in making fluid extracts, preparing distilled water, &c.

In regard to the costs of manufacturing spirits in a small way.

For the past two years I have been employed as chemist for the Newcomb-Buchannan Company, and have been constantly making experiments, and have been rarely able to obtain as good results in a large way, in the distillery, as I have in my experimental laboratory, in a small way, where I have never produced below 3.85 gallons, and from selected grain, 5.11 gallons, to the bushel of 56 pounds of grain.

Any apothecary could, in his laboratory, produce on an average four gallons of proof spirits from the same amount of grain, counting the extra cost of fuel, labor, and the average cost of grain. He could probably produce spirits at a profit at 18 cents per gallon.

If manufactured from sugar, the cost would be greater, probably from 30 to 32 cents, but the labor less and no slops to be gotten rid of.

In regard to methylated spirits, I should regard the separation of 10 per cent. of wood alcohol from grain alcohol, so that it could be used as a beverage, as practically impossible, and entirely so, except at several times the value of the alcohol obtained, and, even then, there would remain an exceedingly unpleasant odor in the grain alcohol from the acetate of methyl, which is always contained in larger proportions in commercial wood alcohol, from which it can be freed only by uniting with chloride of calcium, driving off the acetate by heat, dissolving in water, and distilling. This acetate unites readily with grain spirits, and does not vaporize when so united at a temperature lower than the boiling-point of alcohol.

Very truly, yours,

J. P. BARNUM,
Analytical Chemist.

Mr. GOLDSBORO' ROBINSON.

This is to certify that J. P. Barnum is a chemist in this city of good standing and of more than ordinary capacity.

CHARLES D. JACOB, Mayor.

MAYOR'S OFFICE, Louisville, April 11, 1882.

NOTE B.

The following extract from the latest British revenue returns is furnished by Mr. Hill, statistician of the State Department, and the note shows the satisfaction which this legislation gives after a trial of nearly thirty years:

Quantities methylated, (British spirits.)

Years.	England, gallons.	Scotland, gallons.	Ireland, gallons.	United Kingdom, gallons.
1880	1,113,529	472,868	15,480	1,601,877
Increase	111,910	44,314	4,558	160,780

NOTE.—This return is reported satisfactory. Each year shows a steady increase from extended and developed use of methylated spirit in art and manufactory and for domestic use.

Mr. KELLEY. I yield for a moment to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. DEZENDORF,] that he may submit an amendment to be printed in the RECORD, as other amendments have been.

Mr. DEZENDORF. I give notice of the following amendment, which I desire to have printed in the RECORD, as also some remarks in support of it:

That all acts and parts of acts imposing an internal-revenue tax on spirits distilled from apples, peaches, or grapes be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say right here a few words in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. WILLIS.] In the first place let me remark that I sympathize with him most earnestly and ardently in the desire to give free alcohol to the arts. This desire was one of the causes that moved me so long ago as 1868 to impress upon Congress my sense of the importance of legislating with the utmost economy in order to reduce internal taxes with the utmost rapidity.

But, sir, while we maintain a tax on spirits we cannot give free alcohol to the arts any more than we can make leaf tobacco free while imposing taxes upon every form of the manufacture of that leaf. History settles this question. Every nation that taxes distilled spirits has tried to secure to its arts free alcohol. No one of them has succeeded. Alcohol is nature's great solvent. A brush is not more essential to the painter than nature's great solvent is to the arts of a country whose civilization and manufactures are much advanced.

Our spirit tax has reduced the percentage of our total production of alcohol going into the arts from 33, as it was estimated by the best authorities before the imposition of this tax, to 5, as it is estimated now; and the curious fact exists that while our population during the last decade increased more than 11,000,000, and our production of corn increased from 700,000,000 bushels to 1,700,000,000, or over 130 per cent., and while it is true that the spirit tax was collected more closely in 1880 than in 1870, we collected more tax on distilled spirits in the three years preceding the census of 1870 than we did in 1880 and the two preceding years. What, do you ask, has caused this falling off in consumption? The tax has done it. We have had to surrender the production of articles which we exported largely before it was imposed, and as the gentleman from Kentucky said, cheap substitutes, some of which are vile, have been adopted.

Why has no nation been able to make alcohol free while continuing a tax on spirits? Because it has invariably been found that by the experiment so wide a door is opened to frauds upon the revenue that honest payers of the tax on spirits, as well as the Government, were defrauded through this agency intended to be so beneficent.

The gentleman has called attention to the fact that England allows methylated spirits to be used. We can do that; but it would not meet the general demand or even the needs of the gentleman's tobacco trade. It would only reach coarse varnishes, and agents and reagents used where the alcohol is entirely removed does not remain in or pertain to the thing itself. Gentlemen would not want to use tobacco that had the flavor of a skunk's odor; and however beautifully methylated alcohol might bleach the tobacco, it would leave in it the nauseous flavor of the methyl. Hence it is that, in spite of the immense rapidity of the growth in England of the arts requiring alcohol, the amount consumed under the methylated privilege scarcely grows in a decade; indeed at times it declines, and is always relatively insignificant.

What the gentleman said about the economy to the farmer from a reduction of the tax on spirits is true. One bushel of corn will not carry another to the seaboard. But one bushel put into alcohol will carry five to the seaboard. The two bushels sent in bulk, one to pay for the other, are gone from the farm. Those that go into alcohol are left at least in their nutritive and fertilizing substances in the neighborhood of the farm to enrich it and assist in feeding cattle, the statistics of which you will find in the last annual report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

While I regret that we cannot have free alcohol, I am for this bill. I would have added other articles. I would have made a greater reduction of our current revenue. But I shall resist all extraneous amendments. I shall try to get this bill through. I have had referred to the Committee on Ways and Means a bill for the repeal of all taxes on tobacco to take effect January 1, 1884. I believe that when we shall get the official reports at the opening of the next session of Congress we shall find that this will be a safe measure, and that the day is not very remote when we can begin the work of giving free alcohol to the arts by the rapid reduction of the spirit tax. I now yield to my colleague on the committee, my friend from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL.]

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Chairman, some announcements have been made by gentlemen who have spoken, which ought not to escape the attention of the House, and I am certain will not escape the attention of the country. It has been announced by the gentleman who has just taken his seat, [Mr. KELLEY,] as also by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] both members of the Committee on Ways and Means, that they regard this bill as the beginning of a gradual, final, and early repeal of all laws affecting the internal revenue. In my opinion we err exceedingly if we begin, now at least, to repeal all the laws securing our internal revenues. I do not believe that we are now ready to enter upon that kind of reduction. These gentlemen weaken their arguments in support of this bill when they announce that even at the next session of Congress they will seek further reductions.

We have, Mr. Chairman, as yet a very large public debt; and I assure gentlemen of each party that the people of the country are most pleased, on a review of each session of Congress, when they can find that the debt has received some certain reduction. I do not believe that the people of the country desire to perpetuate our national debt. It is unwise to perpetuate it. It should rather be the business of each party in Congress to seek as rapidly as possible an extinguishment of that debt.

It is also true that some delusive statements have been made here in regard to our financial condition even at the present time. There cannot be a surplus of $100,000,000 in the Treasury the next year, or anything very nearly approaching it. The Secretary of the Treasury told us at the beginning of this session that upon estimates for the next fiscal year there would be a surplus of $59,000,000. Yet we are told here by some, speaking quite loosely, that we are to have a surplus of $150,000,000. Others place it at $100,000,000; but I prefer to hold myself to the estimates of the Department, putting it at fifty-nine millions in round numbers. We ought also to remember, when we are asked to act in regard to this bill upon the basis of an overflowing Treasury, that we have appropriated this session far more money, more by tens of millions, than was ever appropriated by any previous session of Congress in a time of peace. Our appropriations will foot up largely beyond the estimates of the Government. Every bill so far passed, or aggregating them at least, has gone away beyond the estimates, and under the estimates of the Government we were to have a surplus of about fifty-nine millions of dollars. It is unsafe to estimate the receipts from customs revenues upon a mere quarterly return, or even upon a return for one-half of the year, because if we look at the receipts from the customs for years past we will discover that they have fluctuated greatly, and circumstances impossible to control have a tendency to lessen by many millions the receipts into the Treasury.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to say to the gentleman that my "loose" statement as to the surplus——

Mr. DUNNELL. I did not use the word "loose" in reference to the gentleman's statement.

Mr. KELLEY. Presented the Treasury figures for the first eleven months of the fiscal year; and the daily receipts since that was made up are in excess of the daily receipts for the same days of last year down to yesterday.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Chairman, I have heard a variety of estimates during this debate, and in using the word "loose," if I did use it, I certainly did not refer to the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I meant to say that there had been statements varying all the way from sixty to one hundred and fifty millions as indicating the surplus in the Treasury. In what I have to say in connection with this matter, I desire rather, therefore, to hold myself to the estimates of the income. If we hold ourselves to the estimates of the expenditures, certainly it is right that we should hold ourselves to the estimates of the receipts into the Treasury; and it should not be forgotten that our pension list is very largely and rapidly on the increase. Only a few years ago, since I have been a member of this House, we appropriated twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, or thirty-one millions of dollars annually for the payment of pensions. Now our bill has swelled to one hundred millions; and nobody has said anything about that deficiency of seventeen millions for pensions which we provided the other day. We will find when we have got through the work of the session that the amount of money appropriated, therefore, under these various bills will largely exceed the estimates; and that the estimated surplus in the Treasury will be correspondingly reduced. Therefore I have said that I did not think it was a safe assumption to act upon the idea that there was to be this great surplus in the Treasury at the end of the year.

Now, the gentleman from Iowa does not, I think, wisely discriminate when he puts the sale of spirits and of tobacco upon the same basis or footing with other classes or branches of business. While he may reason it out in his own mind that it is well to treat the licensed dealers in spirits as you would treat any other business man, it is not in harmony with the sentiments or with the convictions of the people of the country with reference to that traffic. The selling of liquor is not in the interest of the people. It is not for their moral or social development, nor is it for their business prosperity. As long as I remain a member of this House I shall be unwilling to abolish a revenue system that gives us $140,000,000, nearly all of it from spirits and tobacco, and then look about to see where that volume of money can be secured in some other way. Strike down to-day the internal-revenue system, and there is a deficiency at once in the Treasury. Irrespective of party, the people of the country will be unwilling that we should seek a larger income from the customs than we now receive.

But, Mr. Chairman, taking this bill and analyzing it what do you find? It proposes to repeal certain taxes upon banks. Are the banks of the country suffering? Are the banking interests of the country languishing that this legislation is demanded for their relief? If we fail to pass this bill, will a single banking institution in the country fail in its business because of that fact? Will the accumulated wealth of the country be damaged by our failure to repeal the small tax which is now imposed upon that character of capital? We have refused to relieve the classes who are paying the heavy duties laid upon articles of common consumption during a time of war to meet the expenses of the Government. We have said to the consumer of sugar, you shall not have a reduction upon that article, though it be one of prime necessity and universal consumption. We have refused to lift other burdens resting upon the masses of the people. We propose to adjourn, having failed to relieve one single burden of the great mass. We propose to relieve the banks, bankers, and their capital. We propose to relieve those who can best bear this burden, who can bear it far better than those whom we have refused to relieve.

It may be replied to me that the bill repeals the stamp upon matches. Yes, it does this, and also the stamp upon medicines. These clauses I could cheerfully vote for, but to do that my vote must be given for the removal of tax upon bank capital, the reduction of the tax upon cigars, and the license tax upon the dealers in tobacco and cigars.

My prime objection to the pending bill is that it is the beginning of the overthrow of a system of taxation which for the present should be preserved. We now receive $120,000,000 from the tax upon spirits and tobacco. We collect this large sum of money annually upon these two articles. They are classed among the luxuries and should be taxed. They should be taxed so long as the national debt and the annual and necessary expenses of the Government need this amount. We have $450,000,000 of the debt within our reach, payable now at the option of the Government. When this portion of the debt is paid off then we may discuss the question of reduction of this tax, but not the repeal. The tax upon distilled spirits should be held to till the last dollar of the national debt is paid. The pending bill could have my vote if it was not here as the announced forerunner of other bills of reduction and repeal. The readiest advocates of this bill are those gentlemen on this floor who see no burdens in our present tariff laws. They say to me, "Will you not vote to take the cent stamp from matches?" My reply to them is, that "if you will reduce the tariff on sugar but 25 per cent., the buyer of matches will save in a single week, by the sugar reduction, enough to buy matches for a year."

This reduction of $20,000,000 is sought that another reason may be urged for a continuance of the high-tariff rates which now exist. For this reason my vote cannot be given to the pending measure. I will vote to retain our present internal-revenue system until there can be a reduction of the tariff. We collect about $50,000,000 annually upon sugar. I cannot so vote that any excuse can be given for a collection of so much revenue from an article of such prime necessity. Under the privileges allowed me, I shall now make allusion to a measure which passed this House on the 3d of April last.

At the beginning of this session of Congress there was manifest here a fixed purpose to secure a reduction of the tax upon whisky and tobacco. On the 2d of February a bill was introduced into this House to reduce the tax upon whisky from 90 cents per gallon to 50 cents per gallon. This bill was before the Committee on Ways and Means. While this bill was with the committee there was a Republican caucus. It was by the caucus unanimously voted to resist any reduction of the tax upon whisky and tobacco, and it was also unanimously voted to give relief to the holders of distilled spirits by an extension of the period of their bond. When that bill was perfected by striking out all the provisions looking toward a reduction of the tax upon whisky, and beyond every contingency protecting the Government against any and every possible loss of revenue by the extension of time, I was unanimously instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to ask for the passage of the bill. I was designated by the chairman of the committee to report the bill, because I was chairman of the sub-committee having in charge changes in the internal-revenue laws. It was passed by the House on the 3d of April. The bill was therefore with the committee undergoing revisions for sixty days.

In certain quarters, and for certain and not unknown reasons, I have been attacked, as though I was personally in some way more responsible for the passage of this bill than any other member of the House.

I need not here protest against this unjust attack. My opposition to any reduction of the tax upon whisky was well known on this floor. It was as well known to the Committee on Ways and Means. Still I was not then, and am not now, unwilling to treat the holders of spirits as I would the holders of tobacco, provided always the Government could be made secure.

The bill has been discussed and criticised by parties who have seemed utterly ignorant of the absolute security of the Government. The great law of supply and demand has not been at all taken into account as having any place in the practical operation of the proposed extension bill. It has been claimed that because a certain quantity of spirits was to be allowed a longer bonded existence before the payment of the tax that the Government was, therefore, and necessarily, to lose 90 cents on every gallon affected by the bill for extension. It seems to have been forgotten that every gallon of whisky demanded by the arts and appetites of consumers would be supplied. If a portion of the bonded whisky was held back or allowed to remain in bond for a longer period, certainly an equivalent quantity, not affected by the proposed law, would come forward and supply the demand.

Should that bill become a law, the great law of supply and demand would still be in active operation. The Government would not, because of the provisions of the bill or the reliefs furnished by it, lose a single dollar by its passage, for it would get the tax on every gallon consumed, and the consumption would in no sense be affected by any provision of law fixing the payment of the tax when offered for consumption, as the law now is in regard to tobacco. There is no lack of tobacco because the holders of it are not called upon to pay the tax until it enters into consumption.

When Congress in 1878 extended the bonded period from one to three years, it was predicted that the Government would lose the tax on the whisky thus extended, but the record is as follows: the amount collected in 1878 was $44,633,068.70, and in 1879 it was $46,703,036.24, showing an increase of $2,156,466.02. The increase for the next two years was in a still largely increased ratio.

All this talk about the loss of $70,000,000 or any amount by the extension of the bonded period rests in an utter disregard of the absolute protection afforded by the internal-revenue laws, and in a like disregard of the unchanging law of supply and demand. Some gentlemen have reasoned as though there might be a lack of whisky for consumption. The gentlemen need not be alarmed. The Government will get its 90 cents on every gallon consumed. Every gallon will be forthcoming that is called for. There can be no doubt but the supply will be fully up to the demand. Demagogism can be marvelously illogical. The love of detraction can be strangely blind to the laws of trade as well as to the truth.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I desire to ask the attention of the committee a moment to the condition in which the business of this country finds itself at the present time. At no previous period connwithin my recollection have there been so many persons in this try voluntarily refusing to work; in other words, so large a number of usually industrious people engaged in the unprofitable business of strikes. What is the cause of these strikes? Rarely has any attempt been made to reduce wages except in the coal regions. The general demand is for an increase of wages; and the ground upon which this demand is based is that the workingman finds himself unable to support himself and his family with the wages he has been receiving.

I have been personally giving attention to this grievance. It is, as a rule, well founded. The rise in the prices of the necessaries of life during the last year has been so great that the working-people of this country find that they are being reduced from a condition of comparative comfort to one of comparative want. What do we find on the other hand? While this just demand is made by the workmen, the employers of labor are unable to concede it. They would be glad to give higher wages if they had the ability. They refuse because the concession will simply destroy their capital and throw their business into the hands of foreigners who could undersell them in the market. The conflict, then, is one which it is impossible to settle either by the action of employers or employed upon any just form of compromise. Capital and labor are thus arrayed against each other in hostile camps. They are both right in their position, and thus there is no easy ground for compromise. Relief must come from some quarter.

Now, if we can show that there is a heavy hand like the hand of a bandit taking out of the earnings of labor and capital unnecessary contributions, depriving the employer and the employé alike of the returns which each ought to have for his contributions to the joint product; if we can find that there is such a levy made upon the products of industry, and that that levy is unnecessary, then so far as we have any power we should proceed with speed, we should go on the express train, if I may be permitted the expression, on the express train of legislation in order to remove the cause of these evils which are sapping at the very roots of the comfort and peace of our people.

Is there any such removable cause? We are told by the Secretary of the Treasury that more money is coming into the Treasury than should be taken from the pockets of the people; we are told by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] that the surplus of the coming year will be $137,000,000. I have examined the figures, and

I believe he is right, notwithstanding the dissent of the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL.] One hundred and thirty-seven million dollars distributed among the workingmen of this country by not taking it away from them would remove the evil which has brought on all this trouble and all this disorder.

Who is standing here resisting this reduction? We came here in December in the name of the people asking for a reduction of the tariff upon the articles of consumption which the workingmen use. We were referred to a commission which cannot report for months. We come here demanding a reduction of internal-revenue duties, and we are presented with a bill which takes off $17,000,000 or $20,000,000; which "holds out the word of promise to the ear, but breaks it to the hope."

Let any man examine this proposition which the wisdom of the Ways and Means Committee has produced. Whom does it relieve? It does not touch the workingman directly, so far as I can see, except in the single article of matches, of which his consumption is trifling. That is the relief which these gentlemen charged with the responsibility of legislation offer to the workingmen of this country, now on a universal strike because their wages are not sufficient for their support. It is a tub to the whale, intended to deceive. It is a case of false pretenses, insulting to the intelligence of the people.

The demand for reduction has been made. It must be heeded. It will be the issue in the fall election. And yet the Ways and Means Committee bring in a bill and offer us a reduction of $20,000,000 when the Treasury can dispense with $137,000,000. If that is not to be the issue to be fought out in the fall election, let the gentlemen on the other side bring in a bill that will relieve the suffering industry of this country from the burdens which it cannot and ought not to bear.

Mr. SCALES. I yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I am very much obliged to the gentleman from North Carolina, although I am afraid I have not the physical strength to continue the argument I wanted to make. But I will say a few words more, for the House is not likely to hear the words of truth and soberness from any one else who has as intimate relations with the industrial interests of this county, now reduced to a state of comparative chaos.

Let it be understood that this proposition does not dispense with a single office-holder. They are wanted as emissaries, as political missionaries in the coming elections. It does not dispense with an excise man, or a collector, or an inspector, or a detective. The whole system against which the moral sense of this country is to-day rebelling is preserved under this bill. These office-holders are retained in order that they may be assessed for political purposes and political ends; and the workingmen of this country are to go without work, are to starve, are to see their families suffer in order that these gentlemen may collect 2 per cent. on the wretched stipends not only of laborers and pages and women, but of the army of excise men, who are eating out the substance of the land.

What does the public sentiment demand? The utter abolition of this whole system. The utter and absolute repeal of these internal and infernal taxes under which an army of placemen are kept patrolling up and down this country and checking the honest expression of independent political sentiment.

But gentlemen on the other side tell you that you cannot repeal these internal-revenue taxes without depriving the Treasury of the money necessary to pay the pensions and the interest and the expenses of the Government. I answer them that it is not only possible but easy for an intelligent man to devise a tariff system which will produce very nearly money enough for all the legitimate purposes of the Government; and for any additional amount required, a judicious system of stamps and of taxes upon the capacity for distilling spirits will be quite adequate to make up any deficiency in the regular normal expenditures of this Government. Thus the whole army of internal-revenue officials will be discharged.

But such a system will not permit of the raising of money for jobs. It will not permit the passage of river and harbor bills involving $17,000,000. It will not permit the payment of large sums of money for finishing worthless vessels on the stocks.

There is but one security for the tax-payer, who is the workingman of the country, for all Federal taxes come at last down on his broad shoulders. That security is to keep the Treasury poor. Poverty of the Treasury is the wealth of the people.

Let the Treasury have all that it needs for the legitimate expenses of the Government; and then the money wrung from the hard labor of the working people of this country will be expended with a just sense of the responsibility which we have here as their representatives, and which in this Congress we are violating day after day, by taking the money that ought to be left in the pockets of the people and applying it to worthless and useless works, which we miscall works of public utility.

I appeal to these gentlemen on the other side—not because it would not be for the interest of the Democratic party that they should go on and spend money in this reckless way, for it is for our interest politically that they should do it; but that is a motive which no intelligent man who has any claim to the title of statesman and is fit to sit on this floor should recognize for a moment—I appeal to them to reduce expenditures and take the load of taxes off the overburdened energies of our hard-working people, and thus restore to them the margin of earnings which make up all the difference between comfort and want.

But if we do this some one will cry out, "How is the national debt to be paid?" The people of this country, those engaged in business and largely borrowers of money at rates ranging from 6 to 12 per cent. per annum, do not want the debt paid off all at once when the Government can fund it at 3 per cent. There is no antagonism of interests between the Government and the tax-paxers of this country. If the debt is liquidated in the life-time of this generation, which is thirty years, the people will be satisfied. The difference between the current rate of interest paid by individuals and that paid by the Government will pay the principal of the debt off in less than thirty years. What we want, what the interest of the people demands, is that the annual payment of principal shall be so moderate as not to press too severely on the annual earnings of the nation.

To pay off $100,000,000 a year is an imposition on our productive energies too heavy to be borne, and we are to-day paying the penalty of excessive taxation. The Federal taxes are all taxes on consumption. They come in an insidious form and are not perceived, and yet the workingmen of this country eat nothing, drink nothing, wear nothing, use nothing which does not pay a tax into the national Treasury. The eyes of the people will be opened by the suffering which is now beginning to spread over the country, and the day of reckoning is not far off for the party which, having the power, refuses to reduce taxation, when there is a surplus in the Treasury, on the plea that the national debt must be paid at once, and at a time when every dollar of principal thus paid is taken from the earnings of those who find it impossible "to make both ends meet." The country demands a rest from excessive taxation, and in this case "the voice of the people is the voice of God."

Mr. SCALES addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the Committee on Ways and Means have reached a very unsatisfactory result in reporting this bill to the House. The country certainly expected of this Congress some material reduction of internal taxation at least, and expected it in a form which would reach and relieve the industries of the country. This bill does not and will not in any degree meet public expectation.

I think, Mr. Chairman, it is quite clear the Government can safely reduce taxation. The payment of the public debt promptly, but in such a manner as not to oppress the industries of our people, is certainly a matter of the highest moment. Four hundred and ninety million dollars of that debt is under our control, we are at liberty to pay it at our pleasure; and it seems to me to be the very highest duty of the Government to see that that four hundred and ninety millions is extinguished at the earliest possible moment.

In my judgment the extinguishment of the public debt for reasons innumerable is of the very highest importance to the people of this country. But a large portion of the debt is not within our reach, and the payment of it will have to be postponed; but with a large sum of "available cash" in the Treasury, and the large current increase in the revenues, this $490,000,000 must speedily disappear.

Not less important than the extinguishment of the public debt is such a reduction of the revenue as will compel Congress to abandon the countless schemes of questionable and unjustifiable expenditure now being forced upon it on the plea of an overflowing Treasury. I do not know which is the greater evil, a public debt or an overflowing Treasury, although the one operates directly on the other; the existence of a public debt is an ever-present excuse for an overflowing Treasury and for heavy exactions on the industries of the people, while a full Treasury always stimulates the use of the public money beyond the real wants of the Government. I do not know which is the greater evil, but I would rather see the Government cramped for means than a full Treasury open to pillage.

There is at least one element of taxation to which our people are subjected which affects all classes of men. It has been very well presented by my friend from North Carolina, [Mr. SCALES.] The tax on tobacco realized last year the sum of $42,854,991.31, and affects in a greater or less degree a large number of the States of the Union. In my judgment it is far better to abolish the tax on a given article than simply to reduce it. If you only reduce the tax on tobacco the reduced cost to the consumer will be scarcely appreciable, while the army of Government employés engaged in gathering in that tax and the cost of the system will remain in full force and unchanged. If you abolish it entirely you dismiss from your employment nearly one half of the great army of revenue agents who live off of the Treasury. But the tax on tobacco is one that affects an absolute necessity of human life.

There is no use in talking about it as simply a luxury, as a thing that may be dispensed with. The supreme court of my own State in an elaborate opinion, in interpreting the law prohibiting the exercise of ordinary employments on Sunday except in cases of charity or necessity, held in regard to tobacco that its use to a large portion of mankind had become a necessity of human life; not that human life could not be prolonged without it, for exactly the reverse is probably true, but it has so entered into the habits and methods, mental as well as physical, of men through so many ages that it has become one of the necessary things incident to human life. That opinion has been overruled recently, but that such a judicial opinion could be rendered answers the purpose of my argument. Tobacco may be injurious to the human system and all that, but it is a solace to the poor as well as a source of consolation to labor, and indeed to men under all conditions of life. I cannot excuse or justify this universal use of tobacco; I but state the facts. The universality of its use is a forcible argument. So much for the consumer.

But, sir, a large body of our people are engaged in the production of this important staple, and that industry is the only productive industry of agriculture that is hedged in and embarrassed by our internal taxation. Indeed it is the industry connected with the soil that is subject to the police vigilance of the Government. Hamilton, in the Federalist, said "The genius of the people will ill brook the inquisitive and peremptory spirit of excise laws." But here the farmer who cultivates tobacco in the field is subject to a most exasperating espionage and vigilance of a mercenary horde. He can only sell the fruits of his labor to persons who are licensed by the Government to purchase. There is no excuse for the further continuance of this wholly un-American system. The necessity has gone by. Our fathers deplored even at the formation of the Government the necessity for an excise tax with its horde of informers. The whole system hedges in the citizen and exasperates his manhood, but no feature of it is so exasperating as this tax on tobacco. Besides this the tax is unequal; an inferior article is taxed as high as the most costly.

It is a source of humiliation that the American citizen engaged in the ordinary employment of an agriculturist, raising a common product of the field, should be hedged in by public employés, and compelled to seek a dealer licensed by the Government to whom he may sell the product of his labor or undergo fine and imprisonment. I think, however much our citizens heretofore condemned other features of our internal-revenue system, none is so oppressive, none is so thoroughly un-American as the tax we impose upon tobacco, for this subject of taxation must be followed from the field of the farmer to the hands of the consumer.

I believe that this tax ought to be abolished. I am well convinced that it can be removed without any possible embarrassment to this Government, with an enormous reduction of the public employés. The revenues for the coming fiscal year are estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury at $400,000,000. The current expenses of the Government ought not to exceed $275,000,000, including $100,000,000 for pensions, and putting the interest on the public debt at $65,000,000, and it will be much less than that, leaving $110,000,000 for the current expenditures of the Government. Two hundred and seventy-five million dollars is the largest sum that can be honestly spent by the Government of the United States at this time; indeed, the $110,000,000 in addition to the pensions and interest is beyond the limits of economical government.

On that basis if you strike off the tax on tobacco you will leave over $83,000,000 to be applied to the annual extinguishment of the public debt; but it is claimed the revenues on the present basis of taxation will greatly exceed $400,000,000. It can be readily seen that the $490,000,000 of debt that is now under our control will be paid off and extinguished at an early moment, especially when it is remembered what a large sum there is now in your Treasury, and steadily accumulating, which can be applied for that purpose.

Mr. WELLBORN. What does the tax on tobacco now amount to?

Mr. HOLMAN. A fraction over $42,000,000.

Mr. WHITE. The expense of collection must come out of that.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, and it is a large item; but what is there in this bill? Does it relieve any industry? Does it tend to relieve any laboring man in America? Does it tend to relieve any productive industry from taxation?

I present here a table showing the sources of the internal revenue, amounting in the aggregate to $135,229,912.30:

INTERNAL REVENUES.

Spirits	$67,153,974 88
Tobacco and cigars	42,854,991 31
Fermented liquors	13,700,241 21
Banks and bankers	3,762,208 07
Bank checks	2,253,411 20
Friction matches	3,278,580 62
Patent medicines	1,843,263 90
Penalties	231,078 21
Collections not otherwise provided for	152,162 90
	135,229,912 30

Only the two sums of bank tax above named are collected as internal revenue; the balance of the $11,383,502.41 (tax on deposits and capital) is paid direct into the Treasury.

This bill singles out virtually three items: banks, matches, and patent medicines, perfumery, &c., and proposes to relieve them from taxation. The subjects to be relieved and the amount of tax derived from these sources last year are as follows:

TAX ON BANKS OTHER THAN NATIONAL BANKS.

Bank deposits	$2,946,906 64
Bank capital	811,006 35
	3,757,912 99
Tax on national banks, bank capital, and deposits	5,372,178 22
Bank checks of all kinds	2,253,411 20
Total tax on banks	11,383,502 41
Friction matches	3,278,580 62
Patent medicines, perfumery, &c	1,843,263 90

The tax on matches and patent medicines is a small item; whether it is paid or not will not affect the price of matches and patent medicines. No consumer of these articles will be benefited. But it is proposed by the bill to take off $11,383,502.41 from the banks. Is there any occupation in this country that can bear moderate taxation so well as the banks? Can this Government afford to confer upon a portion of its citizens invaluable and perpetual franchises which yield an interest of from 9½ to 10 per cent. on all forms of capital employed annually in the form of dividends, and which have accumulated a surplus fund of $128,000,000 in a comparatively short period of time—exempt from all taxation by the United States except 1 per cent. on circulation? Can you afford to give such franchises to a portion of your citizens and create in the very nature of things a monopoly, and relieve those franchises from taxation, while taxing heavily the products of the farm? Here are franchises, Federal and State, employing an aggregate capital of $549,991,359, paying a mere bagatelle into the Treasury, and that must be removed even, while industries of the farm must be taxed.

The CHAIRMAN. The ten minutes of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOLMAN. One word in addition. I warn gentlemen that in dealing with this question of taxation, if they think proper to favor great capital interests without relieving the producing interests of the country, they will outrage the public sentiment of the great body of our people, and will receive sooner or later an indignant rebuke.

Mr. CABELL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] for his courtesy, but it will be impossible in the short time I have to make such an argument as I would like to submit to the House upon this bill. Under the circumstances I am sorry the bill has been brought in, as its discussion will have a tendency to unsettle business, and its passage will result in no appreciable good.

This is indeed a great outcome of the labors of the Ways and Means Committee. Months ago relief was promised to the people. It was understood that some at least of the burdens of taxation were to be lifted. What relief, I ask, is offered to the country by this bill? What classes of people, what interests are to be relieved? Who are to be benefited, and what public purposes are to be subserved by the repeal of the taxes here indicated?

This bill proposes to take the tax off of banks, banking capital, bank checks, bank deposits, matches, patent medicines, &c., and to reduce taxation to a very small extent upon cigars and cigarettes, and the license taxes of certain persons. In fact, only to reduce taxation to the extent of something over $16,000,000.

Two or three of the great industrial interests of the country are languishing and borne down by the pressure of the internal-tax system. Hundreds and thousands of the American people are to-day groaning under the burdens imposed by this distasteful, not to say iniquitous, method of taxation, yet no relief is proposed for those interests or people.

Are the banks, which are so amply provided for in this bill, the capitalists to whom you propose relief to the extent of some $11,000,000, so wretchedly aggrieved that you must hasten to assist them before and in preference to the toiling thousands who stagger along under the miserable loads imposed by this unsavory system?

I supposed, and most good men believe with me, I am sure, that the banking corporations of the country, with all their capital, advantages, immunities, and profits were the fittest subjects of just taxation to be found in the land. But these, it seems, our committee are of opinion should be cared for before the interests of the general public can be regarded.

I have no purpose to assail the banks or the proper employment of their capital. I am not opposed to relieving them in common with others. I rather favor the clause in this very bill which takes the stamp-tax from checks, for that goes to the relief of the people, and ofttimes very poor people; but I object to the proposition to relieve banks, bank capital, &c., unless you couple with it equal measures of relief to the agricultural and producing classes of the country, whose interests are so deeply involved and so heavily taxed.

Why did not the Ways and Means Committee bring in here a bill which would in equal proportion relieve all persons, classes, and interests? That might easily have been done. Why this apparent favoritism? Why this discrimination? If of necessity difference and discrimination had to be exercised, why in the name of common reason was not that difference and discrimination used in behalf of the persons, subjects, and interests, the most heavily taxed, and the least able to bear large burdens? All these taxes are bad enough, but who knows of, cares about, or feels the tax on matches? Repeal that tax, and no human in this country will get even the slightest relief from it save three or four match manufacturers in some of the large cities. Repeal the tax on patent medicines if you choose, and who will get the benefit but the sellers of the pill and the venders of the nostrum? Yet you are asked to relieve those piddling interests in preference to those other and greater interests which suggest themselves without being named.

Again, Mr. Chairman, if we pass this bill without providing at the same time for the release from taxation of other subjects, in what a dilemma will we find ourselves!

There are those here who, in spite of the facts, contend that the financial condition of the Government will not permit any greater reduction of taxes than that now offered. Many of us do not agree to that. We think we know better. But if, under the circumstances, we pass this bill, we in all probability will lose for the future the sympathy and assistance of those who, being equally burdened, would esteem it a privilege and a duty to help us, and besides put a new argument in the mouths of our opponents, who would contend that the pretended relief already granted, was all that the Government could afford, its financial condition considered.

Yes, sir, pass this bill, and at once the cry will go up that great relief has been given the country. "Nearly $17,000,000 taxes have been taken off," they will say, "and no more can be spared." Yet the fact will remain that not one particle of relief will be afforded to the overburdened interests of a suffering people.

If the Ways and Means Committee really desired to do something of benefit, something of practical use to the people, why did they not include in their bill a proposition to relieve the great tobacco interests of the country? There is not one reason why this should not have been done, except that it does not suit the purposes of the Republican party to abolish or reduce that taxation which bears so heavily upon the great staple of a few only of the States of the Union.

We are told that the Treasury is overflowing with money. Yet we know that the people have been sorely pressed, and in some sections the cry for "bread!" "bread!" has rent the air. Why only to-day the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] told us that his Committee on Ways and Means was early notified from the Treasury Department that Government receipts had so multiplied that important reductions in taxation could be made.

The chairman of the committee [Mr. KELLEY] a day or two ago, in a spirit of gratulation, spoke of the large surplus in the Treasury, and we all know that at the rate money is being daily gathered in there will be a surplus of from one hundred and fifty to two hundred million dollars in the Treasury by 1st January next. Yet, with all their troubles upon them, after all their patience and long suffering, the people are asked to be content with a reduction of taxes to the paltry sum and beggarly extent of $17,000,000, and that reduction, too, to be made upon subjects and persons the best able to bear burdens and the least entitled to relief.

Mr. Chairman, if we have the surplus money mentioned—ay, if we have only one-half of it—cannot Congress afford to make much greater concessions to the people than those offered by this bill? If you fail in this, what will the tax-ridden people of this country, who have been so long looking to Congress for aid, think? What will they have a right to say when they "ask of you bread and you give them a stone?" Think you that they are not aware that not less than $400,000,000 will be poured into the Treasury this very year? Do you believe they will not realize that nothing but unwarranted extravagance can dissipate that great sum, if a considerable part of it is not applied to the reduction of taxation; and can you imagine that they will not hold the Republican majority in Congress to account for failing to give the needed relief when it was so easy of accomplishment? As sure as you live the people are not ignorant spectators of what is transpiring here.

Mr. Chairman, since the Republican caucus in March last, wherein it was determined that there should be no reduction of taxes upon either tobacco or spirits, I have had but little hope of relief in regard to those two great interests. But this bill has been thrust in here and we feel compelled to ask that it be amended, and in the name of the people that relief be afforded. Why, sir, Congress could to-day, if so disposed, wipe out this entire system of internal taxation without detriment to the interests of the Government. It ought to be wiped out. It was inaugurated during the war with the promise that its intolerable features and odious exactions would be abolished upon the return of peace, but still after years have gone by—after the "sword has been turned into the plow-share" and the "spear into the pruning-hook"—seventeen years after the return of peace, and when prosperity should have been restored to the country, this miserable system has been allowed to remain, an offense to the people and a reproach to the Government.

When first inaugurated from fifteen to twenty million dollars were gathered in annually. That was deemed enough to take of the people then, enough even when the needs of the Government were very great. But as time went by the exactions were increased from year to year, until now, in a time of profound peace, the rapacious system extorts from the people from one hundred and thirty to one hundred and thirty-five million dollars annually, and the greater part drawn from two subjects only—tobacco and spirits.

Tobacco alone paid last year $42,000,000. This year it will pay $44,000,000, not less. Tobacco is the only agricultural product taxed by the Government. No other interest is so fearfully burdened, and none other so exposed to danger from the vicissitudes of trade, change, and misfortune.

Why this unjust discrimination against the staple product of certain sections of the country? Is the exaction grounded in justice or law? You say that your tax is upon consumption. It is upon production as well. You tax it as a luxury. Fine tobacco is indeed a luxury, but it is none the less a necessity, to the hundreds of thousands who grow it, and who from its proceeds buy the clothes they wear and much of the food they eat. It is mockery of the people who raise and manufacture this great product to tax it under the pretext that it is either a "noxious weed" or a luxury.

The tax affects not only the consumer, but the manufacturer and farmer. The great burden of the tax, for many reasons that might be named, falls upon the producer. Not only the weight of the tax but the continual dread of change of tax rate affects the price of the article, and the consequent prosperity of all those engaged either in buying, selling, or raising tobacco. Unfortunately, so long as the tax exists the subject of its change, modification, or repeal will be agitated to the great damage of all interested.

Therefore, we insist now upon the abolition of the tax. For Heaven's sake let us get rid of it quickly and in such way as not to injure any, either the Government or people. The Government with its ample means and resources can pay its ordinary expenses, yearly curtail its debts, meet its interest, pension, and other obligations, abolish this tax, and still have large moneys left. Virginia, since the late war, has paid more than $90,000,000 internal taxation into the Federal Treasury. Surely it is time to "let up" in some degree upon that old State, as well as others.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a word in regard to the tax upon distilled spirits. I know the prejudice that exists in many portions of this country against the traffic in and the production of ardent spirits. I know, moreover, that it is useless to endeavor to persuade a majority of this House to pass an act to abolish the spirit tax. I shall make no such attempt. I will briefly discuss it, however, and speak to the question not from its moral but from its revenue stand-point.

I assert, Mr. Chairman, without fear of successful contradiction, that if the tax upon whisky were reduced to 50 cents per gallon, and that upon liquors distilled from fruits to 25 cents per gallon, the Government would yearly realize more revenue from the spirit tax than it does now. Since 1862 the tax has ranged from $2 to 50 cents per gallon; the tax rate has been changed about six times, and in almost every instance an increase of revenue has followed a decrease of tax, and a decrease of revenue an increase of tax. It has been clearly demonstrated that the true revenue point of taxation upon whisky is certainly not above but rather below 50 cents. There is a marked difference between the price and value of spirits distilled from fruits and whisky, therefore the former should be taxed at a lower rate. This is apparent from the fact that notwithstanding the immense quantities of the finest fruits raised by our mountain people of the South and West which will not bear transportation, and which under reasonable rules and taxes they would distill into spirits, but small quantities, comparatively speaking, are in fact distilled, and the Government from that source only realizes about one and one-half million dollars. There is no doubt that if this last named tax was reduced to 25 cents per gallon, the Government would annually get three times as much from it as now. The statistics in regard to the spirit tax not only bear me out in my views in reference to reduction but I will name a striking illustration of my theory.

Two or three years ago, when the movement was on foot to reduce the tobacco tax, Mr. SHERMAN, then Secretary of the Treasury, sent a letter to Congress, accompanied by statistics and arguments from his subordinates, opposing the reduction of the tax, and endeavoring to show that if the tax were reduced from 24 to 16 cents, as we then proposed, a loss of $11,000,000 of revenue would at once and annually ensue. Gentlemen will remember that I and a few others denied that any such result would follow reduction, and after much labor we carried it. Instead of loss, a gain of $2,131,000 the first year resulted to the Government from the change and reduction of the tax, and yearly since the increase has been large and important. In short, more revenue by $4,000,000 was derived from tobacco last year taxed at 16 cents than was ever collected in any other year from the same source, whether taxed at 24 cents or higher.

Now, why should not the same results follow a reduction of the spirit tax? I am confident they will follow. Reduce your tax. Take off many of the restrictions thrown around business by your revenue system. Put better men than we have had to enforce the laws. Deal with the people as if they were law-abiding citizens, as they desire to be, not as if they were outlaws, and the Government will get much more revenue, and a much better state of things generally will prevail. Moreover, Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is longer the interest of the Government to crush out the small distillers of the country, to the benefit and advantage of the larger ones. Many of us know that the great distillers of the country—men who can command large means—care not how high the tax is placed. They not only can use their capital to advantage in this business but they can also avail themselves of the bonded warehouse system, which poor men cannot do, and as the small men are driven out of business by the weight of the tax and want of facilities these capitalists enter upon and occupy the field without fear of loss or competition.

Mr. Chairman, before I close I wish to present for consideration an amendment which I propose to offer to this bill:

That on and after January 1, 1883, all internal-revenue taxes upon manufactured tobacco, cigars, and snuff shall be abolished, and upon all manufactured tobacco contained in original and unbroken packages, and undisposed of to consumers upon which tax stamps have been affixed, there shall at the time aforesaid be allowed in favor of the owners of said tobacco a rebate to the amount and value of the stamps so affixed; and that after the date aforesaid the tax upon whisky shall be reduced to fifty cents per gallon, and that upon liquors distilled from fruits to twenty-five cents per gallon.

If that amendment or something like it is adopted, I can vote for the bill. Otherwise I cannot. I have no desire to see taxes imposed upon any subjects, sections, or persons. In fact, I say I desire the abolition of this whole internal-tax system, but I am unwilling to see grinding and oppressive taxation left upon products in which the people of my own section are so deeply interested while others are to be relieved. Let us have "a fair deal." Let justice be done all around, and I will be content. The Government can well afford to do all that I have suggested, thereby giving great and permanent relief to the country. I am sure that this (the Democratic) side of the House will support my own or similar propositions. If the Republican majority here will not do so, then their refusal to abolish or reduce taxation will be inquired of by the country and remembered by the people as to them may seem best.

Mr. SPARKS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. ARMFIELD.]

Mr. ARMFIELD. Mr. Chairman, anxious as I am on all occasions to strike at the internal-revenue system, which so oppresses my people, and to destroy it if I could, or, if I cannot destroy it, to wound it and mitigate its oppressions, yet, as this bill now stands before the House without amendments, I cannot vote for it, because I believe it will prove a delusion and a snare to all who desire to get rid of the present system of internal taxation. Making a reduction of something over $20,000,000, as this bill does, more than $12,000,000 of this is given to the banks and the balance is thrown as a sop to the consumers of friction matches and proprietary medicines and to the liquor dealers. No great laboring industry is relieved to the amount of one farthing: and above all not a single one of the vast army of internal-revenue officers is to be deposed, but the ponderous machine is to be run as before. I should like to relieve the banks and their customers of these taxes, and to take the tax off friction matches and proprietary medicines, but it seems to be the object of the party now in power, on the one hand, to invent means for depleting the Treasury and expending the surplus revenues of the country as rapidly as possible, and on the other hand to make slight reductions in the internal-revenue taxes, where they are least burdensome, such as are proposed in this bill, so that we shall soon arrive at the point where there will be no surplus revenue. By taking off some $18,000,000 or $20,000,000 of internal taxation, coupled with the largely increased expenditures which have been inaugurated in this Congress for river and harbor improvements, for public buildings, and for other purposes, they will be able to tell us—probably early in the next session—that we can go no farther in the direction of lightening taxation, either by a reform of the tariff or by a reduction of internal-revenue taxes, because all the moneys derived from both will be needed for the wants of the Government. An overflowing Treasury, as we were long ago warned by General Jackson, and as we are fully admonished by experience long passed and quite recent, becomes a hot-bed of corruption, that breeds innumerable schemes for squandering the people's money, and especially is this the case when, as now, the party in control of the Government finds that the only way of perpetuating their cherished system of protection by the tariff, by which they enrich their friends at the expense of the labor of the country, and an equally cherished internal-revenue system, is by unloading the Treasury by the cartful.

Mr. Chairman, as I have but five minutes I have not time to go into the enormous wrongs and oppressions of the internal-revenue system, especially with reference to its workings in the southern part of the country; and although I have offered an amendment which proposes to take the tax off of whisky and brandy and malt liquors on the 1st of January next, which I expect to vote for myself if it shall be allowed to come to a vote, and also expect to vote for an amendment offered by my colleague from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] to remove the tax on tobacco, yet I am free to confess that I have but little hope of either of these amendments being accepted by this committee, for the internal-revenue system is the favorite child of the Republican party. It furnishes an army of office-holders, of spies, deputy marshals, informers, to go all over the country and electioneer for that party, and furnishes means in the southern country for bribing and corrupting the constituencies.

I do not believe that they intend to remedy this evil; but I have offered another amendment for which I have more hope, and believe it will meet the approval of the committee. That amendment is this: as the law now stands, when a distiller is accused of a violation of the internal-revenue law, the revenue officers go and seize his whole establishment, taking the distiller and the fixtures and all the brandy or whisky that may be found on hand, which is confiscated to the use of the United States Government. Usually this seizure breaks up and ruins the man entirely. It destroys the little home of his wife and children and leaves him not a cent for the support of his family, while the fact that he is accused of a violation of the revenue law is by no means indubitable evidence of his guilt. On the contrary, he is often innocent or guilty only of a technical offense, arising from ignorance or from wrong instructions from revenue officers themselves. But the internal-revenue spy that traverses the country knows that his employment depends upon an assumed zeal in the service and the discovery of real or supposed violators of the law. It matters very little to him whether the party whom he sees proper to accuse be guilty or innocent; he simply desires to show his fitness for the position he occupies. His very vocation depends upon these seizures, and even where there is no wrong they make the seizures to keep up their vocation.

The fact, then, that a man is accused is, as I have said, no evidence of his guilt; and, I am sorry to say, nor is the fact that he is innocent much protection in the courts. He cannot afford, broken up as he is by the seizure, insolvent as he must be in consequence of the destruction of his little all, to traverse the hundreds of miles which sometimes intervene between him and the Federal court, and take his witnesses with him, and employ a lawyer to attend to his case, and attend the court from term to term until his cause comes on for trial. In nine cases out of ten he believes it best to submit rather than undertake a defense which if successful is ruin. Now, when the revenue officers seize spirits the law requires that it shall be sold for not less than the tax, and in the first instance that all tax due to the Government shall be paid out of the proceeds. Then the law, as it is construed by the Internal Revenue Department, charges a full tax also upon the man to whom it belongs on his bond, usually to be paid by the sureties. This is imposing two taxes upon the same article. My amendment proposes that where liquors are seized in this manner they shall be sold for an amount not less than the tax due to the Government; in other words, that the Government shall be paid all that may be due to it, and secondly that no tax shall be levied upon the owner for the spirits on which the Government has already received the tax once. It ought not to have the tax twice for the same article. If the man be guilty of anything, he is sufficiently punished by prosecution, fine, and imprisonment. Therefore, I say there is nothing but simple justice in the amendment, and that it should be adopted, as I hope it will be.

Mr. SPARKS, of Illinois. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MCMILLIN.]

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I have offered an amendment to this bill to strike out that portion which proposes to free the banks from taxation, and hope it will be adopted. They are, contrary to the best interests of the masses of the people, permitted to issue about three hundred millions of the paper currency kept in circulation. This is nearly one-half. The Government pays $3,000,000 annually interest on the bonds held as security for this circulation, and I am not willing while this is so to free them from all the burdens of Government and leave them on the poor, the debt-ridden, or the oppressed. Neither the States, counties, nor municipalities can tax their bonds, and if we obey their behests and release them from Government tax we leave them with all the blessings of Government without contributing to its support.

Sir, is this the best the Ways and Means Committee can do in the way of relief to the oppressed of the country? A short time ago they came in and asked the appointment of a tariff and tax commission, and promised unspeakable blessings from it. The tariff-commission bill was in an evil hour passed. In the discussion of the measure we were told by protectionists that the laboring-man had been wonderfully blessed by protection. And lo! before the President could appoint men on the commission 100,000 laborers were on a strike. We do not propose by this bill relief for these laborers, but for the banker, who now pays as little tax as any one in the country in proportion to his wealth.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] has offered an amendment which I trust will be adopted. It provides for the repeal of all laws which prevent the producer of tobacco from selling to whom he pleases. In other words, it is to repeal the law imposing a $500 tax on retail dealers in leaf tobacco. It would not reduce the revenue more than $5,000 a year. There are only five of these retail leaf dealers in the United States—one in Tennessee, one in Missouri, one in South Carolina, and two others. I have introduced a bill for the purpose myself, and think it should pass.

Sir, it is insisted that this should be kept up to enable the Revenue Department to trace all tobacco and detect illicit dealing in it. This is no sufficient reason. It does not do the work, if so intended. There is a tax on whisky; and yet the Government does not tax the sale of the corn out of which it is made to detect illicit distilling. Nor is any tax placed on the privilege of dealing in hops used in making taxed beer, to trace illicit beer. Tobacco is the only farm product which the producer cannot sell except to a licensed dealer. Let us adopt this amendment and free it from legislative shackles.

Sir, in regard to matches I unhesitatingly say that I am not only willing but anxious to take the tax off. But I am not willing, with the lights now before me, to release the banks of nearly twelve millions of tax to get rid of two millions on matches.

Mr. Chairman, the draft of this bill, as it comes from the Committee on Ways and Means, and the action of the House that is demanded upon it, reminds me of an event which passed into history a few years ago. It will be remembered that while the war was raging one of the grandest vessels constructed by the then Confederate States was built in Mobile Bay. When it was completed it was found that the vessel drew about four feet more water than was on the bar over which it was to pass. With the ingenuity that characterized those who constructed that magnificent vessel, which like the corsairs of old "walked the waters like a thing of life, and seemed to dare the elements to strife," the builder went to work to raise the vast engine of war over the bar and float it into deep water. They constructed great floats under the sides of the vessel artfully, and lifted it bodily four feet out of the water and thus carried it safely over the obstruction which lay in its path.

The Committee on Ways and Means, anxious to do something more for the corporate wealth, and anxious to relieve those from taxes who are now burdened least, put into this bill a boon to float the structure that was about to sink. The committee proposes to relieve the banks from their taxation. What is the boon with which they attempt to float the sinking craft? Here is a bill proposing to reduce the revenue $23,000,000. More than eleven and a quarter millions of it, nearly or quite one-half, is for the benefit of the banks. And for the purpose of making the bill float—for carrying it over the legislative bar—like the builders of the confederate ram of old, they put in the little article of friction matches, paying some $3,278,000. I venture the prediction that there is not sufficient in that boon to float this safely over the shoals. Like the other action of Congress for twenty years, this would give help where there is the least need for it. Your income tax yielded sixty-odd millions of dollars a year. It was levied upon people who had money and wealth and were most able to pay. One man in the United States has fifty millions of bonds, and that fifty millions is not taxed in fifty years as much as one poor freedman, whom you pretend to love, is taxed when he strikes a single match.

The next to be helped are the banks. I say let us help those who are most ground down first. There are fewer banks fail, both national banks and deposit banks, than corporations of any kind engaged in other business; and yet with that love "which passeth all understanding" our friends on the other side are going to relieve them; and in order to relieve them, they are willing that the tax should be taken off matches—less than $3,000,000—and that the tax on dealers in spirits shall be reduced. But they do not propose to dispense with a single officer; not one.

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Chairman, there is a class of people in this country who believe in debt. There are men who believe that a national debt is a blessing to the nation which owes it. I am not of that class. I believe that nations as well as individuals are more prosperous when they so conduct their affairs as to be out of debt, and have the ability always to meet the obligations upon them out of their annual receipts in the Treasury. Were that done in our country I think we would have greater economy in the administration of government, and a more prosperous and contented people.

There are men on this floor (perhaps a majority) who desire the adjustment of our tariff taxes in such shape as to continue the present enormous debt that the nation owes for the purpose of having it utilized in the interest of the moneyed classes. I have no sympathy whatever with men entertaining such sentiments. I want to raise all the revenue that we can legitimately and fairly, without being too burdensome to the people, and to utilize it in the payment of the debt and get rid of it.

The revenues derived through the internal-revenue laws, I am told, will at the end of the present fiscal year aggregate in the gross about one hundred and fifty million dollars, which, with the ordinary receipts from customs and otherwise, will give a surplus of one hundred to one hundred and fifty million dollars. This surplus I would take and pay on the debts that we owe; and in doing so would act on the line of conduct that an ordinarily sagacious business man would act upon in the transaction of his private business. But there is no disposition to do that here. Because we have a large surplus in the Treasury there seems to be a disposition on the part of many gentlemen to squander it by extravagant appropriations for needless improvements, and in many cases for purposes and objects of no earthly utility for the public. The last thing that they seem to think of is the payment of the debt.

Now, sir, while I feel the present necessity of a large governmental income for the purposes that I have just indicated, the payment of the Government debt as its bonds mature and are subject to payment, I also feel that a more pressing necessity exists with respect to the best means of attaining that end by the use of such means as will impose the least burdens on the people; and to do this I would adopt that system of taxation which most fairly and equitably distributes the burden upon all according to their respective interests in it and their ability to bear it.

In my judgment the fairest system of taxation that could primarily have been adopted for national taxation is the direct system, which is now and ever has been the favored method resorted to by the several States and counties and municipalities throughout the country. But this plan, though just of itself, and one which would have left commerce unshackled and made "trade free," could not be adopted for national purposes under the clause of the Constitution apportioning "direct taxes" upon the basis of population. Hence Congress from the beginning has adopted the "indirect" or tariff system, which is a tax on imported commodities.

This system, when adjusted and carried out in the spirit of the Constitution, is, in my judgment, not only amply sufficient to give all needed revenues for the Government but is the most equitable and just to the whole people which can be devised under the restriction clause of the Constitution just mentioned.

This system, however, to accomplish its just purpose of giving all needed revenue to meet any and all demands of Government and be equitable and just to all, must be adjusted upon the basis of raising revenue, and for that purpose alone; for when it departs from this purpose and attempts to discriminate in favor of particular classes or industries it begets injustice and fosters monopoly, and, that which is equally obnoxious, it defeats the ends of Government by so "protecting" favored classes as to "prohibit" imports and deprive it of obtaining its needed revenues. This is well exemplified by the "protective" duties on blankets, flannels, and other woolen goods, as well as iron and other manufactures, on which nearly 100 per cent. of duty is levied, and upon which with a fair rate millions would be derived to the Treasury. But with this enormous duty upon them imports are "prohibited" and nothing derived.

But, sir, our present consideration is "internal revenue." Of all the systems of taxation known to this country it is the most odious. It is not in any fair sense a "direct tax," levied upon wealth and fairly distributed throughout the country, and justly and equitably borne by the whole people; but, on the contrary, is an odious excise fastened upon certain productions and industries which are specially discriminated against, while all others are relieved from the onerous exactions and annoyances which it imposes upon its victims.

An indispensable part of this odious tax is an army of detectives and spies scattered all over the country, prying into the private life and daily business transactions of the people. To freemen there is nothing so obnoxious and galling as this. To men boastful of personal liberty, and proud of institutions that make the laboringman's home his castle, and entitles him to the earnings of his labor, it is specially loathsome to have that home invaded by the detective and spy, clothed with a general commission to pry into his domestic affairs.

Why, sir, under this internal system a farmer in the country can hardly buy at a country store a plug of tobacco or pint of brandy and go to his home and feel safe against the intrusion of some "infernal-revenue" officer coming in upon him to search his closets to see whether or not his purchases are right according to the complicated machinery of these laws.

Another monstrous evil growing out of this espionage system is that this great army of revenue officials are a part of the villainous system inaugurated by the present party in power to build up and perpetuate the "spoils-of-office" tenure. These officials are not selected primarily on account of their fitness for the discharge of the duties devolving upon them with ability and honesty to the Government, but mainly on account of their peculiar adroitness in running partisan machinery and their facility in corrupting voters, demoralizing the ballot-box, and manipulating elections. It is one of the several agencies by which the Republican party holds its grip upon the Government in opposition to the unmistakable majority of the people, which has for years been very clearly shown to be against it.

I further object to the internal-revenue system on the ground that its burdens mainly rest upon the agricultural industry of the country, that industry that has already been burdened more than any other, that industry which is the foundation and basis of all wealth, and especially so in our country, because it is peculiarly an agricultural country. In the indirect taxes now collected under our tariff system agriculture is discriminated against everywhere.

The State that I in part represent on this floor (Illinois) produces annually about 326,000,000 bushels of corn. Think of it, 326,000,000 bushels of corn! It also produces over 60,000,000 bushels of wheat, and about 65,000,000 bushels of oats. These three cereals alone aggregate every year about 450,000,000 bushels as the production of that single State.

We have the "protective system" in the collection of taxes which falsely pretends to protect the industries of the country. But, sir, it does not protect a single one of these agricultural products. It does not attempt to do so, and you cannot protect them. It is idle to talk about protecting by legislative enactment the great agricultural products of the West, for it is palpable to all men that there is no country on earth that can compete with our Western country in these products, and especially with the State of Illinois, in the particular products to which I have referred.

Talk about a protective tariff on wheat and corn and Western agricultural products! It is well known that all the tariff duties that have ever been put on those articles simply have the effect to make farmers who occasionally change their seeds pay a little more for them; that is all.

The agricultural interest of the country has no legislative protection; absolutely none. But you protect the manufacturers of woolen goods, blankets and flannels, and iron and steel manufactures, chains, saws, &c., by a tariff which is practically prohibitory, so that imports of these commodities, which ought to pay millions for the support of the Government, are driven away and no revenue is obtained from them. All this is done in the interest of the favored few engaged in manufactures, while the laboring millions of the people, with their labor unprotected, and the agriculturists, with the products of their farms unprotected, are compelled to pay double prices in the market for whatever articles of utility and comfort they purchase for their consumption.

And then, to make this wrong doubly oppressive, this internal-revenue tax comes in, the burdens of which are imposed nearly entirely upon the agricultural interests. It is well known that a very considerable portion of the corn, and rye, and barley, and hops, the fruits of this great agricultural industry, is manufactured into spirits—high wines and fermented liquors. These high wines, which it is a misrepresentation to denominate as luxuries, for the reason that a large portion is consumed in the mechanic arts, are now taxed 90 cents a gallon, while the fermented liquors, entering so largely into the consumption of the country as a part of the food-supply, and which come directly from farm products, bear equally an oppressive tax.

Now, sir, this strikes me as an imposition upon the producing classes which they in much justice can demand to have remedied. I have no time to go into details on this subject, but I desire briefly to direct attention to a few of the anomalies as well as oppressions of this internal-tax system. The man who raises a small surplus of corn and wants to change it by distillation into spirits or high wines for his own use and that of his family, either for mechanical purposes or as a beverage, is not allowed to do so without incurring the odium and penalties of criminality, though it be simply the utilization of the productions of his own labor, dug out of the soil.

Again, the farmer cannot take the fruits of his orchard and from the surplus product manufacture a keg of brandy or any kind of spirits for his own use. I believe he is permitted to make cider.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. That is a very thin drink.

Mr. SPARKS. Yes; cider is a very weak and thin drink. But he cannot take his own surplus apples and peaches and other fruits and manufacture them into what he desires for his own use and the use of his family without becoming in the sight of this internal-revenue law a criminal and subject to the severe penalties which it imposes.

I have been told by a member of this House [Mr. OATES, of Alabama] that in Coffee County, in that State, many of its good people raise the sorghum cane, which makes a thin kind of molasses. It is nutritious and cheap, and can be made at home entirely from a product of their own raising. Now, in the manufacture of that poor molasses there is some refuse, called the skimmings of the cane, and a number of the poor farmers down there who had raised this cane and made their molasses concluded they would utilize that refuse, or skimmings, by making from it a wholesome metheglin, or home-made rum, purely and solely for family use. They did so, and the result was that twenty-five of them have been arrested for a violation of the "internal-revenue laws," and are now under indictment in the Federal courts for doing it.

Now, sir, think of a system that will prosecute and punish a man because he takes the refuse of his cane, the skimmings of his home-made molasses, and makes it into a pleasant drink for the use of his family.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman from Illinois grant me a moment?

Mr. SPARKS. Yes, sir.

Mr. KELLEY. Cases such as the gentleman speaks of were brought to the attention of the House in 1872 by me in discussion with the present Senator BECK, then a member from Kentucky. At that time I asserted that I wanted to get rid of all internal taxes in order that we might have "free trade" between American citizens.

But my Democratic friends say "No; laws that will indict men for distilling their refuse sorghum must be maintained in order to have free trade with Britain and other nations that underpay their working-people."

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Chairman, it is my special pleasure that in this desultory and extemporaneous speech I have succeeded in converting the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the doctrine of "free trade." [Laughter.] I am proud of that.

Mr. KELLEY. I have always been in favor of "free trade" between the American people.

Mr. SPARKS. I see that the gentleman is becoming enthusiastic on the subject of "free trade." If I should speak out my hour, I shall hope to make him more than enthusiastic, an evangelist of correct doctrine. [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman from Illinois had not made his speech in 1872, when I spoke to Senator BECK, then a Representative on this floor, as I do now to the gentleman.

Mr. SPARKS. It is suggested to me, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania has so frankly expressed his views in the midst of my remarks, to inquire of him what the Republican caucus said on this subject of "free trade" between the States.

Mr. KELLEY. I do not know what it said. I have not attended its meetings with much regularity. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPARKS. I am glad of that; I hope the gentleman will keep out of it, for he is certainly drifting in the direction of reform to-day. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I resume. We have heard a great deal about tobacco in this discussion. My friend from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] is a champion of tobacco. Tobacco, I believe he says, is a prime necessity in his part of the country.

I think he is right about it, and further think that, as the tobacco raisers for whom he speaks are laboring-men and tillers of the soil, they are a class worthy of the zeal and indefatigable efforts of the high-minded and intelligent Representative whom they have selected and who represents them on this floor with such signal ability. This article of tobacco is called a luxury, but those who so denominate it fail to make known the fact that it is no luxury to the producer. The farmer who raises tobacco makes it his means of livelihood. He digs out of the earth the dollars which his tobacco crop brings him. It is therefore a direct attack upon this agricultural interest to adjust a tax system by protective tariffs, so as to prohibit imports and defeat the legitimate means of revenue, and then make the farmers who raise tobacco pay this odious excise tax for the support of Government.

Sir, it is the man who produces that I am talking about. Cigars, snuff, and chewing-tobacco may be a luxury to the man who uses them, but I am speaking of the farmer, the man who raises from the soil the product from which these luxuries are made. He is the party upon whom the severities of this law are felt most. If he attempts to manufacture this article of his own production for his own use he is a criminal. He cannot put it between two logs to press it into convenient shape without becoming a violator of the law. When he has raised it in his garden or field he cannot sell it to the man who will give him the best price for it, but must dispose of it to a certain class of people licensed to buy it. He cannot even give it away to his neighbor without becoming a criminal. And there is an army of spies to dog his heels from the time he sets out his plants to the time that he sells the product to the licensed dealer.

Sir, a system so odious as this ought, in my judgment, regardless of the fact that it gives a considerable revenue, to be wiped from the statute-book. And anxious as I am that the Government should have revenue, and as much needed as I feel that revenue to be, yet, when I find it levied and collected in a manner so unfair and so odious as this tax is, I would at the earliest practical period consistent with pressing demands wipe the whole thing out and then adjust the tariff, the indirect form of taxation in such way that it would not "prohibit" but "encourage" importations, and thereby bring into the Treasury sufficient income for all the needed demands and obligations of government.

The Ways and Means Committee of the House have now come in with the bill under consideration and say: "We are making one step in the direction of getting rid of this odious taxation; while we do not at present abolish this whole system which bears thus unfairly upon the agricultural and other interests of the country, we reduce it." But how does this bill reduce it? I have in my hand a copy of the report accompanying the bill, and as it is brief I will read it:

The aggregate annual reduction in internal-revenue receipts which it is believed will be accomplished by the passage of the bill, taking the receipts reported for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, as a basis of calculation, is about $23,000,000. Under the first section the reduction would be $16,892,880, as follows:

Capital and deposits of banks and bankers other than national banks	$3,762,208
Capital and deposits of national banks	5,372,178
Bank checks	2,253,411
Matches	3,278,580
Proprietary medicines, &c	2,226,503
Total	16,892,880

The first section is intended to repeal all laws imposing taxes on the capital and deposits of national and other banks, and on all individual bankers. It is intended also to repeal all laws imposing what is known as stamp taxes, including the tax on bank checks, drafts, orders, and vouchers.

Under the second section the reduction would be about $3,700,000. The second section reduces the amount of special tax imposed under existing laws, the reduction being extended to every business from which these taxes are derived. The following statement will show the present rates of special tax imposed, the rates proposed by the bill, and the amount of reduction in detail that would occur should the bill be passed:

	Present rates.	Proposed rates.	Amount of reduction.
Rectifiers:
First class	$200	$120 00	$76,711
Second class	100	60 00
Wholesale liquor dealers	100	60 00	164,442
Retail liquor dealers	25	12 00	2,218,312
Dealers in leaf tobacco	25	12 00	41,648
Manufacturers of cigars	10	6 00	61,332
Manufacturers of tobacco	10	6 00
Dealers in manufactured tobacco	5	2 40	1,004,273
Peddlers in tobacco:
First class	50	30 00	9,871
Second class	25	15 00
Third class	15	7 50
Fourth class	10	3 60
Brewers:
Class 1	100	60 00	50,871
Class 2	60	30 00
Malt-liquor dealers	50	36 00	88,663

The third section reduces the tax on cigars and cigarettes from $6 to $5 per thousand. When the tax on manufactured tobacco was reduced by Congress from 24 cents per pound to 16 cents per pound no reduction was made on cigars and cigarettes, and the rate now proposed would place those two articles, so far as taxation is concerned, on a parity with other forms of tobacco. The proposed reduction of tax on cigars and cigarettes would result in an annual reduction of revenue from those sources of $2,666,000.

The following summary will show the estimated reduction in each case where change is proposed, as well as the estimated aggregate reduction that would result from the passage of this bill:

Banks, bankers, and stamp taxes	$16,892,880
Special taxes	3,700,000
Cigars and cigarettes	2,666,000
Total	23,258,880

Now, here, as they tell us in this report, is a proposed reduction to the extent of $23,000,000. But you will find, sir, that $11,387,797 of the reduction is for the benefit of a class of men that have been fostered for years at the expense of the laboring and agricultural classes. The banks, seemingly the masters of some gentlemen upon this floor, the banks, whose agents swarm these lobbies and whose influence permeates everything in the land; the banks come in for the lion's share of it.

Eleven and a half millions of reduction for the banks and three millions and a quarter on matches. Why, sir, that reminds me of Falstaff's bill of fare; several gallons of sack and a half-penny-worth of bread. [Laughter.]

The clause in the bill for repealing the stamp tax on matches is eminently just, and singly presented I would vote for it most cheerfully. I also favor the clause which proposes to abolish the tax on proprietary medicines, for after all, and say what we may against patent medicines, people are constantly using them. They are the cheap medicines for the great masses of poor people, and that class of people should be relieved at once from this exaction. But both of these amount to only about $5,500,000, while the banks get the benefit of nearly $11,500,000.

The bill also proposes to take off a small percentage of the tax or license imposed on rectifiers and dealers in spirits and fermented liquors, upon dealers in leaf and manufactured tobacco, and upon the manufacturers of cigars and tobacco. But to accomplish this it is so framed as to give little or no relief to the most meritorious class, the producers of the raw material, and is specially guarded to keep up the same army of spies and revenue officials, and to continue in force unabated the same system of espionage which now exists. I have looked through the bill everywhere and cannot find a proposition to reduce a single one of them. They are all kept in at their full numbers to annoy and harass the people and to ply their congenial vocation of playing partisan tricks.

Sir, this bill, as it seems to me, is conceived in error and is unjust. It pretends to reduce the existing internal-revenue taxes as an onerous burden upon the people. But it begins wrong and ends wrong. I admit that these taxes are all onerous and odious. Excise taxes are always odious to Democrats. But if we are to have them at all they should be so adjusted as to make that class of people who are best able to stand them bear at least their proportionate share of them. This bill, in the reductions it proposes, reverses this order by relieving the banks and manufacturers, who are few in number and well able to stand such exactions, and by leaving the whole burden or nearly all of it upon the shoulders of the millions of laborers and producers who are not able to bear them.

It is the reproduction in this small effort for the reduction of taxes of that system which has for many years prevailed in Congress in the levy and increase of them by discriminating in favor of capital and against labor; of fostering and protecting all the enterprises of the rich and fastening all the burdens of Government upon the labor and enterprises of the poor. It shall not, without it is materially amended in this respect, have my support.

Mr. Chairman, how many minutes have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has sixteen minutes of his time remaining, as the general debate is to be closed at three o'clock.

Mr. SPARKS. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, as the time allowed for general debate on this bill has almost expired, I shall ask the indulgence of the committee while I consider only a few matters pertinent to the subject. It has been already stated frequently during this debate, and also on the tariff-commission bill, that the Treasury was already full to over flowing and was actually overburdened with funds. I have in my hand the public debt statement for May, 1882, showing the condition of the Treasury on the 1st of this month. It shows that there is an available cash balance in the Treasury of $141,000,000. Forty-one millions, with our immense revenues coming in every day, would be a sufficient balance to keep on hand.

Hence we could pay out one hundred millions of the amount now in the Treasury without endangering in any way the ability of the Government to meet its current liabilities. With one hundred millions of surplus in its Treasury and one hundred and fifty millions annually collected over and above the actual necessities of the Government, it would seem that there was sufficient reason to induce the Committee on Ways and Means to bring in a bill providing some relief from the burdens of taxation. This plethoric Treasury and these accumulating resources were referred to by the Secretary of the Treasury in his last annual report to Congress in which he stated:

> Meanwhile the daily receipts from the community by the Treasury continue, the surplus over its needs increases, and money lies idle. It seems that the plan most just for giving relief is to reduce taxation, and thereby diminish receipt sand surplus.—Executive Document No. 2, page 18.

That report, Mr. Chairman, was sent to Congress in December last. We have been now in session for six months, during which no proposition was brought forward in support of that recommendation. The burden of taxation has been allowed to remain as it was when we first assembled in December. And now at the very last days of the session, when there is scarcely an opportunity on the part of the Senate to consider the bill, even if it shall pass the House, we are asked to consider and pass the pending bill. It hardly seems possible that the Committee on Ways and Means could have been really in earnest in bringing forward a bill to reduce taxation at this late day in the session. Six months have already passed and nothing in that direction has yet been done.

The honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] has in the few remarks he made to-day referred to the great distress prevailing among the laboring-men of the country. He has stated, and no man in the country is better informed on the subject than he is, that more laboring-men are to-day striking for higher wages, and are thus unemployed, than ever before at any one time in the history of the country. They cannot support their families upon the scanty means which they have been receiving as wages. But in the midst of their distress, as if to mock at their calamity, the Government is wringing over a hundred millions a year from the people over and above its necessities. And the Republican majority in this House rushes through immense appropriation bills but does nothing to reduce taxation. Thousands of laboring-men are struggling for existence, wages are inadequate for their support, the business interests of the country are threatened with disaster, but the tax-gatherer is abroad in the land, and $400,000,000 have been gathered in from the people's earnings during the current fiscal year, which closes in a few days.

Mr. Chairman, in view of the facts to which I have referred, I suggest the necessity of immediate action upon this subject in the direction of the reduction of taxation. I should have preferred that this House would have taken hold of the customs revenues and largely reduced the burdens of the people in that direction. But the majority of Congress thought otherwise, and they have farmed out that subject to a commission, where it will stay, I presume, for this Congress at least, and perhaps for the next, unless the people at the next election shall return a Congress competent and willing to deal with that subject.

The pending bill is all that is offered the people. And what are its provisions? It proposes to reduce taxes to the amount of $23,000,000 per annum; twenty-three millions a year, when we have a surplus of nearly one hundred and fifty millions a year and one hundred millions of surplus money already in the Treasury. And where is this reduction placed? I will let the report of the Committee on Ways and Means submitted by the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] speak for itself. The report is as follows:

> The aggregate annual reduction in internal-revenue receipts, which, it is believed, will be accomplished by the passage of the bill, taking the receipts reported for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, as a basis of calculation, is about $23,000,000. Under the first section the reduction would be $16,892,880, as follows:

Capital and deposits of banks and bankers other than national banks	$3,762,208

Special taxes	3,700,000
Cigars and cigarettes	2,666,000
Total	23,258,880

It will be seen that the banks and capitalists receive the first and greatest relief. Eleven millions of dollars are to be lifted by this bill from the shoulders of those most able to bear the burden of taxation. All bank taxes are abolished, except the tax on circulation. The tax on matches, amounting to over three millions, and that on proprietary medicines to over two millions, are also abolished. There can be no objection to these two items of the bill. The next reduction proposed is of special taxes on occupations. Why not abolish all of these taxes, instead of reducing them about 40 per cent.? The reduction proposed will not dispense with a single Republican official. The expense of collection will be just as great, and the whole army of spies and informers remain intact. Instead of abolishing all these special taxes, the bill proposed by the Committee on Ways and Means simply reduces the amount on each one. Hence we are only offered by this bill $23,000,000 of reduction.

Mr. KELLEY. If the committee will permit me, I will in an instant answer the question of the gentleman from Illinois. They are retained as part of the police regulations of the internal-revenue system and not as revenue measures.

Mr. SPRINGER. I cannot see clearly how it is that a man keeping a saloon in the city of Washington, for instance, on the corner over there, is a part of a police system regulating the collection of the whisky tax in Peoria, Illinois. I do not exactly see the connection——

Mr. KELLEY. His payment of the annual license puts him on the Government books.

Mr. SPRINGER. You have a great many on the Government books?

Mr. KELLEY. Six hundred thousand.

Mr. SPRINGER. Six hundred thousand, and I want to abolish the tax on all of them.

Mr. KELLEY. So do I.

Mr. SPRINGER. The next and last reduction proposed by the pending bill is a dollar a thousand on cigars. Does anybody suppose that the consumer of cigars will get the advantage of this reduction? The whole benefit of it will go to the manufacturer. This is the extent to which the Committee on Ways and Means proposes to go in the reduction of taxes. I would suggest we can go further in the direction of repealing internal-revenue duties than the committee have proposed.

The tax on tobacco is onerous and oppressive. The honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. FLOWER] in his remarks in this House on the 3d May said:

> In New York City this internal revenue has reduced the number of cigar and tobacco manufacturers from 15,000 to 1,500. It has given such a monopoly to a few match manufacturers that they readily buy out at his own price any one who has the audacity to compete with them. It has driven millions of capital from this country. Its collectors patrol our streets and dictate to our tradesmen, and its inspectors invade the privacy of every home and office and store and factory when the slightest suspicion of excuse is afforded.

I could cite numerous instances of the greatest oppression and outrage practiced upon our citizens through the operation of these internal-revenue laws. Dealers in tobacco and cigars and other subjects of taxation are harassed with the most vexatious regulations, prosecutions, and litigations. The laws and decisions and regulations are so complicated that no dealer can understand them and protect himself by a faithful compliance with requirements. He must submit to the exactions of the revenue officials, which are frequently prompted by personal spite or ignorant assumptions of official authority. Large contributions have been levied upon dealers for political purposes, if not for black-mail and official corruption. The funds raised from assessments upon the whisky ring were sufficient in 1872 to defeat the Democratic candidate for the Presidency. And the thousands of special agents, informers, and detectives required to collect the internal-revenue taxes are the chief reliance of the machine politicians in the work of packing conventions and perpetuating Republican rule in this country. In many cases persons guilty of technical violations of the law or some regulation of the department are allowed to escape prosecution if they will vote the Republican ticket. The most innocent and honorable men have been arrested, indicted, and convicted for mere technical violations of the law, which could not have been avoided by the greatest precaution on their part.

I should like to cite some of the instances which have come to my knowledge in my own district of the operation of these internal-revenue laws, but my time will not permit.

The honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, in a speech which he delivered in the city of New York last November, used this language with reference to the internal-revenue laws:

> The time has come when we must determine whether our system of internal taxes shall be abolished or perpetuated.

Mark his words, "the time has come." The time had come last November; but nothing has been reported here to that effect till this little bill is brought in.

> If these taxes are to be perpetuated the present Congress or its immediate successor must revise our entire revenue system. If the reduction of revenue, which is inevitable, be long delayed, our excessive income will require changes so sudden and momentous as to convulse our financial, industrial, and commercial systems.
> Again, I ask that these taxes (internal taxes) shall be repealed at the earliest practicable day, because they are the sole restraint upon the freedom of trade between American citizens. But for the restrictions they impose, trade within our territorial limits and among our more than fifty million people would be free as air.

Concluding, he says:

> And I aver that the abolition of these taxes would do more to harmonize the country than any single act of legislation that statesmanship can suggest. I trust it may be done, and done quickly.

This was in November last, but when the honorable gentleman came to Congress and went into the Republican caucus—and I hope the gentleman will give me his attention just at this moment—he was instructed by that body, as I understand, to make no recommendation with regard to the reduction of the taxes on whisky, beer, and tobacco. He came into this House and proclaimed that he would be governed by the dictates of the caucus. He has abandoned the policy he suggested so boldly in New York of taking off these internal-revenue taxes at an early day. He was then as bold as a lion in promising the reduction of these taxes. But after the Republican caucus has enlightened him he is as "child-like and bland" as a cooing dove. Such is the power of King Caucus.

Why are not these taxes to be taken off, Mr. Chairman? What is the necessity of keeping this immense amount of money in the Treasury and this immense drain upon the people? There are some measures pending that suggest the necessity of a plethoric treasury. For instance, the Tehuantepec Railway scheme, which requires a subsidy of $50,000,000; the fast ocean mail service, which requires a subsidy of $25,000,000 in the next five years; the public buildings, for the construction of which bills are being reported here and passed from time to time, bills calling for millions of dollars, as in the case of the new Congressional Library building, and post-office buildings and court-houses all over the country, even down to the modest building of my friend from Michigan [Mr. HUBBELL] at Marquette. Every little town of 3,000 inhabitants must have a public building.

Then there is the river and harbor bill which was passed by the House, calling for $17,500,000, and which the Senate will probably increase to $20,000,000. Then the reconstruction of the Navy demands a large amount of money. The gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROBESON,] whom I do not now see in his seat, if he gets all the money he requires will be hereafter regarded as the champion shipbuilder of America. The Naval Committee must have from twenty to fifty millions of dollars from the Treasury in order to meet the demands of that arm of the service, and start the navy-yards to booming for Republican candidates for Congress in the fall elections, and for President in 1884.

Then we have a large amount required for canals and water-ways; those being the most useful of all the schemes which I have suggested are the least pressed upon the attention of the House.

Then we have to vote a hundred millions a year for pensions. I will say nothing of the numerous private claims and quasi public jobs which will aggregate millions in the end, and which we are urged to pass before Congress adjourns. All these bills suggest the necessity of a full Treasury.

Retrenchment and economy have been scoffed and laughed at by gentlemen on the other side of the House. They want a full Treasury. They are so patriotic that they will submit to nothing but "the old flag and immense appropriations." [Laughter.]

Instead of taking off a hundred millions a year of the taxes which oppress and annoy the people, as could safely be done, the Republican majority in this House propose a reduction of only $23,000,000, and the most of that to be taken off of those who least feel the burden and can best afford to pay it.

Mr. MILLS. Where will you get sufficient revenue if you abolish internal taxes?

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, I want to suggest to my distinguished friend from Texas [Mr. MILLS] that a tariff for revenue, to which the Democratic party is committed in all its platforms, will furnish all the revenue which can possibly be required for an economical administration of the Government and the rapid payment of the public debt.

Mr. MILLS. Can you commit the Democratic party on this floor to that?

Mr. SPRINGER. I think so.

Mr. MORSE. Not quite.

Mr. SPRINGER. The Democratic party is committed to that doctrine. The protection necessarily incident to a revenue tariff will be ample to enable American industries to compete with the labor of Europe; and the revenue which would be derived from a properly adjusted tariff would meet all requirements.

I see that my time has almost expired. I want to give notice here that when this bill shall have been reported to the House I will move the resolution which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Resolved, That the bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce "internal-revenue taxation" be recommitted to the Committee on Ways and Means with instructions to report a bill at the earliest time practicable repealing all internal-revenue laws and abolishing all internal-revenue offices, except section 3413 of the Revised Statutes and all amendments thereto, imposing a tax of 10 per cent. on certain circulating notes, and except also the laws relating to distilled spirits, the repeal to take effect on each particular subject of taxation at such time in the future as the committee may deem expedient, but not later on all subjects and offices than January 1, 1884; and to so reorganize the system of collecting taxation on distilled spirits as to dispense with all supernumerary officials and secure the most economical and efficient method of raising such revenue.

Mr. SPRINGER. If this proposition shall be adopted it will secure the reduction of taxation, at the time when all the provisions shall have gone into effect, of the following amounts: on dealers in spirits, $4,800,000; on tobacco and dealers in tobacco, $42,800,000; on fermented liquors and dealers therein, $13,700,000; on banks other than national, $3,700,000; on bank checks, $2,200,000; on matches, $3,200,000; on medical preparations, $2,200,000; making in the aggregate $76,300,000.

Let the Committee on Ways and Means bring in a bill for reducing taxes to this extent, and when you have reduced them according to this plan, so far as you go in the reduction you get rid of the army of office-holders that are necessary to enforce the law.

If you will examine the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue you will find that it costs us $5,000,000 a year to pay the officials who carry into effect the internal-revenue laws. This army of officials is sent out—many of them spies and informers—to every part of the land. In many cases they are used as partisan workers in elections. For this reason I fear they will not be abolished by gentlemen on the other side, for the very reason that they constitute the most efficient body of party workers which they have. They can make their influence felt by their power to arrest individuals and to investigate the private affairs of thousands of business men in every part of the land. They bring their official power to bear in too many instances, as we all know, in order to coerce citizens in their political action.

The internal-revenue laws are war measures. They were necessary when enacted, as the necessities of the Government demanded the greatest sacrifice on the part of every citizen. But the war ended seventeen years ago, and to-day we have an overflowing Treasury and a hundred and fifty millions collected annually over and above the necessities of the Government. A full Treasury oppresses the people, invites a corrupt lobby, and encourages all manner of extravagant appropriations. Reduce the taxes, wipe out the odious and oppressive features of the internal-revenue laws, and relieve the people from spies, informers, and, as far as possible, from annoying exactions of every kind, character, and description.

The CHAIRMAN. In pursuance of a previous order of the House the committee will now rise.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

Mr. CAMP reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. TALBOTT, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 4842) to authorize the Southern Maryland Railroad Company to extend a railroad into and within the District of Columbia; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 239) making an appropriation to continue the work of observation and exploration in the Arctic Seas.

RECHARTERING OF NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. CRAPO. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 4167) to enable national-bank associations to extend their corporate existence, now on the Speaker's table, returned from the Senate with amendments, be printed with the Senate amendments.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. BRENTS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD some remarks by him on the bill for the admission of the Territory of Washington as one of the States of the Union. [See Appendix.]

ELIZA F. PORTER.

Mr. DAWES, by unanimous consent, reported, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, as a substitute for House bill No. 4838, a bill (H. R. No. 6624) granting an increase of pension to Eliza F. Porter; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RAILROADS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. PEIRCE, by unanimous consent, reported, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, as a substitute for House bill No. 2935, a bill (H. R. No. 6625) to authorize the Washington and Atlantic Railroad Company to extend a railroad into and within the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, placed on the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. PEIRCE also, by unanimous consent, reported, from the same committee, as a substitute for House bill No. 4760, a bill (H. R. No. 6626) to authorize the Washington City and Point Lookout Railroad Company to extend a railroad into and within the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, placed on the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC HIGHWAY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GARRISON, by unanimous consent, reported, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, as a substitute for House bill No. 3982, a bill (H. R. No. 6627) to authorize the establishment of a public highway in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN BARNETT.

Mr. VANCE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6628) granting a pension to John Barnett; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

THEFTS OF POSTAGE-STAMPS.

Mr. PEELLE. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Claims a bill and memorial, that they may be laid on the table, being covered by the provisions of a general bill already passed.

There being no objection, the following bill and memorial were reported from the Committee on Claims, and laid on the table:

A bill (H. R. No. 3336) for the relief of George W. Keyes; and Memorial of Charles N. Williams, postmaster at Elizabethtown, Essex County, New York, for relief on account of postage-stamps to the amount of $176.42 stolen from his office.

JULIA MORAN.

Mr. PEELLE also, by unanimous consent, reported back from the same committee the bill (H. R. No. 290) for the relief of Julia Moran; which was referred to the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay.

MIAMI INDIANS OF INDIANA.

Mr. PEELLE also, by unanimous consent, reported back from the same committee the bill (H. R. No. 288) for the relief of the Miami Indians of Indiana; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

CLAIMS OF CITIZENS OF KANSAS.

Mr. PEELLE also, by unanimous consent, reported back from the same committee the bill (H. R. No. 417) authorizing the appointment of a commissioner of and the settlement of the claims of certain citizens of Kansas named therein; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL CEMETERY, NEW ALBANY, INDIANA.

Mr. STEELE, (by Mr. STOCKSLAGER,) by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Military Affairs the bill (H. R. No. 6027) to construct a macadamized road from the city of New Albany, in the State of Indiana, to the national cemetery near said city; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

J. H. MERRILL.

Mr. HILL, by unanimous consent, reported back adversely from the Committee on Claims a petition for the relief of J. H. Merrill; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOHN JORDAN.

Mr. HILL also, by unanimous consent, reported back from the same committee the bill (H. R. No. 6122) for the relief of John Jordan; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

DEATH OF HON. THOMAS ALLEN.

The SPEAKER. By order of the House, this day at three o'clock was fixed for the submission of appropriate resolutions and remarks with reference to the death of Hon. THOMAS ALLEN, late a Representative from the State of Missouri. The hour designated having arrived, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. HATCH.]

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound regret and deep sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. THOMAS ALLEN, late a Representative from the State of Missouri.

Resolved, That, in token of regard for the memory of the deceased, the members of this House wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be instructed to communicate these resolutions to the Senate of the United States.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HATCH addressed the House. [See Appendix.]

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, very few of all the members of this House who on the last Easter Sunday assembled to pay their last tribute of respect over the mortal remains of THOMAS ALLEN were able to recall his presence as that of one of their associates on this floor. The opening of the present session found him stricken with an incurable disease, and weakness and pain prevented him from participation, except for a day or two, in the important work to which he had been called by his constituents.

But, sir, when the committee, acting under your appointment, bore his body to the State that gave him birth, to the town where for so many years he had been an honored and distinguished citizen, they were received by the companions of his boyhood and the associates of his mature age, gathering to testify their high regard for his upright life and to tenderly commit his remains to the soil of which he was the offspring.

From his simple home on the Berkshire hills, in the old Commonwealth of Massachusetts, he had gone forth, obedient to the mission of duty's call, and half-way across the continent had wrought into the development and destiny of a sister State his indomitable energy, his generous culture, his devoted patriotism; and now, life's toils and trials ended, the sheaves of honor and success garnered in, he was buried where life had been the sweetest, where his affection had most fondly lingered, where his eyes and his thoughts had yearningly turned in health and in sickness—his most coveted resting-place. Other climes and other lands he had enjoyed, but no place was so dear to him as his native town of Pittsfield. Home again! He sleeps in hallowed ground, on the hillside so precious in his sight, amid scenes that gladdened and inspired him and made the poet's tribute his own:

Home of my heart! to me more fair
  Than gay Versailles or Windsor's halls;
The painted, shingly town-house, where
  The freeman's vote for freedom falls;
The simple roof where prayer is made,
  Than Gothic groin and colonnade;
The living temple of the heart of man,
  Than Rome's sky-mocking vault, or many-spired Milan.
Then ask not why to these bleak hills
  I cling, as clings the tufted moss;
To bear the winter's lingering chills,
  The mocking spring's perpetual loss.
I dream of lands where summer smiles,
And soft winds blow from spicy isles;
But scarce would Ceylon's breath of flowers be sweet,
Could I not feel thy soil, New England, at my feet!

Tracing the career of Mr. ALLEN from his birth, August 29, 1813, to his death, April 8, 1882, one finds very much to awaken admiration. Born of a lineage that had for several generations nobly illustrated some of the best of New England blood and character, he entered upon the work of his life, inspired by the great examples of his ancestry, endowed with an unyielding energy, and equipped with a liberal education in the schools and colleges of his time. Family misfortunes brought pecuniary disaster, and he was suddenly forced to confront the world single-handed and alone. The disappointment was to him, however, but temporary, and the sterling qualities of his mind and heart immediately demonstrated his capacity for success. Whether in his chosen profession of the law, or in literary labor to which he devoted leisure moments to add to his scanty income, hard work and unfaltering application were not distasteful to him, and he thereby made possible all his future attainments.

The scanty sum of a few dollars, all his father was able to give him as he set out on his journey to begin life for himself in the city of New York, by no means constituted his only capital. Country boy though he was, poor in this world's goods, he was richly blessed with a stout heart, a well-ordered intellect, correct personal habits, staunch integrity, and the fear of God. Had the circumstances of his early manhood been more favorable, as is the common estimation, the better qualities in him might have never asserted themselves, and his life might have drifted away into the too common monotony of purposeless and fruitless existence.

Lord of himself, though not of lands,
And having nothing, yet had all.

In 1837 Mr. ALLEN, then but twenty-three years old, entered into the broad field of journalism in the face of obstacles that would have disheartened a man of feebler mould. The business and financial interests of the country were then in an alarming state of disorder; distress was threatening at all points; the very air was filled with prophecies of evil; the Federal Government was openly declared to be the cause of the impending ruin; and men were not wanting even in public stations who directly advised resistance to the constituted authorities. The time demanded fearless and patriotic discussion of the important questions at issue, and the word of the press might be potent to save or to destroy the Government. In the first number of the Madisonian, which was published in Washington in August, 1837, Mr. ALLEN paid just tribute to Mr. Madison's great abilities, his disinterested devotion to the country's welfare, and his purity of life, and declared that "under the tutelary auspices of his great name, and by the steady light of the principles and virtues which consecrate and endear it, we shall endeavor to steer our course over the stormy ocean upon which we have entered, in the humble hope of rendering some service to our country at a period of difficulty and danger which demands the best exertions of all her sons." In the sharp contests which followed, in the press and in the public assembly, Mr. ALLEN's pen and voice everywhere gave proof of his power and patriotism, and, despite the jealousy of formidable rivals, he fought his way to undoubted recognition in the political councils of the nation.

During the last forty years of his life Mr. ALLEN inaugurated and completed vast works of internal improvement in the States of Missouri and Arkansas, and successfully managed gigantic enterprises that startle us into wonder at their extent and importance. The results of his business sagacity, his intelligence, and his unconquerable will are to be plainly traced in the magnificent developments of his adopted State. Meantime, though engrossed with the responsibility of great public works and the management of vast financial concerns, he never omitted an occasion to manifest his deep interest in science, literature, and the arts. To his munificence Washington University, in Saint Louis, is indebted for the endowment of a professorship of mines and metallurgy. Public addresses and contributions to the journals of the time have established his high rank in scholarly taste and in philosophical and literary acquirements. He loved work of all kinds, and had a wonderful aptness for it; and so his life was many-sided, varied in its development, and widely beneficent in its great accomplishments.

From the great fortune which he amassed he made liberal donations in aid of public enterprises in Pittsfield. He contributed generously toward the establishment of a public library, and principally through his exertions a charter was obtained for the Berkshire Atheneum, "for the purpose of maintaining in the town of Pittsfield an institution to aid in promoting education, culture, and refinement, and diffusing knowledge by means of a library, reading rooms, lectures, museums, cabinets of art, and historical and natural curiosities." A beautiful gothic building, constructed with a union of Berkshire limestone and Missouri granite, stands across the square from his late summer residence, his free gift to the town and dedicated as a free library for the use of the inhabitants. No marble or bronze above his grave can be so fitting a monument to his memory as this edifice, rich in its associations and beauty—grander than any mausoleum of olden time, typical of Christian civilization—the portal for coming generations to enter into a broader culture and a higher appreciation of the best, the most beautiful, and the purest treasures of human life.

Always the patriot more than the partisan, Mr. ALLEN never faltered in his devotion to his country's highest welfare. Disloyalty met with no toleration from him. When the gathering storm of rebellion was imminent above the horizon, out of his own private means he equipped a company for the nation's defense, and in all the bitter struggles of the war, whether he were in Massachusetts or Missouri, he was ever the pronounced and uncompromising friend of the national Union, and conspicuous for his charities in behalf of the righteous cause. The traditions of the Revolution were household words to him, and liberty and loyalty were as sacredly cherished in his heart as they had been so heroically exemplified and enforced in the lives and teachings of his honored ancestry.

He was a true man, a liberal benefactor, a safe and wise counselor, a cultured gentleman, a consistent Christian.

The youth of our time may well emulate him in the development of the highest and the best in American life and character. The country has suffered great loss in that his death deprived us all of the incalculable benefits of his matured judgment, his rare abilities as a legislator, and his wise counsel in shaping beneficent legislation for the good of the whole people. It is in the service of such men as he that our institutions find their greatest stability and our country realizes its grandest destiny. We pause to-day to join in these memorial exercises, not for his sake, but for our own and our country's. His work among men is ended; his earthly record is complete. Words of eulogy may add nothing to the honor due his name and character, but they may well stimulate those upon whom the great responsibilities of public service in the present and the future shall rest to higher ideals and stricter fidelity.

God give us men! A time like this demands
Strong minds, great hearts, true faith, and ready hands;
Men whom the lust of office does not kill;
  Men whom the spoils of office cannot buy;
Men who possess opinions and a will;
  Men who have honor—men who will not lie;
Men who can stand before a demagogue,
  And damn his treacherous flatteries without winking;
Tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog
  In public duty, and in private thinking;
For while the rabble, with their thumb-worn creeds,
Their large professions and their little deeds,
Mingle in selfish strife, lo! Freedom weeps,
Wrong rules the land, and waiting Justice sleeps.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. For THOMAS ALLEN Missouri does not mourn alone. Massachusetts has already laid a wreath upon his tomb. New York joins with her sister State in the expression of a common sorrow. Before he went to Missouri, ALLEN belonged to New York, and in my own city achieved his first success and gave the evidence of those enduring qualities which assured a successful career in every portion of this land of infinite possibilities. No better type of what is styled the American character has ever existed. Born of the very best New England stock, running back to the advent of the Puritans in the old Bay State; grandson of the "fighting parson" immortalized by the classic and sympathetic description of Washington Irving; one of a large family of children, with the inheritance only of good principles, a clear head, and a firm will trained to self-reliance in the midst of honorable and favorable poverty; educated in a New England academy, and at Union College under the friendly guidance of Dr. Nott, and beginning his career at nineteen years of age, with $25 saved from the frugal resources of a godly father; coming to a great city in which he was an utter stranger; working for a pittance while waiting for the opportunities which youth never fails to find when governed by hope and guided by virtuous resolves, the youthful ALLEN presents a spectacle alike interesting and instructive to the young whose career is before them and to the old who are nearing the end of the race which is set before us.

Others have told the story of his eventful life, full of labor, of hopes, of disappointments, of struggles, of changes of occupation, of public usefulness, of the successful management of great enterprises, of the final achievement of fame and fortune, not merely without a blemish on his good name, with honor from all who knew him, crowned at last by the approval of the community in which his best and most active years had been passed, in his election to the House as the chosen representative of their interests and their aspirations for the preservation of good government and civil liberty.

I confess that when I heard that THOMAS ALLEN was to be a member of the Forty-seventh Congress I felt a profound sense of satisfaction and relief. I knew that another advocate for sound principles in finance, in taxation, and general legislation had been added to our number. I realized that his great practical experience in the affairs of life would re-enforce the views which I have had the honor to present and advocate on this floor. I knew that "a king among men" and a "seer among the sages" had come into our midst, and I felt ready to follow where his wisdom, experience, and prudence might lead.

Alas, this hope is disappointed by the stern mandate of death, not untimely perhaps for him, but all too soon for the welfare of the country to whose service he had consecrated the remaining years of his life. When I took his hand at the opening of the session I saw in his wan and wasted features the dread sentence of coming dissolution. I knew then that my hopes were in vain and that my heart must limit itself to futile regrets of what "might have been," if he had come to us with health and strength and the old fire which had guided him from Massachusetts to New York, from New York to Washington, at a time when the conflicts of the press were waged with fierce vigor and unequaled ability; from Washington to Missouri, where he became a power in the land and a tower of strength for all good works.

From his dying bed he sent me the draft of a bill on a subject of public importance, and the notes of a speech which he intended to deliver, and which I hold in my hand, hoping that I might take up the task which his weary hands were forced to decline; but I never saw him more, and I shall never see again one of the best and purest and ablest of the citizens who have ever served the state, and contributed by their lives to make this Republic not only the hope of the poor and oppressed in all lands but the wonder of the world in material, moral, and social progress.

Such a career as ALLEN'S; such purity and simplicity of character joined to such capacity for accomplishing results; such devotion to the public welfare, without neglecting the interests of those who were near and dear to him; such firm adherence to the fundamental principles of equity and justice when the temptation of passion, prejudice, and personal interest was presented on every side, is the best answer to the pessimistic spirit which decries the age in which we live and denies to it the possession and the glory of men who, like the fathers of the Republic, are ready to sacrifice life and fortune for the maintenance of the right.

Recent events in this country have shown that the old heroic spirit is not dead, but that the "eternal years of God" run on, not for the extinction of truth, but for the exhibition of unselfish patriotism and for the achievement of high and noble resolves such as animated the life and shaped the career of THOMAS ALLEN, to whose memory the House of Representatives now renders reverent and grateful homage.

Mr. FROST addressed the House. [See Appendix.]

Mr. HATCH. I now ask the adoption of the resolutions which have been read.

The resolutions were adopted unanimously.

Accordingly, in pursuance of the last resolution, (at four o'clock and ten minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BLANCHARD: The petition of citizens of Pineville, Louisiana, for an appropriation to construct a road from Pineville to the national military cemetery near that town—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. G. W. JONES: The petition of Charles I. Evans and others, citizens of Taylor County, Texas, asking that the place of holding the United States courts in the northern judicial district of said State be changed from the town of Graham, Young County, to the town of Abiline, in Taylor County—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McCOOK: The petition of John Jay Bell, for relief—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. RANDALL: The petition of Major S. C. Lyford, United States Army, late chairman of the board of United States Executive Departments at the international exhibition of 1876, praying that the report of said board be printed—to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. J. HYATT SMITH: Paper relating to the application of Catharine Baur for an extension of patent—to the Committee on Patents.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 24, 1882.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PAYMENT OF PENSIONS.

Mr. JOYCE. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the House Calendar and passed, with the amendments of the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay, the bill (H. R. No. 3920) to amend section 4766, title 57, of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 4766, title 57, of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4766. Hereafter no pension shall be paid to any person other than the pensioner entitled thereto, nor otherwise than according to the provisions of this title; and no warrant, power of attorney, or other paper executed or purporting to be executed by any pensioner to any attorney, claim agent, broker, or other person shall be recognized by any agent for the payment of pensions, nor shall any pension be paid thereon; but the payment to persons laboring under legal disabilities may be made to the guardians of such persons in the manner herein prescribed, and pensions payable to persons in foreign countries may be made according to the provisions of existing laws: Provided, That in case of an insane invalid pensioner having no guardian, but having a wife or children dependent upon him, (the wife being a woman of good character,) the Commissioner of Pensions is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to cause the pension to be paid to the wife, upon her properly executed voucher, or, in case there is no wife, to the guardian of the children, upon the properly executed voucher of such guardian, and in like manner to cause the pension of invalid pensioners who are or may hereafter be imprisoned as punishment for offenses against the laws to be paid while so imprisoned to their wives or the guardians of their children. And pensions to Indian pensioners residing in the Indian Territory may be paid in person by the pension agent, upon a suitable voucher, at some convenient point in said Territory, which, together with the form and manner of identification of the pension, vs. may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior; such payments to be made in standard silver, at least once in each current year. And payments in person shall be made to the pensioner, in cash, by the pension agent whenever in the discretion of the Commissioner of Pensions such personal payment shall be by him deemed necessary or proper to secure to the pensioner his rights; and the necessary and actual expenses of such pension agent in making such payments shall be paid by the Secretary of the Interior upon properly executed vouchers, out of the contingent fund appropriated for the use of the Pension Office. The Commissioner of Pensions may, when in his judgment it shall be deemed necessary or proper, visit in person, for the purpose of examination and inspection, or may send any one or more of the officers of his bureau for that purpose, any of the pension agencies or medical examining boards or surgeons; and the necessary and actual expenses of such visits shall be paid by the Secretary of the Interior, upon properly executed vouchers, out of the contingent fund of said bureau."

Mr. HOLMAN. This seems to be an important and valuable measure. I trust that the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JOYCE] will explain the changes which the bill proposes to make in the existing law.

Mr. RANDALL. And let the right to object be reserved until the explanation is made.

The SPEAKER. The right of objection may be reserved.

Mr. JOYCE. If gentlemen will look at the existing statute they will see that this bill down to the word "provided," in the seventeenth line, repeats the present provision of the statute. After the word "provided" the bill provides for the payment of pensions to insane persons and others under legal disabilities, to Indian pensioners, &c.

Mr. CARLISLE. The bill, as I notice, provides that pensions due to persons laboring under legal disabilities may be paid to their guardians. Now, in many of the States no such persons as guardians are known to the law, but persons under legal disabilities have committees or trustees. It seems to me the bill should provide for payments to the guardian, committee, or trustee.

Mr. JOYCE. I do not think there will be any trouble about that. The probability is that the language of the bill would be held to apply to committees or trustees of persons under legal disabilities, because they are really guardians.

Mr. WALKER. Allow me to suggest that the phrase "legal representatives" would probably cover every case.

Mr. JOYCE. I think the phraseology of the bill is proper as it is. In the last portion of the bill it is provided that when the Commissioner of Pensions deems it for the interest of the pensioner he may cause the payment of the pension to be made in money. I understand from the Commissioner of Pensions that sharpers sometimes take advantage of ignorant pensioners who are paid by check or certificate. This bill is intended to remedy that evil by enabling the Commissioner of Pensions, when in his discretion it may be necessary for the protection of the pensioner, to cause the pension agent to make payment of the pension in money. This bill was drawn by the Commissioner of Pensions or by his procurement, and has been considered fully by our committee, who consulted the Commissioner on several occasions in regard to it. He is satisfied with the bill, and expresses the opinion that it will meet all the evils against which it is intended to provide.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. As the bill was read, I think I heard something about the payment of pensions in silver. If there is such a provision I would like to have the gentleman from Vermont explain it.

Mr. JOYCE. That relates to Indian pensioners residing in the Indian Territory. In regard to such pensioners the bill provides that the pension agent may make payment in cash on suitable vouchers, and that such payment shall be made in standard silver.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. The gentleman's explanation is satisfactory. I did not know how broad the provision was.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the House Calendar, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOYCE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POST-OFFICE, HOUSTON, TEXAS.

Mr. MILLS. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6393) authorizing the construction of a post-office in the city of Houston, Texas, and that the same be now put on its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the post-office and other Government offices, at the city of Houston, in the State of Texas. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $75,000: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than forty feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Texas shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same during the time the United States shall be or remain the owners thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. Reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the gentleman from Texas what the population of this town is?

Mr. MILLS. I ask the Clerk to read the report of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 6393) authorizing the construction of a post-office in the city of Houston, submitt the following report:

The city of Houston is at the head of tide-water from the Gulf coast of Texas. The census report shows a population in the city proper of 16,513. There is a population beyond the city limits and immediately adjoining of perhaps 5,000.

Houston is an important railroad center, having 1,500 miles of railroad lines concentrating there, by which the city is connected with nearly all the important portions of the State. Other lines are in course of construction that will largely add to its commercial importance, securing increased postal receipts and business. The Government has never expended one dollar for any public building in this promising city, whose population at the termination of the late war was about 7,000. The following statement is furnished by the Post-Office Department, and is submitted as an exhibit of the business of the Houston post-office:

Third quarter of 1880	$8,514 47
Fourth quarter of 1880	8,928 50
First quarter of 1881	9,554 48
Second quarter of 1881	8,262 35
	35,259 80
Third quarter of 1881	10,414 04
Fourth quarter of 1881	11,675 30
	22,089 34

These figures indicate an increase in the business of the Houston post-office quite flattering, and promising a healthy permanent advance of the city's progress and prosperity. We recommend the adoption of the accompanying substitute.

Mr. HOLMAN. Whatever may be the necessity of a post-office building at Houston, Texas, it seems to me $75,000 cannot be required for such a building as is necessary for the transaction of the public business. The sum of $50,000 must be ample for any such building. One objection I have urged to these bills is that the sum proposed is generally too large. I object to this bill unless the amount be reduced to $50,000.

Mr. MILLS. The city of Houston, as is known to a great many gentlemen here, is the railroad center of our State. Several thousand miles of railway center at that point. It is a distributing point for the whole State.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Is the right to object reserved?

The SPEAKER. It has been reserved.

Mr. MILLS. The building which has been used by the Government for a post-office at Houston and for which $1,000 rent has been paid, was burned down some time ago. No suitable building can now be obtained there for the large business of the post-office. I have been urged over and over again by people of that city to try to obtain from Congress authority for the construction of a building suitable for the transaction of the public business. Fifty thousand dollars is not a sufficient sum. Indeed $75,000 is not enough to construct a proper post-office building for that large and constantly growing city.

There are some sixteen thousand population reported inside of the city limits, which were drawn in by the last census, leaving some five or six thousand population outside of those limits who come to that post-office for their business. The people tell me there are 25,000 inhabitants in the city of Houston who depend on that office. I appeal to the gentleman from Indiana to withdraw his objection, as this is a meritorious case. I hope he will withdraw his objection and let the bill pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. I must object.

Mr. ALDRICH. Is there any court there?

Mr. MILLS. There is none. It is simply for a post-office.

Mr. ALDRICH. I object.

PONTON RAILWAY BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the House Calendar from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3825) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a ponton railway bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the mouth of the Upper Iowa River, in the State of Iowa, which was reported from the Committee on Commerce unanimously with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Objection will be reserved until after the bill has been read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Upper Iowa and Mississippi River Railway Company, a corporation duly organized under the laws of Iowa, or its assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to construct and maintain, between a point at or near the mouth of the Upper Iowa River, in the State of Iowa, and a point at or near the village of Victory, in the State of Wisconsin, for railroad purposes, a ponton railway bridge, subject, however, to the terms, provisions, restrictions, and requirements contained in chapter 224 of the supplement to the Revised Statutes of the United States: Provided, That in such bridge no more than one draw shall be required, which shall be not less than four hundred feet in width until otherwise determined by the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. The amendment of the Committee on Commerce will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following words:

"Provided, That in such bridge no more than one draw shall be required, which shall be not less than 400 feet in width until otherwise determined by the Secretary of War."

And in lieu thereof insert the following:

"Provided, That said bridge shall not be built or commenced until the plan and specifications for its construction have been submitted to the Secretary of War for his approval, nor until he shall approve the plan and location of said bridge; and if any change be made in the plan of construction of said bridge at any time, such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War; and any change in the construction or any alteration of said bridge that may be directed at any time by Congress or the Secretary of War shall be made at the cost and expense of the owners thereof: And provided further, That the right is hereby reserved to Congress to alter, amend, or repeal this act; and in case of the repeal of this act the bridge shall be removed without expense to the United States; and if this act be amended, any change or alteration required shall be without cost to the United States."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not hear this bill read. There is always so much noise in the morning we can hardly hear anything. I wish to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. UPDEGRAFF] whether the plan for this proposed bridge is to be submitted to the Secretary of War for his approval?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Iowa. It is to be submitted to the Secretary of War for his approval. The right is reserved in the bill to Congress as well as to the Secretary of War to change or correct the plan, and it is further provided that whatever changes shall be made shall be at the cost of the owners.

Mr. MILLS. I object to the further consideration of this bill.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Iowa. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection when he considers what the object of the bill is.

PRIME MERIDIAN.

Mr. BELMONT. I ask by unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Foreign Affairs joint resolution (H. R. No. 209) to authorize the President of the United States to call an international conference to fix on, and recommend for universal adoption, a common prime meridian to be used in the reckoning of longitude and in the regulation of time throughout the world, with the recommendation that it do pass. It is a unanimous report from the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose the power to appoint three persons to represent the United States at this convention of nations is not intended to be a source of expense. I am advised by the gentleman reporting the bill that it will not be attended with a cent of additional expense, and therefore I have no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

Mr. CARLISLE. It seems to me there ought to be some explanation of a measure as important as this seems to be. It will necessarily involve a reconstruction of all our maps and nautical almanaces and disarrange everything we now have.

Mr. BELMONT. That will depend on the action of the convention.

Mr. CARLISLE. But it looks to that.

The SPEAKER. The House is dividing on ordering the joint resolution to be engrossed and read the third time.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 58.

The SPEAKER. The House refuses to order the joint resolution to be engrossed and read the third time.

PONTON RAILWAY BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Iowa. I understood, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] withdrew his objection to my motion that the Committee of the Whole House on the Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3825) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a ponton railway bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the mouth of the Upper Iowa River, in the State of Iowa, and that the amendment of the Committee on Commerce be agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. What committee does this come from?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. It is reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, by the unanimous recommendation of that committee.

Mr. ATKINS. Does it cost any money?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Iowa. It does not.

The SPEAKER. The bill and amendment have already been read, and the Chair hears no objection to the present consideration of the bill and amendment.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, is this recognition for unanimous consent going generally around the House? If not, I must object. I am as generous a man as there is on the floor, but I believe in every one getting a chance. If the recognition is not to be general, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment reported from the Committee on Commerce.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FEES OF WITNESSES.

Mr. O'NEILL. I demand the regular order.

Mr. HOUSE. I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. HISCOCK. I am directed by the Committee on appropriations to report joint resolution (H. R. No. 243) to provide for a deficiency in the appropriations for fees of witnesses in the United States courts for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882.

The SPEAKER. Is it a privileged matter?

Mr. HISCOCK. It is.

The joint resolution was received and read a first and second time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the sum of $60,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to meet a deficiency in the appropriations for fees of witnesses in the United States courts for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York whether that deficiency has been demonstrated by a demand from the Department, or is it merely conjectural?

Mr. HISCOCK. The deficiency bill which was passed by the House and is now before the Senate contained an item of appropriation of $40,000 to supply deficiencies——

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to reserve the right to object to this resolution.

Mr. HISCOCK. And that item, after it was incorporated in the bill, was found to be inadequate to meet certain pressing demands upon the Department. The committee have received a subsequent communication from the Department of Justice making it entirely clear that $20,000 more would be required on account of the star-route prosecutions in progress in this city. I have now a communication from that Department stating that the money is entirely exhausted, and that they have not sufficient to pay the fees of witnesses who are here and desire to return home. I therefore ask the immediate consideration of this resolution; and of course the item of $40,000 in the deficiency bill will be stricken out in the Senate.

Mr. BLOUNT. It merely appropriates $20,000 more, then, making $60,000 in all?

Mr. HISCOCK. It is an increase of $20,000 over the amount appropriated in the deficiency bill, and now pending in the Senate. After a careful examination I am satisfied that the money should be made immediately available.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand, then, that the other item will be stricken out by the conference committee, leaving the total amount $60,000, as covered by the joint resolution.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will see that it is stricken out in the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. Would the gentleman from New York object to letting this joint resolution show that fact?

Mr. BLOUNT. That is not necessary; the amount can be stricken out in the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to it.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HISCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to report back two resolutions or propositions to fix the day for the final adjournment of this session, with a substitute which the committee recommend.

The SPEAKER. The report and resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On December 19, 1881, a resolution fixing the 1st day of May, 1882, as the day for the final adjournment of the two Houses of Congress was referred to your committee, and on April 24 a similar resolution, fixing the 22d of May, was also referred to your committee. After full consideration the committee report the following as a substitute for the two resolutions referred to it, and recommend its adoption:

"Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring,) That the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives declare their respective Houses adjourned sine die, at twelve o'clock meridian, on the 10th of July, 1882."

Mr. KELLEY. On that I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. KELLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NAVIGATION OF UPPER COLUMBIA RIVER.

Mr. VAN HORN. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back the following Senate resolution and recommend its adoption:

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate. (the House of Representatives concurring,) That 5,000 copies of the report of Lieutenant T. W. Symons, Corps of Engineers, respecting the navigable waters of the Upper Columbia River and its tributaries, and resources of the country adjacent thereto, be printed, 500 for the use of the War Department, 1,500 for the use of the Senate, and 3,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

The resolution was agreed to.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. VAN HORN. I am also directed by the Committee on Printing to report back the following Senate resolution, and recommend its passage.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the Public Printer be directed to furnish, commencing with the first session Forty-seventh Congress, 3,425 copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the use of the Senate, instead of 3,100 copies as ordered by the concurrent resolution of June 4, 1874.

Mr. VAN HORN. That addition is rendered necessary by the admission of new States.

The resolution was agreed to.

FOREST-TREE INSECTS.

Mr. VAN HORN. I am also directed by the committee to report back the following resolution, and recommend its passage with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed, for the use of the Department of Agriculture, with necessary illustrations, 2,000 copies of a special report on the insects affecting forest trees.

Amend by inserting after the words "two thousand copies of" the following: "The fifth report of the United States entomological commission, being."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

ORANGE-TREE CULTURE.

Mr. VAN HORN also, from the Committee on Printing, reported back the following substitute for the resolution submitted to that committee on the 24th of February, 1882, in relation to the printing of special reports on insects affecting orange trees; which was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "Resolved," and insert as follows:

"By the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed 5,000 copies of a special report from the Department of Agriculture on insects affecting the orange tree, with the necessary illustrations, 2,500 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,500 for the use of the Senate, and 1,000 for the use of the Department of Agriculture."

The substitute for the original resolution was agreed to.

ECONOMIC ENTOMOLOGY.

Mr. VAN HORN also, from the Committee on Printing, reported back with a favorable recommendation the following concurrent resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed for the use of the Department of Agriculture 1,000 copies of a special report entitled Bibliography of Economic Entomology.

RECONSIDERATION.

Mr. VAN HORN moved to reconsider the several votes by which the various reports of the Committee on Printing had been agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KELLEY. I move that the morning hour be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

CORRECTION.

Mr. RICE, of Missouri. I rise to a question of privilege. In the RECORD of June 6, on the bill offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] on which he moved to suspend the rules, the bill to correct an error in section 2504 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, I am recorded as not voting. My name was called; I did vote, and I voted "no." I desire to have the RECORD corrected showing that fact.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

KANSAS PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I am instructed by the Committee on Pacific Railroads to move that the bill (H. R. No. 6397) now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be recommitted to the Committee on Pacific Railroads, with the view of supplying an omission—not to lose its place on the Calendar.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. What is the bill? The gentleman merely mentioned its number.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It is the bill (H. R. No. 6397) to compel the payment by the Kansas Pacific Railway Company of the cost of surveying, selecting, and conveying certain lands granted to it, and to create a sinking fund for the Kansas Pacific, Sioux City and Pacific, and Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Companies, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objections to the request of the gentleman from Ohio, and the bill will be recommitted.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION.

Mr. KELLEY. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to resume the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committe of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. CAMP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation. By order of the House all general debate upon the bill is closed. The Clerk will now proceed to read the bill by sections.

The Clerk proceeded to read the first section. Before he concluded,

Mr. MILLS addressed the Chair.

Mr. ROBESON. Is the bill now open to amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is not open to amendment yet.

Mr. SPRINGER. The reading of the first section has not yet been concluded.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose did the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. MILLS. I rose to inquire whether the bill is now open to amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be after the first section is read.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask the committee to hear me a moment. I ask leave to have considered first certain amendments, which are little other than verbal, proposed by the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the first section be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will continue the reading of the first section.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the first section. Before he concluded,

Mr. ROBESON. I desire to offer an amendment right there.

Mr. KELLEY. I insist on the right of the committee to have the bill in the first instance perfected by the verbal amendments I have referred to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state it will be better to allow the section to be read through before amendments are offered. The Chair will then recognize the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROBESON,] after recognizing the chairman of the committee to offer some formal or verbal amendments.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the first section of the bill, as follows:

That on and after the passage of this act, except as hereinafter provided, the taxes herein specified imposed by the internal-revenue laws now in force be, and the same are hereby, repealed, namely: the stamp-tax on bank checks, drafts, orders, and vouchers; the tax on the capital and deposits of banks and bankers under section 3408 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended; the tax on the capital and deposits of national banks under section 5214 of said Revised Statutes, not including the taxes on the capital and deposits of said banks, bankers, and national banks for the current six months' period ending in the case of national banks on the 30th day of June, 1882, and in the case of other banks and bankers on the 31st day of May, 1882; the tax on matches, perfumery, medicinal preparations, and other articles imposed by Schedule A following section 3437 of said Revised Statutes.

Mr. KELLEY. I move to amend by striking out the word "current," before the word "six," in line 13 of the first section. It is surplusage, and I ask that it be stricken out.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KELLEY. On line 2 of the second section I am instructed——

The CHAIRMAN. The second section has not yet been reached.

Mr. ROBESON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the first section by striking out the words "capital and," in lines 7, 10, and 12.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend that amendment by striking out all after the word "namely," in the sixth line, down to "1882," in the seventeenth line.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana offer that as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. KELLEY. If any gentleman desires to speak in support of that amendment I wish to reply; otherwise I will state my objection to it now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is recognized. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman from Indiana, however, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey would be first in order, as it is to perfect the text which the gentleman from Indiana proposes to strike out.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey moves to strike out certain words from this section. My motion is to strike out these words:

The stamp tax on bank checks, drafts, orders, and vouchers; the tax on the capital and deposits of banks and bankers under section 3408 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended; the tax on the capital and deposits of national banks under section 5214 of said Revised Statutes, not including the taxes on the capital and deposits of said banks, bankers, and national banks for the current six months' period ending in the case of national banks on the 30th day of June, 1882, and in the case of other banks and bankers on the 31st day of May, 1882.

That is to say, I propose to strike out from this paragraph all that relieves the banks, whether national or otherwise, from the taxation now imposed upon them; while I believe the gentleman from New Jersey only proposes to retain a portion of the tax on the banks here proposed to be abolished. This bill is a strange feature of legislation. We are drawing from the country annually the enormous sum of $400,000,000, and no matter what the form of this taxation may be it is a fearful drain upon the resources of the country. Yet the very first section of this bill relieves the greatest capital interest in the United States from a tax of over $11,000,000, while no productive industry, no interest of labor, is relieved of one dollar of the enormous burdens of taxation now borne.

I think, sir, there has been no call from the country in favor of relieving the banking institutions from taxation. The banks, local as well as national, enjoy franchises which are not enjoyed by any other class of our citizens on whom a tax is now imposed by Federal legislation. It may be safely asserted that the Government may with entire fairness impose a tax on institutions which derive special franchises from the Government rather than on persons who enjoy no such franchise and conduct their business without any favor from Government. Why should not special franchises justify special taxation? Should the products of the farm be taxed by Federal law—as in the case of tobacco, a common product of the soil—and great capital interests, invested with special corporate franchises, be exempt from Federal taxation?

I insist that this tax upon the banks is a very mild tax, and one that is easily borne; borne by capital employed in a form exceptionally profitable, and made so by special franchises. No industry of the country will be benefited by the removal of this eleven millions of tax. No productive employment will be benefited by it; no interest of labor. It will simply relieve a certain portion of the capital of the country, enjoying special franchises, from a slight burden of taxation. Only this and nothing more, while hundreds of millions of tax is born by productive labor without any proposition for relief.

I trust this committee will strike out all that portion of this section which pertains to banks; that on checks, standing alone, is the most entitled to favor, but I propose to let the whole tax stand. I think that it is not good policy for us to encourage by law the hoarding of the money of the country in the vaults of the banks. It is better for the country that it should be held by citizens than that the banks should be given a monopoly of the loaning of money, for that subjects our people to the rates of interest which those banks may charge; a rate which no productive industry can bear.

If the banks shall have no motive for hoarding the money of the country the private citizen is more likely to invest his money without resorting to the expediency of bank facilities, which is generally ruinous to farmers and all other producers, and can be beneficial only to men engaged in commercial employments, and even then is often destructive to them.

I trust Congress will not relieve the banks of the country, whether local or Federal, of this mild taxation, while the general industry of the country in innumerable forms is subject to oppressive taxation; and especially that we will not relieve these banks from the slight tax now resting upon their capital and deposits, while you continue your system of taxation on the products of the soil, hedging in and oppressing labor in the fields of industry where only the sharp exigencies of Government will justify the presence of a horde of Federal tax-gatherers.

Mr. KELLEY. In the course of the general debate upon this bill I have heard much complaint made because the authors of this bill have refused to reduce taxes. And now there comes in an amendment which proposes to strike out one of the leading reductions, or rather series of reductions, proposed by this bill.

The taxation of the capital of banks is double taxation. If five men, for instance, should each go into business and take adjoining buildings, the one to engage in the business of selling groceries, another in hardware, another in dry goods, one in general merchandise, and one to establish a private bank, they will all be taxed alike by State and municipal legislation, and only one of them is taxed by the General Government. They all pay the same local and State taxes.

Now, I apprehend that the business of a private banker is as legitimate as that of the merchant beside whose place of business his bank is located. And I can see no reason why the Federal Government should select for double taxation the capital of the private banker, while it omits that of all other citizens.

And what is said with reference to the private banker is equally true of the State bank, which is a mere establishment for the use of its own capital, for the safe keeping and prompt return of deposits, and for the application of accumulated deposits to stimulate the business of the locality. It has no circulation; it has no advantage from the General Government; it derives no privilege from it, and is simply a local private institution. Instead of being aided by the Federal Government it is restricted, very properly as I think, from one of the hitherto recognized functions of State banking, the emission of notes, because the Federal Government imposes a tax of 10 per cent. upon all notes issued by State banks.

I therefore hold that the taxation by the Federal Government of the capital of private bankers and State banks is invidious and unjust, and that the only ground upon which it could be defended would be by showing that such business is immoral and against the public good.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the pending amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I move to strike out the last word. I rise for the purpose of supporting the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.] It is at last conceded by the Republican members of this House that we can reduce Federal taxation. When we were seeking to reduce the taxes on the necessaries of life by a revision of the tariff we were met with complaints that if we did so we would not be able to raise revenue enough to pay pensions and the ordinary expenses of the Government, and therefore there could be no reduction.

It is now admitted on all hands that there can be a reduction of taxation. Tariff duties are collected from almost every necessary of life. They are laid upon the poorest as well as upon the wealthiest in the land. The proposition adopted by the Committee on Ways and Means, and advocated mainly by the other side of the House, is that we shall proceed with the reduction of taxation by beginning with those who are best able to bear it. They pass by the working man, they pass by the poor man, and proceed at once to lift the burden off the shoulders of those who are best able to bear it.

The first tax sought to be taken off by this section is the tax on banks; the next is the tax upon medicines, and then the tax upon matches. Of those three different taxes in the first section of the bill there is but one that touches the interest of the poor man, and that is the pitiful tax of two cents on each box of matches.

The greatest amount of tax which by the first section of this bill is sought to be taken off is the tax on the banks, about $16,000,000. The next is the tax on proprietary medicines, amounting to $2,226,503. The only tax which you propose to take off the poor man, off the millions and millions of laboring people in the country, is the $3,278,580 raised by the tax on matches. Thus you propose to relieve three or four thousand bankers from nearly seventeen millions of taxes, who are well able to bear it; about two millions off patent medicines, and only about three millions off the millions of people who use matches.

The logic and effect of this whole bill is to make a bonus to the banks, patent medicine men, and the tobacco manufacturers. The reduction of the taxes on the banks will be of no advantage to the people at large. The rates of interest will be as high without as with the bank tax. It will be as difficult to borrow money without as with the tax. The only feature of the bank tax for which any good reason is given for reduction is the stamp on checks, &c., which only nets the Government $2,253,411, and which all will concede is a nuisance. But, sir, it is more easily borne than some other taxes. There are those who claim that there would be a reduction of interest if the tax on the capital, circulation, deposits, and checks of banks was taken off. I reiterate here, and I have no fear that there can be any successful contradiction made against that assertion, that the taking off of the tax from the banks will not reduce the interest which borrowers will have to pay to the extent of one mill. Every bank in the land will charge the same rate of interest if the tax is taken off as before.

I have no prejudice against banks. I desire fair treatment for them, as that occupation is legitimate and essential to the commerce and trade of the country, and when the burden of taxation is lightened where it is more onerous I am in favor of relief to them. This bill is prepared in the interest of bank capitalists and manufacturers of tobacco. There is no truth in the statement that a reduction of the tax on manufactured tobacco will bring relief to the tobacco-grower. This was clearly demonstrated when a few years ago the tax was reduced from twenty-four to sixteen cents. The leaf tobacco soon thereafter became lower in the market, and has continued lower ever since than it was when the tax was reduced. This bill could very properly be designated as one for the purpose of giving a bonus to bankers and tobacco manufacturers.

It is now admitted on all sides that we have reached a condition of things which warrant a reduction of taxation. Where shall we commence? Do not humanity and good statesmanship demand that we shall first remove the most onerous burdens, those afflicting persons least able to bear them? Should we not commence with relief to the poor and the workingmen? Nearly all the necessaries of life are heavily taxed, and cost far more than if the tax upon them were removed. Every article of clothing, of household goods, of tools used by the mechanic, and every agricultural implement of the husbandman is heavily taxed, and is taxed much heavier than the luxuries of life.

The poor man, the laborer, or farmer is compelled to pay a much larger tax in proportion to the value of his property than the banker or manufacturer. With these facts before us, where should we begin the work of reduction? The Committee on Ways and Means answers this inquiry by bringing in this bill. That committee proposes, and the majority in this House will very probably commence with, the reduction of taxation on the banker and the wealthy manufacturing class, and leave the poor man to groan beneath his burdens. That is the statesmanship and humanity of the Republican party. It is true, they take off the tax on the poor man's matches, but this is a tax hardly felt by him; and this committee proposes to remove nearly eight times as much as the match tax from the bankers alone. This committee, with a great flourish, says, "Let us reduce the taxes," and straightway it proceeds to give the lion's share of reduction to the bankers and manufacturers and the pismire's share to the masses.

I am one of those who hold that the highest duty of statesmanship demands that you should so legislate as to lighten the burdens upon labor and upon the poorer classes of the country; and when we approach the question of reducing taxation, I insist we should begin with those taxes which bear most heavily upon the poor and laboring classes, rather than first take the burdens off the capitalists and those best able to bear them.

Mr. ROBESON. Mr. Chairman, we hear a great deal from the other side to the effect that all taxes upon the business of the country are paid by the consumer. As a general proposition it is true; but one other thing is also true: all taxes on the business of a bank are paid by the borrower. The consumer of an article meets the manufacturer and vender upon equal terms; he comes offering his money for the article he needs. The borrower comes asking favors of the man or institution who is to lend him money, and he is obliged to assume the expense imposed by the Government on the money he borrows. All the expenses that you put upon the machinery of banking, therefore, come out of the debtor and borrower class; they are direct taxes upon the business of the country, and upon the resources and credit of the men who carry on the business and employ the labor of the country.

The bill, if the amendment which I have sent to the desk be adopted, will leave taxation untouched upon the capital of the banker but will take it off his business. The man of small means who has not a stamped check-book, who has to run around to buy a stamp for two cents every time he writes a check, will feel relief from inconvenience as well as relief from the taxation. The man who is in the habit of borrowing money from a bank, and who is obliged to have a line of deposit for the purpose of getting a discount, will be relieved from the taxation which he pays for whenever he receives the favor of a discount.

Every man who thinks broadly, every man who thinks wisely, every man who takes a comprehensive view of the effect of taxation upon business and upon those who borrow and use capital for the purpose of transacting business, will see that every tax such as a check tax or a deposit tax is a tax upon the business, a weight upon the industry, a pressure upon the producing and developing labor of the country. These are the reasons which influence me in favoring the removal of this tax from the business of the country done through the banks.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. CARLISLE. I renew it, in order to reply to the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROBESON.] This bill, as reported from the Committee on Ways and Means, proposes to repeal the tax on capital and deposits of banks and bankers imposed by section 3408 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended. The gentleman from New Jersey moves to strike out the words "and capital," so that if his amendment be adopted the bill will simply repeal the tax on deposits, leaving still in operation the tax on capital. I wish to call attention to the effect of this amendment, and to show that it makes a discrimination between the national banks on the one hand and the State banks and private bankers on the other. During the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1881, the national banks paid as a tax upon their deposits $4,940,945; while the State banks and private bankers paid as tax upon their deposits $2,946,906. Thus the national banks paid as a deposit tax nearly twice as much as was paid by the State banks and private bankers. If the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey should be adopted this tax will be repealed, and the national banks will be relieved of taxation to the extent of nearly $5,000,000, while the State banks and private bankers will be relieved to the extent only of less than $3,000,000.

Mr. BROWNE. Are not the two classes of bankers relieved equally?

Mr. CARLISLE. They pay the same rate of taxation precisely; but I am speaking now of the extent of the relief which will be extended to the national banks as a class, and the relief which will be extended to the State banks and private bankers as a class.

Now, how will it be as to capital? The national banks, according to the last official report, had a capital of $465,735,685, on which they paid only $431,233 of taxation; while the State banks and private bankers, with a capital of $211,642,320—less than half that of the national banks—paid more than twice as much tax—$811,006.35.

Mr. BROWNE. That was because the national banking capital was invested largely in Government bonds.

Mr. CARLISLE. Certainly.

Mr. CRAPO. If the private banker had seen fit to invest his capital in Government bonds, would he not have been relieved of taxation to a corresponding extent?

Mr. CARLISLE. Of course he would; but he would have had no means left to bank on, because he cannot take out circulation on his bonds, as the national banks can. But I ask the gentleman from New Jersey why he wants to make this discrimination—why he desires to repeal the deposit tax, relieving the national banks to the extent of nearly $5,000,000 and the State banks and private bankers to the extent only of $3,000,000, thus making State banks and private bankers pay upon a capital only one-half that of the national banks nearly twice as much tax as the national banks pay? If this bill is to pass it should repeal the tax on bank capital as well as the tax on bank deposits, and thus relieve other banks and bankers as well as those institutions organized under the national banking law. The State banks and private bankers derive no privileges or immunities from the laws of the United States, and there is far less reason why they should be taxed than there is why national banks should be taxed.

I repeat if this bill is to pass at all, relieving the banks, we should give to the State banks and private bankers the same measure of relief that is given to the national banks. That is the only point I am making. When the national bank invests its capital in United States bonds it receives from the Treasurer 90 per cent. of circulation. A State bank does not invest its capital in United States bonds and cannot obtain circulation on it. It pays four times as much tax, according to the amount of its capital, that a national bank does, and the gentleman from New Jersey now proposes to leave that tax on and to take off the other tax on deposits which falls most heavily on the national banks.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. I move a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey.

The CHAIRMAN. A substitute is not in order.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. Is it in order to move an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. Very well; I offer it as such an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 10, amend section 1 by striking out the words "capital and;" and insert after the word "and," in line 13, the words "on the deposits of;" and after line 15 insert the words "on the capital and deposits."

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the effect of that amendment is this: to take the tax off both capital and deposits of private and State banks and to leave it on the capital of national banks. The feeling against national banks has brought about this motion of the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROBESON.] Now, there seems to be a sentiment abroad that because national banks derive so much benefit from the advantages extended to them by the Government, therefore they should be willing to pay this tax on their capital. As the private and State banks have not these advantages possessed by the national banks, it is but justice that the tax should be taken off both their capital and deposits. I would simply add to what has been stated by the gentleman from Kentucky that the private banks deriving no advantages through any laws now upon the statute-books should be treated precisely as you would treat other business men. They have no circulation; indeed the laws as they are now enforced prevent them from having any circulation, because they would be compelled to pay 10 per cent. on such circulation, which excludes it from the marts of trade and prevents its issuance by the private or State banks. The national banks having the advantage of this circulation, it is perhaps proper we should tax their capital. But why should this be extended to the private banks, I would again ask, or to the State banks?

Now, my amendment and the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] proposes to take the tax off both capital and deposits of private and State banks and to leave the tax on the capital of national banks.

Mr. WILSON. You propose to tax the capital of national banks?

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. Personally I shall vote for the bill as it is, but I say it would be unjust to the private and State banks to adopt the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROBESON,] and therefore I move to amend his amendment to except the private banks from the imposition of the tax on capital.

Mr. WILSON. That would tax the capital of national banks?

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. Yes, provided it is adopted.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of relieving the honest masses of the people from the burdens of taxation, and have voted for every amendment and proposition having that object in view since I have been a member of Congress. We have looked for some bill to be reported from the Committee on Ways and Means giving relief to the people, but we have looked in vain. All relief from the protective tariff, which taxes the great masses of the people to enrich the few manufacturers, has been denied us, and instead of reducing the tariff taxation even upon the necessaries of life used by the poor people, the whole question has been postponed by the creation of the tariff commission, under a bill reported from that committee and passed by the Republican members of this House. The President has appointed the commission and it is wholly in the interest of the manufacturers, and their report, as we predicted in the debate on that bill, will be against the interest of the people.

And what have we now presented to us by this committee? A bill to lighten the taxes under the internal-revenue system upon the masses of the people? No, sir; but a bill in the interest of bankers and manufacturers. It lightens the tax upon the banks and bankers about $15,000,000 per annum, and benefits the manufacturers of tobacco to some extent, and the manufacturers of matches, and to sugar-coat the pill the tax on quack medicines and nostrums of doubtful benefit to the people is taken off. Sir, I cannot, for one, swallow it. I shall vote against the bill unless materially altered by amendments. It is a bill in accordance with the whole policy of legislation of the Republican party. They are ready always to legislate for the interest of monopolies and capital. Their whole history proves it, and yet they deceive the laborers and agriculturists, and pretend to be the friends of the farmers.

At this session they have refused to modify the high tariff duties on a single item that would benefit the farmers. They refused to lessen the duty or tariff tax on Bessemer steel rails, which is $28 per ton, although it was demonstrated that the manufacturers were making a net profit of over 60 per cent. on these rails. This enormous profit comes principally out of the farmers in the increased price of the freight upon tobacco, grain, &c., imposed by the owners of railroads in consequence of the high price they have to pay for steel rails by reason of the tariff.

On the 5th day of this month (June, 1882) I moved to suspend the rules and pass a bill abolishing the tariff duty on trace-chains, which is 58 per cent., almost a total prohibition against their importation. This was not a partisan measure. It benefited the Republican farmer and teamster as well as the Democrat. It benefited the black man as well as the white man. We succeeded in getting the yeas and nays on that bill, and who voted for it? Let the RECORD speak:

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

"A bill to abolish the duty on trace-chains.

"Be it enacted, &c., That the duty on trace-chains is hereby abolished, and from and after the passage of this act no duty shall be collected on importations of trace-chains, and they shall be placed upon the free list. And all laws and parts of laws inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed."

The vote was as follows:

(Greenbackers in Italics.)

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the motion of Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky, was not agreed to.

Before the result was announced,

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, said: Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote. I did not hear my name called.

The SPEAKER. That statement is not sufficient to entitle the gentleman to vote.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I came down here to listen and vote on the second call, but entered into conversation——

The SPEAKER. The Chair, under a very liberal construction of the rule, has allowed members to vote upon their statement that they were present and giving attention but did not hear their names called.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I was present and came down near the Clerk's desk for the purpose of voting, but happened to engage in conversation——

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot extend the rule, which has been already very liberally construed.

The following pairs were announced:

Mr. SHULTZ with Mr. LE FEVRE.

Mr. BOWMAN with Mr. STEPHENS.

Mr. PAUL with Mr. CALKINS, on this vote.

Mr. SPEER with Mr. PHELPS, on this vote.

The result was announced as above stated.

(See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, June 6, 1882.)

Seventy-three members voted in favor of the motion to put trace-chains on the free list, all Democrats but two, and one hundred and nine voted against it, all Republicans and Greenbackers. Thus it was demonstrated that the Republican members of this Congress were determined to give the farmers no relief, even in the small item of trace-chains, to enable them to make their crops; and why? Because it injured the Treasury? No, sir. The whole duty or tariff collected on trace-chains the last year reported was only about $22,000, a mere trifle compared with the millions collected by the manufacturers of trace-chains by reason of the tariff which enables the manufacturers to nearly double the price; but, sir, the Republican party must tax all the farmers to benefit the few manufacturers of trace-chains.

This item did not require the revision of the tariff commission. A member of Congress who was not qualified to decide this question, in my judgment, is not qualified to represent a farmer. It is a vote that no man can justify. Let them explain it to their constituents if they can.

I know they may contend that the tariff cheapens the price of trace-chains, but that is too absurd to deceive any one, because, if it does, why did the representatives of the manufacturers vote against abolishing the tariff duty or tax of 58 per cent? It must be evident to every one that they wanted to retain the duty to protect the manufacturers by enabling them to add on the amount of the tariff tax of 58 per cent.

But, sir, to return to this bill under consideration. It gives no relief to farmers. It benefits in a small degree the manufacturers of tobacco, but not those who raise it. I live in one of the largest tobacco-growing counties west of the Tennessee River, in Kentucky, the county of Ballard. The whole district I have the honor to represent is a tobacco-growing district. I live among tobacco-planters. I have raised it on my farm all my life, and I understand the interest of the people I represent. I am not here, sir, to represent the interest of bankers and monopolists and corporations.

I have no unjust prejudice toward them; but I demand even-handed justice to the people I represent. We are unjustly discriminated against. Why do you permit the growers of corn, of rye, oats, and all products to sell their products free of tax and impose a tax of $42,000,000 upon the article of tobacco? It is true tobacco is a luxury to the one who uses it, but, sir, the cultivation of tobacco is a necessity to my people. It is our money crop; it buys the necessaries of life with us; we are dependent upon it; so are the people in the countries that raise tobacco.

I have introduced a bill at every session of Congress to give our tobacco planters the right to sell the products of their labor free of any tax. These bills and others for the same purpose, introduced by gentlemen representing tobacco-growing districts, were referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and there they have slept the sleep of death. This bill gives us no relief, but, thank God, it gives us under the rules of this House the first opportunity of having a vote on the question where a majority can rule, and I hope we will succeed in adding an amendment to this bill giving us this just right.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] who reported the bill under consideration, in his opening speech in favor of this bill used the following language:

> Mr. Chairman, a contemplation of the financial condition of the country presents a spectacle such as never was seen before in the world's history. Our revenues increase so enormously, and the fixed charges against the Treasury decrease so rapidly, that our accumulating surplus revenue is regarded by thoughtful and conservative business men as a fruitful source of danger. The bill in question proposes to make a reduction of less than $17,000,000—in exact figures, $16,892,880—to take effect immediately, and of about $6,000,000 to take effect on the 1st of May, 1883. Last year we collected $360,000,000 of revenue from all sources, and we had a surplus of $100,069,000. This year we shall collect over $400,000,000, and our expenditures have been greatly reduced.

If the gentleman is really alarmed at the amount in the Treasury, why did he and his committee not report some bill lessening the taxes on the necessaries of life and the articles used by the poor laboring classes of the country—upon some of the necessary articles of clothing used by every farmer? Oh, this would not do, as it would lessen the profits of the manufacturer! But they can report a bill benefiting the capitalists—the bankers; those that are able to pay. Mr. Chairman, I do not feel alarmed at the surplus in the Treasury; but, sir, I think it ought not to remain there; it should be paid on the bonds upon which we are paying interest; $400,000,000 of them are now due and can be called in any day by the Treasury. But, sir, under the policy of the Republican party this will not do. It would interfere with the national banks. They must have the bonds to bank on. Sir, I want to see this whole debt paid off as rapidly as possible.

Instead of lessening the taxes on banks, let us make the taxes uniform. Let us impose an income tax on all incomes of over $4,000, such as will be offered by my friend, Mr. PHIL. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, as an amendment to this bill. If it is adopted it will yield a revenue of over $100,000,000 annually. You could then abolish the whole taxation on tobacco, which is $42,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, if this amendment is just and right, why should every poor man in the country be taxed unjustly, as they are, and the bondholders exempted? Why exempt the capitalist while you impose the burdens of Government on the laborers?

These bondholders and capitalists have had a long rest; they have paid no tax on their incomes to the Federal Government for seventeen years. Let their representatives show some patriotism, some justice, and vote with us to adopt the amendment which will be offered to this bill, taxing incomes. It is just and right, and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. Chairman, we had this question up of taxing incomes during the Forty-sixth Congress, and I voted for it then—a large majority voted for it—but it failed because the attempt was made under a suspension of the rules. It required two-thirds to pass the bill. The Committee on Ways and Means have never reported a bill for that purpose, although they knew that a majority were in favor of it. And this is the first opportunity we have had to equalize the burdens of Government by taxing the incomes of millionaires, and I hope every member on this floor who regards the general interests of the people will vote for the amendment to do this.

Mr. Chairman, I do not regard a national debt as a blessing, and that it ought to be perpetuated to keep up a system of national banks. I am opposed to these national banks, and gave my reasons when I voted against rechartering them during this session. Let us pay off the national debt as fast as possible, and practice close economy in the administration of the Government. The only alarm I have felt in regard to the large amount in the Treasury is seeing it voted out by the Republican party so extravagantly for unnecessary purposes instead of applying it to the payment of the national debt.

Mr. Chairman, I have spoken plainly. I do not want to reflect upon any gentleman personally, but, sir, a duty I owe to my constituents and the country impels me to speak thus plainly. Corporations, banks, monopolies, and railroads have been and are still the pets of the Republican party, and are exercising a dangerous influence over the legislation of the country. I was glad, to-day, to hear two Republicans denounce this system; it was refreshing. I must say, sir, in conclusion, I expect but little from this Congress; but, sir, this fall we will hear the voice of the American people in the Congressional elections, and I hope and believe they will elect a representation that will reflect the true interest of the great mass of the people in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. PAGE. I ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to give me his attention for a moment——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. PAGE. I move to strike out the last two words of the substitute. I shall vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, although I would prefer that he would strike out the words "on bank checks," in line 6, and "on vouchers"——

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman will permit me, I will state that I have proposed to modify the amendment——

Mr. PAGE. Then, as I have said, I shall vote for the amendment. I do not believe that it is necessary for this Government to reduce the tax upon bank deposits and banking capital to the amount proposed in this bill. My friend from New Jersey who has just addressed the committee has introduced an amendment for which he proposes, I believe, not to vote himself, to strike out the tax on bank capital; and he made a speech in favor of the bill as it is. The gentleman says in his speech that the taxes are paid by the poor people and this tax likewise is paid by them. I take issue with the gentleman with reference to that. I deny the proposition entirely. The tax that is paid by bank depositors is paid by the bankers, and as a rule they do not pay a dollar of interest upon deposits. Their business is largely carried on upon the deposits, which are a source of profit to them, and if any one thinks that this bill is going to revolutionize the politics of this country, and that we are going back home to be received with banners and music for having passed such a measure, I think he will find himself sadly mistaken.

When the band has finished playing and the question is asked by your constituents, "What have you done for the benefit of the people and for the reduction of the burdens upon them?" you can only reply, "Why, we have taken $8,000,000 of the taxes off." "Off the people?" "Oh, no; we have taken it off the national banks; we have taken the tax off deposits in the banks, and we have taken the tax off the banks themselves and the bankers, and we have also reduced the license tax a little on whisky and on tobacco and cigars, and proprietary medicines, and on matches." And gentlemen think there will be a grand ovation when they tell their constituents all of that, and that they will receive the applause of the people because they have done so much for them. I do not believe, sir, that they will find their anticipations verified by the fact. Will it not be natural for people to ask whether there was nothing else that you could have done which would really benefit them? Could the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives find nothing on which to reduce the burden of taxation to relieve the poor man and the laboring man and the overburdened people of this country but the tax on bank capital? Could you not aid those who are suffering under the burden of taxation in some other and really effective manner? Was it impossible for the Committee on Ways and Means, with its experience and ability, to find some article in the great catalogue of taxes on which they could relieve the poor people from these burdens of taxation; or was this the only thing to be found in the whole catalogue upon which you could give them this little promise of relief?

Poor people, or the men who deposit in banks even, do not pay a dollar of that tax. It is paid by the bankers. Since I have had the honor of having a seat in this House I have voted for, and this House has passed, a bill that struck the tax from savings-banks. That was right. There we reached the real point where the people had an interest. In taking a tax off deposits in savings-banks you take off a tax that comes from the people. This comes from the banks. And when you have taken it off you have benefited nobody in this land, in my judgment, that ought to be benefited at this time.

I will not lie awake nights like my friend from Kansas because of an overflowing Treasury. This is the first time in my legislative experience I find members of the American House of Representatives crying out as one man "There is too much money in the Federal Treasury." [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLS. I see no necessity for the Government of the United States commencing to give away its revenue when there is a debt of $485,000,000 drawing an annual interest of thirteen or fourteen millions that is now due and payable. I go with the gentlemen in this House for the reduction of taxation whenever it can be made to alleviate and lighten the burdens that press upon the people. But, sir, there can be no argument made in support of this bill for the repeal of the taxes that come to the Treasury under the provisions of law which it seeks to repeal, except such argument as is designed to serve the purposes of the moneyed rings of this country. There is no relief to the great masses of our people in this bill. It was never designed that any relief should come to them from it. The great, sole, and only object of this measure, the object in view when it was given birth to by its friends, was that it should perpetuate that debt and prevent it from being paid, in order that that indebtedness should serve as a basis for the perpetuation of a system of national banking that is to prey continually on the people.

The bill has a twofold object. One is to continue the system of national banking, and the other is to continue the existence of a false pretense for keeping up high taxation on imports, so called, for the protection of American industry.

Mr. Chairman, is it not a little singular that this thing was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania? Is it not a little strange that the first gun in favor of the repeal of internal taxes came from the gentleman from Pennsylvania on that side and from the gentleman from Pennsylvania on this side of the House in New York City; the speech of one gentleman being delivered in the tariff convention of New York City, and the speech of the other delivered to the national bankers and the tariff men of New York City?

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir.

Mr. MILLS. I have reference to the speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] in New York in favor of the repeal of internal revenue.

Mr. RANDALL. My speech was delivered before a Democratic meeting——

Mr. MILLS. I know what sort of Democrats they were.

Mr. RANDALL. And a meeting that gave response by applause.

Mr. MILLS. Yes; it was a meeting of national bankers and high-tariff men; heretics in the Democratic party, and who have always been regarded as heretics from its very foundation. The only distinction between them at this day and the same class of men forty years ago is that then they acknowledged they were heretics, and now they call themselves the orthodox Democrats of the party and regard all the balance of us as heretics.

Why is it that this thing comes from Pennsylvania? The great cry for reform in taxation comes from Pennsylvania, and the protectionists at that. You do not hear anybody in Texas or in Missouri or in Iowa or through the Western country demanding the repeal of the taxation on banks. You do not hear any great complaint from the people about the money that comes into the Treasury being superabundant and about there being no necessity for it.

I heard what the gentleman from Iowa stated the other day upon this floor; but he was not expressing the will of the people of Iowa when he said there was a superabundant Treasury and that we were collecting largely too much from the people and had no use for the money collected. What man of common sense ever would think of giving away his revenues when he had his debts, bearing interest, due, and demanding payment? But the Congress of the United States is being boldly and insolently asked to-day to throw away the treasures of the people of the United States for the sole purpose of gratifying the godless greed of these monopolists; nothing else in the world. Who is to be benefited by giving away these $17,000,000 that are now received from the coffers of the banks? How many of your people in the West and South will be benefited by that?

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 1781) to transfer six condemned cast-iron cannon to Storer Post No. 1 of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, for use on a monument to deceased soldiers and sailors;

A bill (S. No. 1924) to authorize the Secretary of War to deliver to the Augusta Soldiers' Monument Association at Augusta, Maine, certain cannon and cannon balls;

A bill (S. No. 1942) granting condemned cannon to Abe Lincoln Post No. 29 of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Council Bluffs, Iowa, for monumental purposes;

A bill (S. No. 2050) donating four condemned cast-iron cannon and four cast-iron cannon balls for the soldiers' monument at Ironton, Ohio;

A bill (S. No. 2034) to authorize the Secretary of War to deliver certain cannon for monumental purposes to the Grand Army of the Republic at Westminster, Massachusetts; also to the Danville Light Battery A, Illinois National Guard, at Danville, Illinois, for monumental purposes;

A bill (S. No. 2057) granting condemned cannon, &c., to the city of Marshalltown, Iowa;

A bill (S. No. 2068) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to the Jeff. C. Davis Post No. 16 of the Grand Army of the Republic at Vincennes, Indiana, six condemned cast-iron guns for monumental purposes;

A bill (S. No. 1939) for the relief of the Protestant Orphan Asylum at Natchez, in the State of Mississippi;

A bill (S. No. 1492) for the relief of settlers and purchasers of lands on the public domain in the States of Nebraska and Kansas; and

A bill (S. No. 972) creating the Oregon Short Line Railway Company a corporation in the Territories of Utah, Idaho, and Wyoming, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 5996) for the relief of J. H. Merrill; and

A bill (H. R. No. 5004) to accept and ratify an agreement with the Shoshone and Bannock Indians, for the sale of a portion of their reservation in Idaho Territory required for the use of the Utah and Northern Railroad, and to make the necessary appropriation for carrying out the same.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. HASKELL. There are just two sources of Federal taxes in this country; one is by means of customs duties, and the other by the collection of internal revenue. By a large vote in this House, indorsed by the overwhelming sentiment of both parties, Democratic and Republican, because of the connection of customs duties with the great material interests of this country, it was decided by Congress that the question of whatever reduction of taxes might be made in the customs duties should be left to a commission. That whole question by act of Congress was relegated by a large vote to a commission.

It has been conceded that some reduction of Federal taxation should be made. If there is to be no reduction in customs duties until the tariff commission shall report there is but one place where taxes can be reduced, and that is in the internal revenue.

The honorable gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] and the honorable gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] seem to bewail the fact that the poor people of the United States are not to be relieved by this bill. Why are they not to be specifically relieved by this bill? Because there is no internal-revenue tax that touches the poor people that they wish repealed, save perhaps the tax on matches, and that tax is repealed by the bill. What is there that yields internal revenue? Nothing but the tax on banks, whisky, tobacco, and some stamp taxes.

By an overwhelming majority of sentiment on the Republican side of the House it is determined that so far as internal taxes are concerned the tax on whisky and tobacco will yield us all the revenue we need, and we propose to continue the tax on those articles and to take it off other articles.

Now, those gentlemen on this floor who assume that the people of the United States are idiots and fools, to be tickled by brass bands and demagogy, are the most deceived members that are sitting in Congress to-day. The people know what the internal-revenue taxes touch; they know that by reducing internal-revenue taxation we would not reach the poor people specifically. They understand that when we present this bill taking off these taxes that we are taking off the only taxes under the internal-revenue system that we can reach which we want to take off. They do not ask us to take off the tax on whisky and tobacco, but they do ask that we shall simplify the taxes imposed on other commodities, and reduce the revenues that we do not need.

By and by, when the tariff commission shall report, there will be a reduction of taxation by customs duties in those places where the customs duties impose a tax at all on the people. There is no doubt that, if the Republican party continues in power, when the commission reports those gentlemen who ask for relief from odious and unjust tariff discrimination will be gratified, and they will not be gratified until that commission does report.

No amount of noise and demagogy upon this floor is going to force into this bill a system of legislation that is at once out of order, and cannot be reached. Not a man on this floor who has talked about tariff taxes but what knows that we cannot put a tariff reduction into this bill. They all know that that is out of order, and hence that this clatter concerning tariff taxes and their incongruities and their excessive rates is all out of place, and liable to the charge of mere demagogy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky, (to Mr. HASKELL.) If it affects the revenue, why not?

Mr. HASKELL. You try it.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. If you give us a fair ruling you can put such an amendment in this bill.

Mr. VANCE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired, and debate upon the pending amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. PAGE. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. CANDLER. I renew it, though I did not expect to speak on this question at all. It does seem strange to me that while it is claimed by the people of this country that they are overburdened with taxation, while the majority of the members of this House admit that fact, when we finally get a report from the Committee on Ways and Means and come to the point for practical legislation, the methods seem to be the trouble, and we can give no relief to the people. First, a gentleman on one side of the House gets up and says that you should begin with the tariff; then a gentleman on the other side of the House gets up and says that you should begin with the tax on whisky and tobacco, and the result is, as sailors say, we are in the "doldrums," and cannot move either one way or the other.

Now, I am in favor of practical legislation. I believe that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means demonstrated clearly that the country was not only overburdened with taxation, but that it was right that we should relieve the country of some of the war taxes in the form of internal revenue which the people have had laid upon them. It seems to me that every reasonable man ought to admit that he has presented a bill which contains as little as it was possible to contain and relieve the people at all.

The method which has been proposed is not my method. I believe in relieving the people largely from the taxes on the prime necessities of life. I believe it is practical legislation and the best legislation to do that. But for one I have not been able to attain it. Yet I do not propose because my method has not been adopted to oppose any relief to the people. It is enough that the bill is wise and right, that the committee have asked for legislation in the right direction, in the interest of the people; and the amount it proposes to take from the internal-revenue taxes is so small that we can demand further legislation for the reduction of taxes and duties on raw materials and the prime necessities of life without delay.

I am opposed to every amendment which has been offered to the first section of this bill. I believe the legislation in that section is not in the interest of capital alone, but is in the interest of labor and enterprise also. So far as my State and its banking capital is concerned, I have heard the most unwarranted statements in regard to where that capital is placed. I have to say to this House that the people who are mostly interested in the banking capital in Massachusetts are the poor, the laboring classes, and the enterprising business men. A large portion of the banking capital in that State is held by the savings-banks as an investment of the humblest classes—the widow's mite and the orphan's trust funds.

I say further that the advantages of the banking capital of Massachusetts go to labor and enterprise, and not to the rich alone. As you reduce the charges upon the banking capital of the country you reduce the rates of interest in the country; and the advantages of the aggregated capital of the Massachusetts banks are shared by the enterprises that are being developed all over the nation. There is scarcely a railroad enterprise, a bridge or a mine, a cattle ranch or steamboat line that does not receive some aid or impetus directly or indirectly from it, and they will be benefited by any reduction of interest or the increased confidence which capital may have in the continued prosperity which will be encouraged by wise and unprejudiced legislation.

Again, in regard to this first section, which is objected to, I will say that I am in favor of removing the stamp-taxes on bank-checks, proprietary medicines, matches, &c., because they are a nuisance, and in some cases, like that on matches, encourage a monopoly; it is a burden and a complication upon business. While you wish to relieve the people from taxation, you also should try to relieve them from all laws that are annoying and burdensome, where the business and working men are worried by mistakes and petty infractions of the revenue laws. The cost and burden of all these things are on the masses of the people, and not on the rich.

One of the advantages of the national banking system has been that with the money of these banks a man can travel from one State to another without finding that his bank bill depreciates according to his remoteness from the place of issue, thus dispensing with the bank-note-detective book with which we were once so familiar. The relief from these petty internal-revenue check stamps will save time and trouble in the same way to hundreds of thousands who waste more in time that is valuable to them than the country receives from the tax. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUCKNER obtained the floor.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CANDLER] be extended.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. In justice to other gentlemen, I must object.

Mr. BUCKNER. Mr. Chairman, it is a rather remarkable fact that, in the desire of the Committee on Ways and Means to take off the burdens of taxation upon capital and leave untouched the burdens upon the labor and industries of the country, this bill really goes beyond anything that the banks, national or State, have ever asked Congress to do for them. There have been petitions before this House year after year asking the removal of the tax upon deposits, for the reason that it was a triple and quadruple tax; but there has never been any demand on the part of banks, State or national, that their capital should be untaxed; never. But the Committee on Ways and Means are so anxious to serve the wealth and the capital of this country that they really go beyond anything that has ever been asked at the hands of Congress since I have been here.

But, sir, I rose for the purpose of calling attention to the inequality and injustice of this action of the committee. Are we aware that in taking off these taxes we are relieving the wealthy sections of the country almost exclusively? Why, sir, look at the reports of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue on this subject. There are in the Middle, New England, and Northwestern States about $419,000,000 of national banking capital which you propose to relieve from all taxation, whereas there are only $37,000,000 in the Southern and Western States, which are just now beginning to recuperate. That is the effect of this legislation so far as the banks are concerned.

In the name of all that is reasonable, why should you remove the taxation from the national banks, even from their deposits. You furnish to them as circulation $330,000,000; this amount of capital they enjoy without the payment of interest.

It is said the circulation of the national banks is not profitable. Facts show the contrary. Facts show that the banks last year made net dividends of 9 per cent., to say nothing of their accumulated surplus of $128,000,000. Not only that, but there are now quite as many demands for new banks as there ever have been, although the basis of their circulation is 3½ per cent. bonds; thus showing that whatever may be the profits on circulation, the franchise is valuable. I object to the exemption from taxation now proposed to be granted to these institutions.

Mr. CANNON obtained the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. CANDLER. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I renew it. In reply to the remark of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BUCKNER,] that this bill takes more taxes off the people of the North than it does from those of the South, I confess that it does so, purely and simply because the people of the North pay more taxes than the people of the South do. The people of the North do more business; they have more property to be taxed under this or any other law. If you ever reduce taxes, the effect cannot be otherwise. This is enough on that point.

I am for this bill substantially, with one or two amendments, for the reason that next year, by the best estimate which can be made, after you have paid every dollar of expenditures of the Government, after you have taken from the overflowing Treasury that gentlemen talk about the appropriations for rivers and harbors, after you have paid the interest on the public debt, after you have paid the $100,000,000 on account of pensions and provided for the sinking fund and all other expenditures, you will still have, under the present revenue laws, in round numbers, $100,000,000 of surplus.

Now we can safely reduce taxation. I am surprised at the position of some of my friends from Illinois and other gentlemen on the other side who oppose the reduction of taxation. It is within my recollection that they bewailed the imposition of these taxes when from necessity they were imposed, and said the country was driving straight to destruction because the Republican party dared to impose these taxes. Now, when we can safely make a scanty reduction of $18,000,000 or $20,000,000, we are told that the Government is going to destruction because we take from the Treasury this much of the hundred million surplus. They remind me of the Dutchman's calf. He said he had the most contrary calf in the world. "Be sure," says he, "I haf to pull dot calf's ears off to get it to suck, and after dot calf sucks I haf to pull its tail off to get it away." [Laughter.] So with my Democratic friends. We had to pull them to make them assent to the imposition of taxes, and now we have to pull them when we want to remove taxes, when they are no longer needed. I stand ready to help to reduce taxes up to $20,000,000, because we can safely do it and still gather from the business of the country $80,000,000 of surplus per annum. This is right, and I have no fear that my constituents and the people generally will not indorse that position.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. Pay off the bonds, and stop the interest on the bonds.

Mr. CANNON. We will put it on bonds, $80,000,000 a year, even after this bill is passed. Thank God, I find you, my friend, and some others of a certain class of Democrats at last anxious to pay something on bonds and interest. I have heard you sing a different song in former years.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I have advocated and voted to pay off the national debt as rapidly as possible on all occasions——

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] expressed some surprise a Pennsylvania Democrat could be found advocating the abolition of the internal-revenue system, and he referred to a speech made by me before a New York public meeting, composed chiefly of the New York County Democracy, at which I deliberately declared myself to be in favor of pulling down and tearing up by the roots the whole internal-revenue system, because it was not necessary to meet the expenditures of the Government, and because, whenever it was not rendered absolutely necessary by the emergencies of war, it was undemocratic, if not unconstitutional. Many of the provisions of the internal-revenue laws as they have been executed by the officers of the law have been unconstitutional, oppressive, and outrageous.

But it is not necessary, Mr. Chairman, that I should rely on the applause of that meeting without dissent for the approval of the position I took in that respect. I say the internal-revenue system has no warrant in any Democratic authority in this country. The power to levy an excise tax was granted in the Constitution of the United States after great hesitation and with serious doubt as to its propriety, and it was ultimately only granted to Congress after a discussion wherein it was conceded that in case of war there might be the most urgent necessity for such an extraordinary measure for the purpose of raising revenue. That was the only ground upon which it was granted, that there might be a necessity growing out of war for levying an internal-revenue tax.

The present internal-revenue system itself is a creature of war necessity, and as that war has long since passed away, I submit there is nothing in the present condition of the country for the continuance of this oppressive and unjust tax.

We have $136,000,000 of money in the Treasury against which there is no claim. We had $100,000,000 last year of surplus revenue. We are to have $100,000,000 more, and perhaps $135,000,000, this year. And, in view of this condition of affairs in the country, I say that it is not only the duty of the Democracy but the solemn duty of all the representatives of the people to abolish the internal-revenue system as quickly as it can be done.

Mr. MILLS. Could you not apply that to the payment of the debt?

Mr. RANDALL. In answer to that question of the gentleman from Texas, let me say that the amount of money in the Treasury, and under the provision of the sinking-fund law before we have the power to pay the 4½ per cent. bonds that we will have accumulated a sufficient sum to pay off the entire 3½ per cent. bonds. That is my answer to the gentleman from Texas, and it is a complete one.

Mr. MILLS. You do not propose to do that now.

Mr. RANDALL. I propose to pay from forty-five to fifty millions of dollars a year between now and the date when the 4½ per cent. bonds become due. It is enough to pay. The gentleman is dealing in fancy if he supposes by paying off the public debt at enormous rates he is going to tear down the banking system. We must have a banking system. The business of the country requires a banking system. There is nothing to be gained by tearing it down too quickly. Let us go on patiently and wisely to correct its abuses.

To the belief that this internal-revenue tax is to last as a permanent feature of our machinery for raising revenue, I say it never can be done. I do not myself believe there are many people who favor any such scheme as the perpetuation of the internal-revenue system. Why, we are raising four hundred millions of money each year, taken from the product of the industry of this country. Yet we are asked why hard times are coming. I tell you when that amount of money is taken out of the product of the industry of the people of any country, it must be felt necessarily in every channel of business. That is what the matter is with the country to-day. What you ought to do is to reduce the expenditures of the Government to an economical amount and take off unnecessary and oppressive taxes.

Mr. MILLS. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania join me in a revision of the tariff?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, I will join the gentleman from Texas in such revision of the tariff as will bring about a proper and consistent enactment of law. I want to say furthermore that you cannot raise from customs duties the necessary amount of money essential to the support of the Government, to-wit: about $200,000,000, without giving adequate protection to every industry in the United States.

Mr. MILLS. That depends on how you levy it.

Mr. RANDALL. No, I will let you levy it.

Mr. MILLS. Very well; I will hold you to that.

Mr. RANDALL. If you raise $200,000,000 by your tariff Pennsylvania will not be hurt; for if the duties are put where business intelligence and judgment would indicate you should put them you will not injure any interest in Pennsylvania. [Applause.]

Mr. BRUMM. I move to strike out the last word. It is a truism, Mr. Chairman, of political economy that all taxes of whatever nature or sort are directly or indirectly paid by the producer. While that is a truism that cannot be denied, that will not be attempted to be denied, yet gentlemen say that in this case where you ask the reduction of the tax deposits you are striking at the producer. The exception is only an exception, and it proves the rule in this case. The tax on deposits is not a tax on articles that are produced in the ordinary sense of the word, but it is a tax on a surplus in the hands of a man who is able to have a surplus. Poor men do not have surplusses. Deposits in banks are purely surplusses of the men who have more money on hand at the time than is needed for immediate purposes. It is true that the poor man puts his money in the bank, but yet it is a surplus, and upon that surplus the tax is levied. Besides that, a great portion of the tax is paid by the banks that receive the surplus from other banks, namely, the New York City banks, and the banks of other large cities or commercial centers pay a large proportion of these taxes. They have received the deposits from the country banks and consequently it is they that pay much of the tax on deposits. No gentleman can say that they can directly or indirectly affect the business man, much less the laboring-man. It has no bearing upon the question.

They tell us, sir, that as you increase or decrease the tax on this surplus so you affect, by increasing or decreasing, the interest paid on money. I deny the proposition in toto. If any gentleman can show me that a banker or an individual will ask less interest for the use of his money than he may get from the man who wants to borrow, consistent with the security, unless the law intervenes to prevent usury, I will grant you that the proposition is correct; but I think that cannot be shown. Money will fetch just what it demands, and the question of tax upon deposits cannot affect the interest upon it. Therefore it is a part of the tax upon surplus paid by the rich; and I say if you believe a reduction of taxation is necessary that this is the wrong end at which to start your relief.

I shall offer an amendment at the proper time which I hope will be agreed upon, and I believe gentlemen will concur with me in the view that it meets the difficulties which I have endeavored to suggest. If that amendment is adopted I can vote for this bill, otherwise I shall be compelled to vote against it.

Mr. BROWNE. Before the gentleman takes his seat I would like to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time is exhausted.

Mr. BRUMM. I will ask permission to offer the following amendment, which I will read, with the consent of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman will be permitted to read the amendment.

There was no objection.

Mr. BRUMM. It is as follows:

Insert in the tenth line of the first section, after the word "amended," and in the twelfth line, after the word "statutes," the following: "Excepting all deposits upon which interest is paid by said banks."

That amendment, I believe, will meet the concurrence of many members of this committee.

Mr. SPEER. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Texas doubted the orthodoxy of the democracy of any gentleman who favored the reduction of internal-revenue taxation at this time. I rather think, sir, the definition of his orthodoxy would be identical with that rendered by the witty ecclesiastic, Sidney Smith, when he said that "orthodoxy is my doxie, and heredoxy is your doxie."

Now, sir, there may be no demand for a reduction or repeal of internal-revenue taxes in the State of Texas, but there is a very earnest demand for such reduction in the State of Georgia; and in this connection I desire to refer briefly to the utterances of some of the prominent members of the Democratic party from that State on this subject. What says our distinguished Senator, Mr. BROWN, upon this subject?

I consider [said he] the present internal-revenue system an excrescence upon the body-politic. So was that of the war of 1812. They were war measures. They were justifiable in public estimation upon no other theory. I wish to see the present internal-revenue system gotten rid of, so that we may return to the old rule of the fathers as soon as the expenditures can be reduced to a point where we can, without too heavy an imposition of tariff upon imported goods, collect the entire money that the Government must raise annually by a tariff upon imports, as advocated and practiced, except in time of war, by Washington, Jefferson, Adams, Madison, Monroe, Jackson, Calhoun, Clay, Webster, and all the great statesmen of this country. It is safe to heed the counsels and follow the example of such men. The sooner we return to the old beaten track trod by them the better.

That, sir, is the opinion of a distinguished Democratic Senator from Georgia. What is the opinion of a distinguished Democratic candidate for governor of Georgia—a candidate who, I believe, suits all shades of Democrats, regulars and independents? Hon. ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS on yesterday said:

I think we ought to abolish the internal-revenue system of taxation entirely. I would extirpate it root and branch. Allow me to say to both sides of the House that except in time of war these internal-revenue taxes, excise and stamp duties, are, in my judgment, in principle anti-Republican, anti-Democratic, and anti-American.

But the gentleman from Texas says we must pay the debt. So we must. But at the rate at which we are now collecting a surplus revenue we will collect in ten years, as will be demonstrated by the reports of the Treasury, more than enough money to pay all of the debt that will be due at the expiration of twenty-five years.

Sir, the people loudly clamor for the reduction of internal taxes. The cry comes from all classes of the people; not alone from Democrats; not alone from the great tariff convention of New York and the great tariff convention of the Northwest at Chicago; but, sir, it was expressed in the declarations of the Republican party years ago, as far back as 1870. And whether it be sound Democracy or not, it is sound economy and sound legislation. And for my part, though this bill does not go nearly so far as I would like to see it go, on the principle that a half loaf is better than no bread I will cheerfully support it.

Mr. MONEY. It has been frequently said that one of our chief troubles is a surplus revenue. I cannot understand how an individual or a government that owes a dollar can have a surplus revenue. But if it is meant that the revenue exceeds the ordinary expenditures of the Government, we have an abundant surplus. The question before this Congress is, How shall we reduce this surplus revenue so as to relieve the people of this country of taxation? It is conceded on all sides of the House that taxation must be reduced in some measure.

Now, sir, who asks for this? The people whom I have the honor here to represent ask that this Congress shall reduce the taxation on those articles which enter into the daily consumption of the toiling masses of this country. They have sent their petitions here by the thousand asking this Congress to reduce the taxes on the various articles of iron goods, on woolen goods, stockings and shoes, hats, &c., and on everything, sugar and salt, &c., that enters into the consumption of the people of this country. The only question it is agreed by every one is the question of adjustment. Shall we adjust the taxation to suit the greatest number of the people of the United States, or a privileged few? Shall we begin at the top or the bottom of the list of our citizens to reduce this system of taxation? Shall we begin with the people or with the banks, the national banks, that enjoy not only the most valuable franchises ever given by any government, but a measure of power that is dangerous to the liberties of any people? The question is not whether we shall reduce taxation, but whether that reduction shall apply to the men who are best able to pay taxes out of their superabundance; or whether the burden that is oppressing and grinding down the people all over this country shall be taken from them. That is the question.

It is simply a question of adjustment that addresses itself to the intelligence of this House. It is not that we are making war upon national banks or any particular class of people, as has been charged. It is not true that we are making war on any one. It is a question of giving relief, and what we are to determine is who are best able to bear the burden of taxation, and who most justly demand relief.

The people of this country ask you to relieve them of the burden of taxation so grievous that they faint and fail under it. The privileged few who have grown rich off the labor and toil of the people come to you and ask you to relieve the banking institutions from taxation.

Now, the question is whether we are here to represent simply the property or to represent human rights. Both are to be relieved by proper legislation, but we should listen first to the voice of the people who sent us here and to the cry of the really distressed.

It is true, as was stated by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] this morning, that after a while the burden of all taxation comes down to and settles upon the masses. But that is indirect, remote, and not felt by the people. That which they carry from day to day on their shoulders and which keeps them poor and necessitous is the tax which they ask you to relieve them of.

You have had no memorials from the people, from those who are poor, asking that the banks should be relieved from this tax on deposits and capital stocks. I say it is our duty as the representatives of the people, as well as of the property of the United States, to first remove those taxes which bear most heavily and necessarily upon the greatest number. If we do less than that we will fail to do our duty.

It is not because we have remitted the question of tariff taxation to a commission that we should begin this work of reform by putting it in exactly the wrong place. There is such a thing as beginning in the right place to do the right thing. If we do our duty we will begin by taking off that tax which is most oppressive and falls most severely on the greatest number of the people.

Mr. REED. I should like to make one contribution of a series of facts to this discussion, which it seems to me is of some importance, both to those who may vote for this bill and those who may vote against it.

A great many gentlemen in discussing this bill have made the declaration that this is not the proper place to begin taking off internal-revenue taxes. It seems to me that those gentlemen have forgotten the history of this country in connection with internal taxation. They seem to imagine that we are to-day making a beginning in the reduction of internal taxes.

Why, sir, we began that business right upon the close of the war, and we kept it up until financial disaster prevented us from further reducing the income of the Government. In other words, we acted like business men. As long as it was apparent that our taxation was too great to pay the expenses of the Government we continued to take off those taxes. When that state of things ceased, then we ceased to take them off.

By the act of July 13, 1866, we took off taxes to the amount of $65,000,000. That was a general reduction of taxes, especially on manufactures, and a reduction of the tax on cotton to 3 per cent. By the act of March 2, 1867, we took off $40,000,000 more, reducing the cotton tax by one-half of 1 per cent., and making a general reduction of taxation on business.

By the act of February 3, 1868, we took off $23,000,000 of taxes; that is, the tax of 2½ per cent. on cotton. By the act of March 31, 1868, and of July 20, 1868, we took off $45,000,000; which was from manufactures and from liquors and tobacco. By the act of July 14, 1870, we took off $55,000,000, stamp taxes and the taxes on incomes and dividends and other general subjects of taxation. By the act of June 6, 1872, we took off $20,651,000 more of taxes. The grand total of taxes taken off in pursuance of these several acts of Congress was $248,651,000.

There is where we made the beginning, and we took off all the taxes that were of general operation upon business. We are now taking off what is left. We have maintained these taxes for ten years because the necessary expenses of the country required it. Yet gentlemen get up here in the face and eyes of these facts and begin to talk about our taking taxes off the rich, and say that there is only one tax taken off the poor. Why is that? It is simply because only one tax has been left on the poor for the last ten years.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. REED. The gentleman must excuse me; I have but five minutes. That is the reason for the situation in which we find ourselves.

I think there may be some ground of complaint that we do not take off some other taxation. But that is not the question which is before us now. The question before us now is in regard to the propriety of taking off these taxes.

My object in rising was to call attention of members to the line of argument used here which indicates an entire forgetfulness of the past history of the country in regard to the reduction of internal taxation; that argument which charges that only one single tax is taken off the poor, without taking into consideration the fact that it is the only one taken off because it is the only one left.

That argument comes from men who have avowed their willingness and desire to abolish the whole internal-revenue taxation; probably mostly because they want to get the tax off of whisky. There is one thing I complain about in this bill, and that is the taking the tax off the whisky interest. For my part I do not believe in it. I believe that all the taxes relating to spirits should be taken off the very last that are taken off under our system of taxation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. REED. I have forgotten to add that within my recollection the tax on tobacco has been reduced 33 per cent.

Mr. RANDALL. And more money was collected under the reduced tax than you collected before.

Mr. REED. That was on account of the general increase of business.

Mr. MONEY. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I renew the pro forma amendment, Mr. Chairman.

It is not because I would advocate perpetuation of the public debt that I oppose the present system of internal-revenue taxation. I am not one of those who believe in the doctrine that a national debt is a national blessing, but upon the contrary I believe that a public debt is a public curse to any people. Especially do I believe it dangerous to our democratic form of government, because it is necessarily onerous and burdensome on the people, breeding discontent and unhappiness among them, gradually crushing out their love for the Government and their confidence in it. It is generally regarded as the best policy for an individual to pay as he goes and to keep out of debt as nearly as possible.

The same reasons that apply to an individual in regard to this policy also apply to governments, with this additional reason applicable to the latter, that public money is not usually guarded and applied to necessary and proper purposes with the same degree of frugality and economy with which individuals ordinarily apply their money. Consequently when there is a necessity or excuse for collecting large revenues for the Government there is and will always be a large per cent. of it that is not economically and properly applied. Where the fund is large the leaks are apt to be large. Therefore I favor a rapid discharge of the public debt by its payment, but while this is true, I believe the time has come when this system of internal taxation, an outgrowth and necessity of war, is no longer necessary to enable the Government to discharge its obligations.

If this is true, why should we hesitate to relieve the people from its oppressions? Why halt, and merely tinker with it? Why not by one act obliterate it from the pages of our statute-books, and at last free the people who have for many long years patiently and patriotically borne its hardships and oppressions? But we are told by some that the Government cannot spare the income of revenue from this source; that it is needed for the prompt payment of the public debt and for the current expenses of the Government. This we are told in the face of the fact that there is to-day a surplus of nearly $150,000,000 in the Treasury. This, it is true, might and ought to be applied to the payment of the bonds of the Government that are now redeemable as far as it would go; but this is not done, nor do I know that it will be done; for an overflowing surplus in the Treasury for which there is no pressing demand is a temptation to extravagance. It is an invitation to lobbyists and schemers to swarm around the Capitol with their evil jobs and schemes to make spoil of this magnificent surplus, wantonly and unnecessarily wrung from the earnings of and industry of the people, for "where the carcass is there will the eagles be gathered together." This spirit of extravagance so produced is already manifest when it is now admitted on all hands that the appropriations by the present Congress will exceed by many millions of dollars the appropriations made by any previous Congress in the history of the Government, except in time of war. An overflowing Treasury leads to extravagance, waste, and corruption, therefore no more taxes ought to be collected than are absolutely necessary to an honest and economic administration of the Government.

Our interest-bearing debt now is about $1,500,000,000; $511,000,000 of this is now payable; $250,000,000 more will fall due in 1891, and the balance in the year 1907. So that from this time until 1907, twenty-six years, $761,000,000 is all of the principal of the debt that will be due and payable. We cannot pay any of the balance before that time without buying in our bonds at a premium, because they are not due until then. It would not be good economy to pay a premium on them in order to get to pay them before maturity. If it should be thought best to equalize the amount of principal to be paid each year we would only have to discharge about $30,000,000 a year for the next twenty-six years to pay all of the debt that will be payable within that time. We are now paying at the rate of more than $150,000,000 a year.

Thus it will be seen that whether wisely or unwisely previous legislation has placed a large part of the public debt beyond our reach for the next twenty-six years, whether we have the money to pay it or not, unless we go into the market and pay a premium on our bonds before due, and this we cannot afford to do. Therefore I say we can dispense with this entire system, practice economy, and pay the public debt within a reasonable time. If it is desirable to pay the bonds now redeemable and those becoming so within the next few years at a more rapid rate than that above indicated, this can be done and yet dispense with this system.

I am not here to say that every man who has been a revenue officer under this Government is a bad man; I am not here to denounce every man who has had anything to do with the execution of this law. The system has been recognized as a necessity. The people have borne it patiently and patriotically as a necessity demanded by the condition of the country. But, now they realize and know that it may be dispensed with, there is no necessity for this dual machinery for the collection of the public revenue. There is no need for having on the one hand the tariff system with its custom-houses and customs officers, and on the other hand the internal-revenue system with its vast army of officers. There is no need for perpetuating both these systems. I say the time has come when we should remove this temptation to extravagant appropriations, this invitation to gather round an overflowing treasury and make spoil of it.

It is claimed by those who defend the system that the taxes collected under it are collected with less cost to the Government than other revenues, but while it may appear by the figures to be collected cheaply, it is not true. It is collected at great cost to the people, for, in estimating the cost to the people, we must not only consider the salaries and expenses of the host of officers and employés engaged in the execution of these laws, but we must also consider the court and jail expenses borne by the people in the enforcement of these laws, as well as the great expenses of individual defendants and witnesses in prosecutions for alleged violations of the law. Again, the system is unjust and unequal in its operations.

I apprehend that no patriot of any party or any section desires to oppress any portion of this country unnecessarily and wantonly. In that part of the country where tobacco is grown, you declare under your present laws to the man who carries on a farm, however small, that he shall not by his own industry cultivate upon it that which he can make most profitable. He is not allowed to raise his crop of tobacco in any quantity which may be within his means, because he is not allowed to sell it unless he carries it to the manufacturer, who is often fifty or one hundred miles distant. This system places it within the power of manufacturers to combine and fix the price, so that the producer is at their mercy and is not allowed to sell to the best advantage that which he has produced by the sweat of his own face upon his own land.

But it is said tobacco is a luxury, and should therefore be taxed. While it may be regarded as a luxury to him who uses it, yet its production, if free to the farmers of that section of the country where it can be grown, would be the means of supplying many households with the prime necessities of life where want now prevails. Many who are struggling in their poverty to support their families and educate their children would be greatly relieved if permitted to grow this plant and sell the product of their labor freely as their other crops.

Again, experience and observation under these laws show that no less liquor is made or consumed than would otherwise be. Therefore they are no aid to temperance. They have been the cause of strife, violence, and bloodshed from their inception; they have been endured patiently as a necessity until they are no longer necessary. The whole system, with its officers, spies, and informers often invading the peaceful and sacred homes of the innocent, carrying them far away, to linger for weeks and months in jail under some petty charge to await trial in a Federal court, is contrary to the genius and spirit of our Government and against the traditions of our fathers. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] intimates that the opposition to this bill came from a desire to reduce the tax on whisky. I am sure that if I could quote his exact language he would deny that he intended to convey such an idea. But, sir, I claim that the passage of this bill may have the very effect which the gentleman seems to think is desired by those who oppose it. If you can, as this bill proposes, strike off the tax upon bank checks, bank deposits, and vouchers—if you prepare the way, as this bill does, for whisky to reach the mouths of more consumers—then by the passage of this bill you do everything that the gentleman from Maine said the opposers of the bill wanted to accomplish.

The gentleman from Kansas in his remarks a few moments ago, when he would not permit interruptions, coupled tobacco and whisky together as though the whole American people believed that the manufacturer or the grower of tobacco was to be classed in the same category with the manufacturer and seller of distilled spirits. In this bill you prepare the way for the selling of more whisky. You prepare the way for taking the tax off whisky at the next session. You prepare indirectly to do again what this House on a former occasion did directly for the whisky ring—pass a bill to extend the bonded period for distilled spirits. I call the attention of the House and the country to the fact that this bill is directly in the line of the argument used by the owners of distilled spirits in favor of an extension of the bond period.

I charge that by this bill you are helping to encourage that feeling throughout the country that the banks and the manufacturers and the tariff men and the whisky ring have got control of legislation and that you intend to do nothing for the farmer. The bill on its face will bear that construction. Pass this bill and you will hear from the farmers throughout the country at the fall elections. The people will sit in judgment then. I spoke to the Republican side of the House the other day, and appealed to it as a matter of policy; but now I demand in the name of the farmers, as a matter of right, that something shall be done for them. I spoke of policy as an incident.

Look at this bill! I have no prejudice against the banks; I have no prejudice against the retail dealers of liquor or of tobacco, but there are people throughout the country who need relief as badly as the banks and more than the manufacturers of whisky or of tobacco. Now, this bill takes off some of the taxes upon the dealers in whisky. It takes some of the taxes off of the dealers in tobacco. But while these taxes are taken off of these dealers in whisky and tobacco, there is no relief afforded to growers of grain or of tobacco. The most burdensome tax in the country is the tax on tobacco. The poor use tobacco; the poor grow it, and it is a monstrous wrong to not repeal the law which compels the farmer to hunt up a licensed dealer who has paid $500 license-tax before he can get a market for his product.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. VANCE. I renew it. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] declared it to be the policy to continue the tax on whisky and tobacco forever, by which I understand him to declare that it is the policy of the Republican party to continue the internal-revenue system in this country forever. I immediately rose to my feet to ask him, when he made that statement, whether he made the suggestion by authority of his party; but I was not permitted to ask the question.

I say, Mr. Chairman, God forbid that such a system should be fastened on this country forever. There is no longer any excuse for keeping upon the people the internal-revenue system. It is one that has brought distress throughout the land. It is one that has caused bloodshed. It is one that has caused confusion throughout the length and breadth of our great country. It is anti-Republican in its character. It is anti-Democratic. It is not of American growth or of American origin. It is one of those things, sir, which has sprung up from a land where the one-man power had rule. It is no longer necessary in this land of freedom, in this land "for which Washington fought and freemen died." It is not necessary for raising revenue.

Why, Mr. Chairman, it is reported that we have in the Treasury of the United States $150,000,000 of surplus. The national debt has been reduced. The sinking fund has been used to reduce the national debt. Why, then, should the people longer suffer under the oppressive taxation of the internal-revenue system? In the good old times which are past and gone we did not have this great army of revenue officials riding through the country with pistols buckled around them, intimidating the people, watching a man in his own house, entering his house, his own castle, and it ought to be done away with as quickly as possible. I say there is no excuse for such an oppressive law to be continued among our people.

It is not needed in a temperance point of view. Will any man come here on this floor and tell me that the internal-revenue system was brought about in the interest of morality or in the interest of temperance? If so, God save the mark.

Why, Mr. Chairman, it only increases the burdens of the poor. The true policy is to go before the country and educate and enlighten the people and train them up from their youth to manhood to see the evil which this dreadful enemy of men has brought upon the land. Why, sir, the Government of the United States has covered itself in my candid opinion with a thing that is dishonorable, because it has reaped a harvest of revenue out of the blood and tears and the pangs of hunger of the children of this land. It is not an honorable thing in a great country like this. We do not need any such tax.

See how a distiller is watched and guarded! My view, Mr. Chairman, is that it would be best that no man on the face of the earth should distill spirituous liquors; not one sir; but when he does distill, in the name of justice why watch and tie him up as you do under the internal-revenue system? They not only lock him up; they not only have a lock on the place where the whisky comes out, but they have a lock on the storehouse as large as a child's head, [laughter,] and the distiller sits out upon the fence, looking the most lonesome creature on the face of the earth. [Laughter.] Down with this idea of continuing the internal-revenue system. It came to us from foreign countries, and the idea of spies and informers originated in the French Revolution. It is anti-American.

Mr. KELLEY. I now move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate on the pending amendments to the paragraph in five minutes.

Mr. HAZELTON. I desire to answer the gentleman from North Carolina, but if the gentleman from Pennsylvania wishes to cut me off, very well.

Mr. KELLEY. I insist on my motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. REED having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. CAMP reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, according to order, had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. KELLEY. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and pending that I move that all debate upon the pending amendments be limited to five minutes.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I move to amend that by making it ten minutes.

Mr. KELLEY. Very well; I will accept the suggestion, and move that all debate upon the pending clause and amendments thereto be limited to ten minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I do not know what the gentleman from Pennsylvania contemplates by his proposition, but if he means to cut off all debate upon the section and amendments thereto, he will not succeed by this motion; and if he does not intend to accomplish that, it seems to me that the motion in its present form accomplishes nothing, because if it is agreed to in its present form there will be nothing to prevent any number of pro forma amendments, which will make the debate practically unlimited.

Mr. KELLEY. My object is to cut off debate upon the section and all pending amendments.

Mr. RANDALL. The rule allows the cutting off of all debate upon pending amendments or amendments which may be offered; but while it may be desirable to cut off debate upon the pending amendments, it may not be desirable to limit debate upon future amendments.

Mr. KELLEY. The motion is intended to embrace all pending amendments and all formal amendments to this section.

Mr. HERBERT. Do I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to limit debate upon pending amendments and formal amendments which may be offered to ten minutes.

Mr. KELLEY. My motion contemplated limiting debate on all pending amendments and all amendments which may hereafter be offered to this section, but in deference to the wishes of gentlemen around me I am willing to submit the motion to close debate on all pending amendments and formal amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to limit debate upon all pending amendments, including formal amendments to this section, to ten minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. CAMP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill reported from the Committee on Ways and Means, and by an order of the House all debate upon the pending amendments and all formal amendments thereto is limited to ten minutes.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. To that section.

Mr. HAZELTON. Mr. Chairman, the internal-revenue tax was imposed upon the country as a war necessity. Some of the necessities which demanded the imposition of that tax still exist. They will exist until the great debt contracted to put down the rebellion has been paid off and satisfied. We are now confronted, Mr. Chairman, by a proposition to reduce the internal-revenue taxation of the country by the sum of $23,258,880. The proposition is to reduce these taxes upon the luxuries of this land. Because I may differ with any member in this House as to where to cut down the taxes or where the work shall begin, whether upon the luxuries or necessities of our people, is no reason why I should be criticised for entertaining views which may not harmonize with those of other gentlemen; for nobody ought to criticise any other man on this floor for his opinions on this subject or impugn his motives.

There is nothing in this bill that affords substantial relief to the American people. There is not one clause of it that has been asked for by the people of this country.

Mr. KELLEY. Nine-tenths of the people have asked for the repeal of the match tax.

Mr. HAZELTON. There is not a voice raised by the American people anywhere asking for the passage of this bill.

Mr. KELLEY. Our tables groan with petitions asking the repeal of these taxes.

Mr. HAZELTON. But it comes from the bankers who hold the deposits of the people. It comes from the banks which have the capital. It comes from the men interested in the whisky business; in distilling, rectifying, selling at wholesale and retail. It comes square and straight, not from below where the people are, but from above where the capital is; and you bring in a bill which proposes in one breath a little pittance to the people, and a vast tax to be taken off the capital. How much is the capital taxed? Less than one-half a million paid by all the national banks of this Government. Put the little item of relief that you propose back again in your tax laws. Do not insult the people by such a pittance. Here is nearly eight millions on deposits, and you want to take that off and retain this pittance on capital.

Who asked that to be taken off? Is it the people? Is it anybody else than the bankers? The bankers of the country demand it; they ask it at your hands, and if you take it off of this capital you must put it on the people somewhere else, for revenues must be raised from some source. Why, I am told by men who know, who are engaged in banking—I was told the other day by Dr. VAN AERNAM, of New York, an honorable member of this body and an officer of a national bank, that the removal of this tax upon bank deposits is in the interest of the banks and not the depositors or the people, and that the removal of this tax will not reduce the rate of interest on loans or change the relation of the depositor to the bank. I am willing to vote to remove the stamp tax on bank checks, drafts, orders, and vouchers, but I do not believe the time has yet come to strike down the tax on capital and deposits. It will not lessen your interest. Your interest is fixed by law. Take off your deposit tax and your interest remains as it is to-day.

So it is all through this bill. Bloodless and cold as a stone, it reaches nothing that we want it to reach. Let your tariff commission come here with their report and then we will consider that in connection with this and adjust the two systems properly. That sleeps, and I know not how long it will sleep. But let us await its coming and let us know what relief there is to be on the great necessities of the people proposed by that commission. That is what we want.

Until then let the luxuries bear the burden existing under the law of the land, as it now is. I remember the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] standing up here some sessions ago on this floor in conjunction with Mr. Weaver, of Iowa, and taking the ground that we must pay off the public debt at once. I have the resolution before me.

Mr. KELLEY. You had not then issued your thirty-year bonds.

Mr. HAZELTON. When you have a national debt that allows Jay Gould or Vanderbilt to lock up $150,000,000 of your bonds from business enterprises you cannot have a healthful prosperity. [Here the hammer fell.] The gentleman from Pennsylvania was right then in his first position to pay the debt, and he is wrong now in his present attitude.

Mr. KELLEY. We can remit the match tax and yet pay the debt.

Mr. HAZELTON. When will you pay it? Four hundred million dollars of your debt can be paid off now if you want to do so.

[The Chair rapped to order while Mr. HAZELTON continued to speak after the fall of the hammer.]

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia, was recognized, and said: I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Lay on, Macduff;
And damn'd be him that first cries, "Hold, enough!"

[Laughter.]

Mr. HAZELTON. I will not take from the gentleman from Georgia his time. I have said about all I wanted to say, and I may as well end by saying that the gentleman from Pennsylvania turns his back on the Weaver resolutions for which he voted, and favors the proposition that Jay Gould and Vanderbilt may hold a bonded debt which seriously impairs the enterprise and prosperity of the American people, and which the continuation of our present system of internal-revenue taxation upon the luxuries of the land would soon pay off and remove forever.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman from Pennsylvania voted against the thirty-year bonds, and the gentleman from Wisconsin voted for them; and we cannot pay them till we pay Gould and Vanderbilt 100 per cent. premium, owing to the legislation the gentleman from Wisconsin sustained.

Mr. HAZELTON. I will print with my remarks what the gentleman from Pennsylvania said and for which he voted.

Mr. KELLEY. And I do not disavow it.

Mr. HAZLETON. The resolution provided—

That in the judgment of this House that portion of the interest-bearing debt of the United States which shall become redeemable in the year 1881, or prior thereto, being in amount $782,000,000 should not be refunded beyond the power of the Government to call in said obligations and pay them at any time, but should be paid as rapidly as possible and according to contract.

And the gentleman from Pennsylvania supported his vote for this provision with the declaration:

Secretary Chase never said a wiser thing than when he told Congress that the optional control of the debt was of vastly more importance than the rate of interest unless he at some time exclaimed, "It is with nations as with men: 'Out of debt, out of danger.'"

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. This quarrel between the gentlemen on the other side is very interesting to me, and I would like to yield the balance of my time to them if they would keep it up.

Mr. HAZELTON. This is not a party question.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I rose to call attention to a fact which the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] could not permit me to do in his limited time, when he was reminding the country of the history of what he calls relief from taxation, and informed us of the taking off of the income tax, &c. I rose to call attention to the great efforts made by gentlemen from the South before we got off the tax on raw cotton. I wish in the same connection to emphasize the fact that that tax was wholly unconstitutional, that it was unjust, that it was sectional, that no party deserving the confidence of the people would have levied such a tax, and that there stands to-day in the Treasury of the United States $68,000,000——

A MEMBER. Eighty-six million dollars.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Of that unconstitutional tax which your party refuses to repay. That ought to burn a blister of shame upon the face of the Republican party. Their tax reform, their beginning to relieve from taxation is too slow. In the face of the decision of the Supreme Court that that tax was wrong, they tell you it shall never be paid back; and they now say they are beginning to relieve the people when in fact they are only relieving the classes who have just been noticed by the gentleman from Wisconsin. The only pretense of general relief is that the people will get free matches; acceptable in itself, but insultingly small.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate being exhausted, the question recurs on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SMITH.] The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend so that the clause commencing in line 10 will read as follows:

"The tax on the deposits of national banks, under section 5214 of said Revised Statutes, not including the taxes on the capital and deposits of said banks, bankers, and on the deposits of national banks for the six months' period ending in the case of national banks on the 30th of June, 1882, and on the capital and deposits in the case of other banks," &c.

The CHAIRMAN. For the information of the committee, the Chair will state that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] first offered an amendment to strike out the words "capital and," in lines 7, 10, and 12, the effect of which is to take out that portion of the bill which removes the tax on capital of all banks. The purpose and effect of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SMITH] is to leave the taxes on national-bank capital, and to remove the taxes from other bank capital. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] offered a substitute, which strikes out that portion of the bill which takes the taxes off all banks. The question is now on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SMITH.]

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. If the Chair will allow me, I will say the substitute of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] leaves all the taxes on all the banks.

The CHAIRMAN. It does.

The question being taken on aggreeing to the amendment offered by Mr. SMITH, of Illinois, there were—ayes 39, noes 41.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. I call for tellers.

On the question of ordering tellers, there were ayes 20—not one-fifth of a quorum.

So tellers were not ordered, and the amendment was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROBESON,] to strike out the words "capital and," in lines 7, 10, and 12.

The question being taken, there were ayes 42, noes 63.

Mr. ROBESON. I make the point that a quorum has not voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that a quorum has not voted, the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. ROBESON, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. SPRINGER.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 50, noes 95.

Mr. ROBESON, (one of the tellers.) I do not desire to press the point that no quorum has voted.

So (no further count being called for) the amendment of Mr. ROBESON was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] to strike out that portion of the first section which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The stamp-tax on bank checks, drafts, orders, and vouchers; the tax on the capital and deposits of banks and bankers under section 3408 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended; the tax on the capital and deposits of national banks under section 5214 of said Revised Statutes, not including the taxes on the capital and deposits of said banks, bankers, and national banks for the current six months' period ending in the case of national banks on the 30th day of June, 1882, and in the case of other banks and bankers on the 31st day of May, 1882.

Mr. PAGE. I move to amend the amendment so as to leave in the bill that portion which proposes to repeal the stamp-tax on bank checks, drafts, orders, and vouchers.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. ATHERTON. I object to that, and call for a separate vote on the different clauses of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the question will be first upon the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I thought I had accepted that amendment. I wish to modify my motion so as to leave in the bill that portion which proposes to repeal the tax on checks, vouchers, &c.

Mr. ATHERTON. What I desire to reach is a vote on that portion of the section relating to the tax on capital and deposits.

Mr. PAGE. The acceptance of my amendment by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will bring the committee to a direct vote on that proposition.

Mr. McMILLIN. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ATHERTON] has stated that his object was not to demand a separate vote on the amendment of the gentleman from California——

The CHAIRMAN. That is the amendment which is pending.

Mr. ATHERTON. What I desire to reach is a vote on the proposition to strike out of the first section the portion which repeals the tax on the capital and deposits of banks.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the question will be on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] as modified by accepting the amendment of the gentleman from California, [Mr. PAGE.] The effect of that modified amendment will be to strike out of the bill the provision which relieves the banks from taxation on their capital and deposits, and will leave in the bill the proposition to repeal the tax on bank checks, drafts, orders, and vouchers.

Mr. PAGE. Let the Clerk read the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Strike out of section 1 of the bill the following words:

"The tax on the capital and deposits of banks and bankers under section 3408 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended; the tax on the capital and deposits of national banks under section 5214 of said Revised Statutes, not including the taxes on the capital and deposits of said banks, bankers, and national banks for the current six months' period ending in the case of national banks on the 30th day of June, 1882, and in the case of other banks and bankers on the 31st day of May, 1882."

The question was taken upon the amendment; and upon a division there were—ayes 53, noes 65.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum has voted, and I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ROBESON and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 86, noes 93.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend the first section by adding to it that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That from and after the 1st day of July, 1883, all laws and parts of laws imposing internal taxes upon tobacco, snuff, cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes shall be, and they are hereby, repealed; and on all original unbroken packages of tobacco, snuff, cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes held by manufacturers or dealers on the said 1st day of July, 1883, upon which the tax has been paid, there shall be allowed a rebate or drawback of the full amount of the tax. And all laws and parts of laws which impose any limitation or restriction on the sale or use of leaf tobacco by the producer are hereby repealed. It shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to adopt such rules and regulations and to prescribe and furnish such blanks and forms as may be necessary to carry this act into effect.

Mr. KELLEY. Before the gentleman proceeds I would like to ask him where he proposes that that amendment shall appear in the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. At the end of the first section. I shall be brief in the advocacy of this amendment. First, the Government does not need the money raised by the tax laws proposed to be repealed by my amendment; second, tobacco is a great staple product of this country, and now that this tax is no longer needed for the Treasury it should be relieved from this burden; third, I have fixed a date for this provision to go into effect, which will be satisfactory both to the Government and to all parties concerned. With that statement I rest the amendment so far as I am concerned, and will yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. TUCKER.]

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] will be adopted. The time has come in the history of this Government and its finances when a real reduction of taxes can be made. The reduction proposed by this bill is a reduction upon capital in the form of bank capital and deposits, and a reduction upon some other articles; but there has been no reduction upon any article involving the productive power and consumptive interests of this country.

The tax of 16 cents a pound on tobacco which, without the tax, would be worth in the market 4 or 5 cents a pound, is a tax of 400 per cent. on that product. The tax upon the tobacco used by the rich is perhaps 100 or 150 per cent.; but upon the tobacco of the poor it is 400 or 500 per cent.

Gentlemen, I know, will answer that tobacco is a luxury, and ought to be taxed. It is a luxury to the man who smokes a twenty-five-cent cigar; but to the poor laboring-man who, while cracking rocks on the side of the turnpike finds comfort in smoking his pipe, filled with poor tobacco, this tobacco is not a luxury but a necessity. And even if it is a luxury, who will say that the luxury of the poor laboring-man should not be relieved from taxation when you are reducing taxes upon capital and the great resources of the richer part of the community?

Mr. Chairman, this tobacco tax is a tax on production. In my own district the other day I met a farmer who said to me, "I can no longer raise tobacco; the tax is too heavy." The truth is, when you add 16 cents a pound to 3-cent tobacco, making the price 19 cents, it is impossible that men can continue to produce it and have consumers for it. The increased price by reason of this heavy taxation destroys the profit of the producer.

I appeal to gentlemen from the North—some of whom are interested in this production as well as we in the South—but I appeal to those who are not interested in it to say whether, when they are reducing internal taxes upon capital, they cannot afford to remove the heavy burden that is now bearing upon the great productive industries of the Southern country. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLEY. I wish to say a few words in reply to my colleague [Mr. RANDALL] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] who has just spoken. On the 19th of this month I introduced and caused to be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means a bill identical with the amendment of my colleague, except that while he proposes July 1, 1883, as the time when the repeal shall take effect, my bill proposes January 1, 1884. I have stated in the committee that my object was to endeavor to get the bill on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole for consideration at the opening of the next session, so as to give both the trade and the Government a year's notice of the change. I am free to say that I introduced that bill with the date named at the suggestion of the tobacco trade of the country. The representatives of that interest held a convention and I conferred with almost all the delegates. I have received great numbers of copies of the organs of the trade. I hope the gentleman will not press his amendment in its present form, but will let the modification of the law take effect under the bill I have mentioned.

Mr. RANDALL. If I modify my amendment so as to make the date January 1, 1884, will my colleague vote for it?

Mr. KELLEY. It would be more acceptable to me——

Mr. RANDALL. Will you vote for it? Will you assist us in passing it? My great object is to have the amendment adopted.

Mr. KELLEY. I want to pass this bill. I want to see a provision such as the gentleman indicates adopted; but I am afraid that to try to unite both might lose both.

Several MEMBERS. Try it.

Mr. KELLEY. If the amendment of my colleague is to be pressed, I ask that it be amended by striking out July 1, 1883, and inserting January 1, 1884.

Mr. RANDALL. My reason for fixing July 1, 1883, was that it is the end of the fiscal year. But if I have assurance that any considerable number of gentlemen on the other side will vote for the proposition if modified so as to fix January 1, 1884, I will accept the modification. I think I will test the sincerity of gentlemen on the other side.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] to the amendment of his colleague [Mr. RANDALL] will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "July 1, 1883," and insert in lieu thereof "January 1, 1884."

Mr. HASKELL. I rise to a point of order. Does the proposition now pending provide for January 1, 1884, as the date?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment, as the Chair understands, provides for July 1, 1883, and the amendment to the amendment names January 1, 1884.

Mr. HASKELL. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] accept that amendment?

Mr. RANDALL. I do.

Mr. HASKELL. Then that is the pending proposition?

Mr. RANDALL. It is.

Mr. HASKELL. Then I raise a point of order on the proposition.

Mr. RANDALL. It is too late; the proposition has been discussed.

Mr. HASKELL. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania has accepted the amendment; his proposition is now the substance of a bill pending before this House; and I raise the point of order that under the rules the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania as now modified is not in order. [Several MEMBERS. Too late.] No, it is not too late. The moment of time he proposed to change his proposition it is amenable to the rules of the House, and I raised the question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kansas, as the Chair understands the rule, that it is not within the power of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to accept an amendment to his amendment in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HASKELL. He did accept it and stated that was the pending proposition, and I call for the reading of the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kansas that a gentleman offering an amendment in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, as the Chair understands the rule, can only modify it by unanimous consent.

Mr. RANDALL. I withdraw my acceptance.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania accepted the amendment of his colleague from Pennsylvania, and the Chair recognized the gentleman from Massachusetts to speak in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania before the gentleman from Kansas rose.

Mr. HASKELL. That may be all true, but the moment the proposition was pending before the House which brought it under the ban of the rule I took the floor on a point of order, the very first possible moment it could be reached, and I asked for the reading of the rule which forbids as an amendment the offering of a matter the substance of which is contained in another bill.

Mr. CALKINS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CARLISLE. Before that rule is read——

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will suspend until the rule is read.

Mr. CARLISLE. It is on that point of order I wish to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will be heard when the rule has been read.

The Clerk read as follows:

No bill or resolution shall at any time be amended by annexing thereto or incorporating therewith the substance of another bill or resolution pending before the House.

Mr. HASKELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is under that rule, on the proposition now pending, and for the first time pending, the point of order was made immediately. It was made when the proposition took that form, and it was made under that rule, and I ask for the ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is undoubtedly correct in his construction of the rule, but the Chair understands the rule to be that the gentleman from Pennsylvania had the power to withdraw, and the Chair thinks, under subdivision 5 of Rule XXIII, he has the power to modify his amendment in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with the consent of the committee. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. CARLISLE. If the point of order taken by the gentleman from Kansas could be sustained at all, it would only be as to that amendment which proposes to change the one offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania on the left, so as to make it take effect on the first of July, 1884, because the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] fixes the date on the 1st of July, 1883, which is different from that provided in the bill offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY.]

More than that, the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] provides there shall be a rebate on original and unbroken packages of tobacco, snuff, cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes at the time this law proposes to take effect. The bill introduced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not contain any such provision. It is a bill simply repealing absolutely the tax on these articles, to take effect on the 1st day of January, 1884, without any provision for rebate at all. It makes it a different proposition. Besides, I repeat that the original proposition introduced by the gentleman on my right [Mr. RANDALL] is not amenable to the point of order, which could only be made against the proposed amendment to that proposition which proposes to fix the same date provided in the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order came too late on the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HASKELL. I wish to say a word further. Under that rule which has been read and correctly stated by the Chair, I rose to the point of order the very first moment the proposition took the form making it subject to the point of order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania stated that he accepted the amendment, and the Chair stated to him distinctly that the pending proposition before the House was the proposition which included the date 1884. It had then taken for the first time the form under the rule which it could not take, and promptly, at that moment, the first opportunity I could have, the first opportunity the proposition was submitted to this House against the rule, I made the point and asked for the reading of the rule. The Chair said my construction was right, and now I ask that the proposition be ruled out of order.

The proposition now before the committee is contrary to the rule and contrary to its plainest provisions. It has been stated by the Chair that the pending proposition is the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] as modified by his acceptance of the amendment of his colleague, the chairman of the committee on Ways and Means. Now, that makes the whole amendment unquestionably subject to the point of order.

Mr. CONVERSE. I rise to a parliamentary question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlemen will state it.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire to ask whether the point of order has not been already decided?

Mr. RANDALL. It came in too late anyhow.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thought the point of order was made too late. But the Chair, under this subdivision 5 of Rule XXIII, which prevents the withdrawal of an amendment in Committee of the Whole, thought, and so expressed the opinion, that the gentleman could not modify his amendment without unanimous consent. Whether the Chair is right or wrong in that view is not now the question; but the Chair thought that the gentleman from Pennsylvania having the power to accept the amendment suggested by his colleague, it would only seem reasonable to conclude that he had also the right to withdraw his acceptance of the suggestion. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has stated that he withdraws, or desires to withdraw, the acceptance; so the proposition now stands as an amendment offered in the first instance by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] fixing one date; and the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] fixing another date, the acceptance of the second amendment having been withdrawn by the mover of the first amendment.

Mr. HASKELL. Do I understand the Chair to hold that, pending a point of order upon a proposition, the mover of it, pending the point of order, can move it right out from under the point of order in this way?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair says exactly that.

Mr. HASKELL. Then I appeal from the decision of the Chair. I appeal from the decision on the point of order raised originally in all of its length and breadth, that the pending proposition is contrary to the rule.

Mr. WHITE. I move to lay that on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no table in the Committee of the Whole. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The ruling of the Chair was sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CANDLER] is recognized.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I support this bill as presented by the Committee on Ways and Means for the reason that it is in the line of practical legislation to relieve the people from taxation which is burdensome and onerous; and I believe that it is a step in the right direction. We have heard a great many statements here with reference to the effect of the pending bill upon the capital of the country and to prejudice the House against the banks. I have heard it stated, for instance, that they have in the State of Massachusetts and in all of the States usury laws.

So far as Massachusetts is concerned, this is a mistake; we have no usury law there. It has also been said by gentlemen during this discussion that the banks do not allow interest on deposits. In many cases they do allow interest.

But my strong reason, as I have said, for supporting it is the merit of the bill itself; is that it is practical legislation presented by the committee reducing the internal-revenue receipts reasonably, and while affording this relief it removes some of the war taxes that are obnoxious to the people. But I oppose at this time the introduction or adoption of any such amendment as that suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.] We hear it continually stated by gentlemen upon the other side that they desire to relieve the people from the burdens of taxation upon the prime necessities of life. I wish to ask gentlemen if these professions are mere glittering generalities, if their assertions mean anything? I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to consider this question. If the amendment he has proposed is adopted, there is little hope of getting a reduction of duties upon sugar, a tax which the laboring-man feels more severely than the tax upon tobacco, which he proposes to repeal. Now, if you take forty or fifty millions of dollars a year of tax off of the tobacco, as proposed by the amendment, when you try to reduce the duties on food and prime necessities it will be objected to; it will be claimed by those who oppose it, and it may be true, that the Government will require that amount of revenue; that you must impose the tax or duties upon some other articles; it may prevent you from relieving the taxes upon such articles as sugar and other necessaries of life, and you are limited and restricted in your legislation in behalf of the people. You can go no further in the way of relieving them where it is most important.

I call the attention of the gentlemen on the other side of the House, who claim to be political economists and practical legislators, and ask them if the repeal of the tax upon whisky and tobacco will be really a benefit to the people after all. It is the laboring-man, who must work every day in the week to support his family with the present high prices of everything they consume, whom they claim they wish to benefit. Now, does the laboring-man derive much relief from the repeal of such taxation as that? The principal burden of the people is the tax upon the prime necessities of life, and I believe if the masses of the people realized how heavily their food was burdened with taxation, if they knew that on every pound of sugar their families consumed they paid 55 to 60 per cent. tax to the Government on the raw article, their demand for relief would be heard by this House. We should not propose to remove first the forty or fifty millions tax on tobacco. We should first legislate for their necessities. It is not of much consequence when work is not to be had, or a rainy day or sickness comes to the poor man or woman, that you have taken the tax off of tobacco or whisky. Therefore I protest against interposing in such an irregular way this amendment which repeals so large an amount of revenue received for the support of the Government that we may be unable to have any practical legislation, which is not only sound and right but which the people demand and which we hope to be able to accord to them in the near future.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I expected that before we got through this discussion we would catch gentlemen on the other side blowing hot and blowing cold on this question. This morning the gentleman who in part represents the capital of New England made a speech in favor of relieving bank taxes nearly $17,000,000, and said the Treasury could well afford it.

A MEMBER. What gentleman was that?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I refer to Mr. CANDLER, of Boston. Now, when the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] proposes to relieve tobacco from taxation, the gentleman from Massachusetts rises and says the Treasury cannot afford it.

Mr. CANDLER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I said tobacco was not a prime necessity, and sound legislation would lead us first to take the taxes off the prime necessities of life; that we should relieve sugar and other such articles before we take taxation from whisky and tobacco.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The logic of the gentleman's argument is that tobacco is not a prime necessity, but that the profits of banking is a prime necessity for the poor and the laboring classes.

Mr. CANDLER. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I did not say that at all.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I cannot yield further. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that my position with regard to the internal-revenue tax is this: I am in favor of abolishing the internal-revenue system, and I am in favor of collecting the revenue for the support of the Government from customs duties. But when am I willing to do that? I am willing to do that whenever the tariff system is adjusted on a revenue basis, instead of a protective basis; when the tariff system is honestly and fairly adjusted for the best interests of the country, for the purpose of raising revenue, and that labor may be lightly burdened, then I am ready to abolish the entire internal-revenue system.

Some gentlemen have argued that if you take off the internal-revenue tax now, before you adjust the tariff to a revenue basis, you may be obliged to increase the tariff upon the necessaries of life. And the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CANDLER] has just insisted that it is a great wrong to keep the tariff on the poor man's sugar, but he does not say anything about the wrong of keeping the tariff on the poor man's cotton shirt, on his woolen coat, or his blankets. The tariff on blankets is over 90 per cent.; the tariff on other woolen goods is over 60 per cent., and the tariff on cotton goods is nearly 36 per cent.

A few weeks ago, when we implored the majority here to grant some relief to the laboring-man by removing the burdens imposed upon his articles of necessity, the gentlemen on the other side insisted that Congress was incapable of wisely legislating on the tariff, and required that a commission of experts should be selected to perform this duty; and they tied our hands here and referred the question to the tariff commission.

If you lack the capacity to revise the tariff taxes or duties, why are you willing to trust yourselves with the revision of internal-revenue taxes?

Sir, this bill comes to us from a questionable quarter. There is much wisdom in the adage "beware of the Greeks bearing gifts." The organs, advocates, and paid agents of the protected tariff monopolies are advocating the abolition of internal-revenue taxes while they demand that the protective-tariff system shall remain untouched. It is clear that their purpose is to reduce internal-revenue taxes in order to furnish an excuse for higher tariff duties and more protection.

It is my firm conviction that we should consider the reduction of tariff duties at the same time we do the excise taxes. Take up the whole Federal tax system at once and purge it of every element which has not for its aim the raising of revenue for public purposes.

Another object which this movement against the excise taxes has in view is that an excuse may be furnished for prolonging the payment of the public debt.

Sir, we have felt the oppression of this public debt long enough. Let us pay it off and save our children from the mortgage. Cease your extravagant appropriations and pay out the millions of surplus now idle in the Treasury on the debt, thereby stop the interest, get rid of the bonded aristocracy, and, with the help of God, we may before long rid ourselves of the tariff monopolists.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired and debate upon the pending amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not now in order, as there is already an amendment to an amendment pending. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] to strike out the words "1st day of July, 1883," and insert in lieu thereof the words "1st day of January, 1884."

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to state that even if that amendment shall be adopted I shall vote against the proposition.

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. RANDALL by a viva voce vote, and the Chair announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for tellers.

The tellers were ordered; and Mr. KELLEY and Mr. RANDALL were appointed.

The committee divided, amid great confusion; and after the vote was completed,

The CHAIRMAN said: On this question the tellers report—ayes 99, noes 101.

Mr. RANDALL. That is not right; I ask for a recount.

Mr. KELLEY. Let us have another count.

Mr. RANDALL. If we can have a yea-and-nay vote on this proposition in the House I will not ask for another count.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I object to that, and insist upon a recount now.

Mr. RANDALL. My count makes it 103 in the affirmative.

Mr. KELLEY. And my count makes it less.

Mr. RANDALL. There may have been some mistake, and I ask for a recount.

Mr. CALKINS. Coming from this side of the House, I demand a recount as the vote was close and there was great confusion.

Several members objected.

Mr. MCCOOK. It is all very well for the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] in the interest of fair play to demand a recount. But as a member of this House I want to know what is going on. [Laughter.]

Mr. HASKELL. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HASKELL. Whenever a vote is taken by tellers, both tellers must concur or it is not a vote. One of the tellers in this case, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] objects to the vote and asks for a recount. That is his right under the rules. He does not agree to the report which has been made. He says he thinks there has been a mistake, and asks for a new count.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think there was any intentional mistake.

Mr. HASKELL. Both tellers must concur, or else there is no vote.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to say that the vote was taken with such irregularity, by reason of gentlemen pressing through between the tellers, and gentlemen outside of the tellers insisting upon keeping the count, that I am not at all sure that the report made was the correct one. I desire, therefore, to have a recount; and I desire, also, that when gentlemen have passed between the tellers they shall go away, and not remain here and undertake to keep the count for the tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that as the House is counting itself by tellers, and as there is a disagreement between the tellers as to the result of the vote, a recount ought to be had. The Chair, therefore, will request that gentlemen in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania will now pass between the tellers.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I desire to inquire if the tellers are both on the same side in regard to this proposition?

Mr. KELLEY. I am against incorporating the amendment into this bill.

Mr. RANDALL. And I am in favor of incorporating it into the bill.

Mr. CANNON. The vote having been challenged, it is the duty of the committee to have a recount.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ordered a recount, and if the committee will come to order the Chair will now request all members in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to pass between the tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 105, noes 107.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to move an amendment to the first section.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will not recognize any gentleman until order is restored in the Hall. The Chair requests that gentlemen be seated and cease conversation, or retire to the cloak-rooms to indulge in it.

Mr. DEUSTER. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

Mr. DEUSTER. I move to amend the section by adding to it that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

And that the several sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States embraced in chapter 5, title 35, relating to taxes on fermented liquors, and all amendments thereto, be, and the same are hereby, repealed, to take effect the 1st day of May, 1883. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall redeem the stamps not used at the time this act shall take effect.

The CHAIRMAN. The section embracing the subject to which this amendment relates has not yet been reached. The Chair asks the gentleman to reserve his amendment for the present.

Mr. WILSON. I move to amend by striking out in line 11 of the bill the words "capital and."

The CHAIRMAN. It is the impression of the Chair that this amendment has already been voted upon.

Mr. WILSON. The amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] as I understand was to exempt the capital of private as well as national banks. My amendment relates to the national banks alone. I think the national banks should pay upon their capital a tax of one-half of 1 per cent. to the Federal Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] was to strike out the words "capital and" in lines 7, 10, and 12. This amendment strikes out these words in line 10 only; so that the proposition is not the same as that of the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. KELLEY. Is not the amendment of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] the same as that of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SMITH?]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is not.

Mr. CHACE. I make the point of order that this amendment was covered by the two former amendments—one offered by the gentleman from New Jersey, the other by the gentleman from Illinois. This proposition has already been voted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that though the effect may be the same this is not the same amendment in phraseology as either of the other amendments. Therefore the Chair feels bound to submit the amendment to a vote of the committee.

Mr. WILSON. I do not understand that the effect of my amendment is the same as that of the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. The amendment of the gentleman from West Virginia is precisely the same as that which I offered, except that I also proposed to amend the clause further down by providing a time when the amendment should go into effect.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has passed upon the question. The gentleman from West Virginia is recognized to address the committee on his amendment.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] was wider in its scope than the one I now offer. It embraced State banks and private bankers, as well as national banks. The House refused to adopt that amendment. Now, in view of the fact that the existence of these national banks is based upon Government bonds, it seems to me they should be required to pay a tax of one-half of 1 per cent. on their capital as now provided. I am in favor of exempting the State banks and private bankers, but I do not think that the capital of the national banks should be exempted.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. WILSON, it was not agreed to.

Mr. BUCKNER. I move to amend by inserting after the words "eighty-two," in line 17, the following:

Provided, That this reduction of taxes on bank capital and deposits shall not apply to banks issuing circulating notes.

Mr. Chairman, unless there is a determination on the part of the majority of this House to reduce taxes without reference to the ability or the means of those who are to pay them, this amendment ought to be adopted. Its object is that the national banks to which the Government now issues its circulating notes to the amount of more than $300,000,000 without interest, although the banks receive from the loan of this money an interest of from 6 to 8 per cent. per annum, shall not be entirely exempted from taxation on their capital and deposits. These institutions, scattered all over the country, have accumulated within the last ten or fifteen years a surplus of $128,000,000. They enjoy from the Government a valuable franchise. How can you go before the country and say that they shall be exempted from taxation and placed upon the same footing as State banks?

Mr. Chairman, it is well known that these banks, as is shown by their own statements, yielded last year dividends of from 8 to 9 per cent., though even in my country money could be had for 6 and 7 per cent. The fact stares the House in the face, that even now with the prospect of a 3 per cent. bond as a basis for national-bank circulation, and with 3½ per cent. bonds actually issued for that purpose, there is a large demand for the increase of national banks. Yet it is proposed to relieve them from all taxation, except the inconsiderable item of 1 per cent. upon the $330,000,000 of circulation, which the Government issues to them without interest.

I put it to the House whether it will not require that these institutions shall pay something for the valuable franchise that they enjoy. It is not alone the right to issue circulating notes that is valuable; it is the franchise which the Government grants; the advantage which these institutions enjoy in the estimation of the community from the supervision and control exercised over them by officers of the United States. Are we to say that these institutions shall pay no tax to the Government for this great privilege that is given to them, except the 1 per cent. now authorized by law upon their circulation?

Several MEMBERS. Let us have a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BUCKNER.]

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 30, noes 60.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I move the following amendment:

And from and after the passage of this act no national banking association organized under the laws of the United States shall charge or receive any interest, discount, or exchange exceeding the rate of 6 per cent. per annum for the loan of any money or the purchase or discount of any note, bill, or other obligation; and any such banking association violating this provision shall forfeit the whole amount of the interest, discount, or exchange so charged or received.

Mr. KELLEY. I make the point of order on that amendment. I did not know we had reached the second section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia moves his amendment to come in at the end of the first section.

Mr. KELLEY. I raise the point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. KELLEY. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the bill.

Mr. WILSON. Why, Mr. Chairman, the very object of this bill is to relieve these banks from taxation on deposits and other charges which are considered by them to be excessive for the very purpose of making cheap money.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from West Virginia on the point of order, but the merits of the proposition are not now under discussion.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, the very object of the bill is to relieve these banks from taxation on deposits and other charges with the view that they may be in condition to loan cheap money to the people, or in other words to loan money at a lower rate of interest.

Mr. TUCKER. And they make the pretext that they cannot loan money at a lower rate of interest because of these very taxes which this bill proposes to take off.

Mr. WILSON. I am obliged to the distinguished gentleman from Virginia for his suggestion. Yes, Mr. Chairman, these banks make the pretext they cannot furnish to the people of the country cheap money because of these very taxes which we propose now to take off. They say they now pay tax on their deposits, tax on their capital, and tax on their circulation, and therefore they are required and compelled to charge to the borrower a higher rate of interest. Why, the logical consequence of the repeal of these taxes would demand these banks should do exactly what my amendment proposes, and that is, to make money cheaper to the people who are forced to borrow it. The object, the very spirit, the very purpose of this bill is to put it in the power of these banks to loan money at a cheaper rate of interest; and I cannot imagine anything which could be more germane to the bill than my amendment.

My friends on the other side have made their tariff speeches, (and I am a protectionist,) and when they made their speeches they gave as one reason why our manufacturers could not successfully compete with the foreign manufacturers that the foreign manufacturers had cheap money and cheap labor, while our domestic manufacturers had dear money and dear labor. It was admitted in all their arguments that our banks charged a higher rate of interest than the manufacturers of England could procure money from the English banks.

Now, the banks in my town pay in national, State, county, and corporation tax 3½ per cent. upon their capital stock. To offset this they receive 3½ per cent. on the Government bonds which they hold as the basis of their operations. Now, if they loan money at 6 per cent., they have an income of 6½ per cent. left. From this is to be deducted the running expenses of their banks, such as salaries of cashiers and other officers, and other incidental expenses.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman from West Virginia that the question before the Committee is the point of order.

Mr. WILSON. I understand that, Mr. Chairman. I am showing that if there is anything which can be germane to this first section it is my amendment. The object of the bill is to relieve these banks from this taxation, and as that relief from these taxes will enable the banks to loan money at a cheapear rate, the Chair must admit that my amendment is perfectly germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asks the Clerk to read the latter portion of subdivision 7 of Rule XVI.

The Clerk read as follows:

And no motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The object of this bill is the reduction of internal-revenue tax. The amendment of the gentleman from West Virginia, as the Chair understands it, relates entirely to the usury laws. The Chair thinks it does not relate to the same subject as that provided for in the bill, and therefore the amendment is ruled out as not in order.

Mr. WHITE. I now ask for the reading of my resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not been recognized to offer any resolution.

Mr. WHITE. My amendment was read among the very first, several days ago.

The CHAIRMAN. It must be offered again.

Mr. BRUMM. I believe I have the floor, and I offer the following amendment:

Insert in tenth line of first section, after the word "amended," and in twelfth line of said section, after the word "statutes," the following, to wit: "Excepting all deposits upon which interest is paid or received by said banks."

I had originally the word "paid" in my amendment; but I struck it out and inserted the word "received."

Mr. KELLEY. I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order would not lie.

Mr. KELLEY. I did not hear the amendment read.

The CHAIRMAN. It is to reduce taxes on a certain portion of capital or deposits of national banks.

Mr. KELLEY. I was misled as to the amendment.

Mr. BRUMM. Now, Mr. Chairman, there is hardly a State in the Union, except New York and some few other States, that has not passed laws prohibiting their banks from paying interest on bank deposits. The universal sentiment of the people is that the system of paying interest on deposits is a bad and dangerous system, and anything that can discourage the payment of interest on such deposits would seem to be a wise system, and should be adopted.

The object of this amendment is to provide against just the danger that must be manifest from such a system. What is the question? The people in the country districts deposit their money in the banks, and these banks, instead of keeping the money at home for the use and accommodation of the people, send it to the great moneyed centers, because the banks in these moneyed centers pay them interest on the deposit. At home the banks will not lend the money out because persons generally want it for a specified time, sometimes for thirty days, for ninety days, and sometimes for six months, while in the moneyed centers it is loaned on call at heavy rates of interest. Therefore they will rather take a smaller amount even of interest upon call than to accommodate the business men, the mechanics, of their own parts of the country, at a high rate of interest, because the loans the people want are more permanent in their character or for a specified time, while in the case of call loans they can hold the money under their immediate control.

The CHAIRMAN. The time allowed for debate is exhausted. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BRUMM.]

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 5, noes 30.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. UPSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of section 1, as a part thereof, the following:
"The tax on fermented liquors; the tax on chewing and smoking tobacco and snuff; and all laws and parts of laws which impose any limitation or restriction on the sale or use of leaf tobacco by the producer are hereby repealed."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. UPSON.]

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. DEUSTER. I offer an amendment to come in at the end of this section.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman propose an amendment to the first section, or to the second? If to the second, the Clerk has not yet read the second section.

Mr. DEUSTER. I offer this as an amendment to the first section.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to line 20 the following:

"And that the several sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States embraced in chapter 5, title 35, relating to taxes on fermented liquors, and all amendments thereto, be, and the same are hereby, repealed, to take effect on the 1st day of May, 1883. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall redeem all stamps not used at the time this act shall take effect."

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. The point of order had better be reserved upon that before the gentleman proceeds.

Mr. DEUSTER. We had better have the point of order settled now, Mr. Chairman, before I proceed with my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I am willing to take a vote upon the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DEUSTER. Mr. Chairman, in offering this amendment I desire to say but a very few words. When I propose, as in this amendment, to exempt fermented liquors, ale, beer, and porter, I mean these ought to be exempt just as much and for the same reason that you would exempt coffee or tea. These are the beverages of the poor man, and it is conceded all over this broad land, and everywhere else, especially in Europe where the test of long experience has demonstrated the fact, that it promotes temperance. For that reason I hope this amendment will be adopted.

The revenue derived from the tax on fermented liquors during the last fiscal year—that is, on beer, ale, lager, and porter—amounted to $13,237,700.63. Brewers' special tax amounted to $195,308.52, and on dealers in malt-liquors the tax was $267,232.06; making a total collected from all of these sources of $13,700,241.21. Now, I say that I will vote for this bill, or for any bill to reduce the revenues, provided you adopt this amendment or a similar amendment to the one I have offered, and which will produce the same effect. And I will leave it to this House to consider the amendment fully and then vote upon it understandingly.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 35, noes 67.

Mr. DEUSTER. I ask for tellers.

Mr. SPRINGER. No quorum having voted, the gentleman is entitled to demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. DEUSTER and Mr. KELLEY were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 63, noes 90.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. WHITE. Before leaving this section I desire to offer an amendment, of which I have already given notice.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after line 20, page 2, the following:

"And all the sections of chapter 3, chapter 6, and chapter 7 of Revised Statutes, and all laws or parts of laws regulating the production, manufacture, and sale of tobacco in any form whatever, or pertaining thereto, to take effect on and after January 1, 1884."

Mr KELLEY. I make the point of order that that subject has been disposed of.

Mr. WHITE. I gave notice the other day I would offer an amendment precisely the same as that, with the exception of making the day the 1st January, 1884, instead of 1883. I understand I have that right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that is the substance of the proposition which has just been voted on.

Mr. WHITE. There is no rebate in my amendment. There was a rebate in the other.

Mr. KELLEY. Then it is the same as my bill which is before the House; precisely the same as bill No. 6563.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] makes the point of order that this is the same amendment which has already been voted on; and also the further point of order that it is the same in substance as a bill now pending before the House. The Chair has not examined that bill recently, but from its recollection of the bill it thinks it is substantially the same. The Chair therefore rules the amendment out of order.

Mr. WHITE. I ask that the bill be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled the amendment out of order.

Mr. WILLIS. I offer the following amendment, which provides for free alcohol in industrial pursuits.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not now in order, being an amendment to the second section, which the Clerk has not yet read.

The Clerk read the second section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 2. That from and after the 1st day of May, 1882, rectifiers of distilled spirits shall pay a special tax of $120: Provided, That any person who rectifies, purifies, or refines less than five hundred barrels a year, counting forty gallons of proof spirits to the barrel shall pay $60. Wholesale liquor-dealers shall pay $60 and retail liquor-dealers shall pay $12. Dealers in leaf tobacco shall pay $12; dealers in manufactured tobacco shall pay $2.40; all manufacturers of tobacco shall pay $6; manufacturers of cigars shall pay $6. Wholesale dealers in malt liquors shall pay $36; retail dealers in malt liquors shall pay $8.40; brewers shall pay $60; Provided, That any person who manufactures less than five hundred barrels a year shall pay $30. peddlers of tobacco, snuff, and cigars shall pay special taxes as follows: peddlers of the first class, as now defined by law, shall pay $30; peddlers of the second class shall pay $15; peddlers of the third class shall pay $7.20; and peddlers of the fourth class shall pay $3.60. Manufacturers of stills shall each pay $36, and $12 for each still or worm for distilling made by him. Retail dealers in leaf tobacco shall pay $250, and thirty cents for each dollar on the amount of their sales in excess of $1,000.

Mr. KELLEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to ask that the word "two" in line 2 of this section be stricken out and the word "three" substituted; also, that in line 26 of the same section the word "monthly" be inserted after the word "their," and that in the same line "$1,000" be stricken out and "a rate of $500" inserted.

The question was taken on the first amendment proposed by Mr. KELLEY to strike out the word "two" in line 2, section 2, and insert the word "three."

The amendment was agreed to.

The question was next taken on the amendment to insert the word "monthly" in line 26.

The amendment was agreed to.

The question was then taken on the third amendment offered by Mr. KELLEY, and it was agreed to.

Mr. ROBESON. I offer as an amendment to the pending section what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 2 by striking out all after "1883" in the second line to and including the word "dollars" in the eighth line; also by striking out the twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth lines to and including the word "dollars;" also by striking out the twenty-second and twenty-third lines and the word "him" in the twenty-fourth line.

Mr. ROBESON. My amendment covers all the relief which is given to the dealers in spirits and malt liquors. I move to take that out of the benefits of this bill, and leave the law with regard to them as it now is.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. This amendment relates to a personal tax imposed upon manufacturers and dealers in distilled spirits. It is a personal tax. It neither adds to the quantity of liquor consumed nor lessens it. I take it this is a purely business matter, and I am unable to see why these men are not entitled to the relief provided for in this bill. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] Don't you hurry! This is not a temperance proposition nor an anti-temperance proposition, but a business proposition; and I take it this Congress deals with every branch of business which pays a revenue to this country in a business-like way, and not upon a mere question of sentiment.

There is this about it: you were not distressed very greatly when this same business paid half the revenue to carry on the war. You were not distressed when it paid the pensions due to your soldiers, or when it paid for maintaining your soldiers' homes. You were not distressed when it paid for defending your capital. It is a personal tax, and the most odious tax ever imposed. I am not discussing temperance questions or a question of the tax on distilled spirits, but a personal tax on those engaged in different branches of business. I do not think the amendment should be adopted.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment of Mr. ROBESON, there were—ayes 70, noes 31.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of section 2 the following:

"Provided, That no farmer or planter nor the executor or administrator of such farmer or planter, nor the guardian of any minor, shall be required to pay a special tax as a dealer in leaf tobacco or as a retail dealer in leaf tobacco, for selling to consumers or others tobacco produced by said farmer or planter, or by said executor, administrator, or guardian, or received by either of them as rents from tenants who have produced the same on the land of the said farmer, planter, or minor, and all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed: Provided, That nothing herein shall be so construed as to authorize any such farmer, or planter, or executor, administrator, or guardian to sell tobacco by peddling the same, or to appoint or employ others to sell tobacco for him, without the payment of the special tax."

Mr. KELLEY. I make the point of order that that amendment is not relevant to the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made that the amendment is not germane.

Mr. KELLEY. And that it is the substance of a bill now pending before the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. HATCH. I take issue with the gentleman from Pennsylvania on both propositions. I assert that the amendment is germane to the second section of this bill, directly and in terms; and that it is not a bill or the substance of any bill pending now before this House. I challenge the gentleman from Pennsylvania to produce any such bill. I want to see the bill to which the gentleman refers when he says that this amendment is the substance of a bill now pending before the House.

Mr. KELLEY. I have not the files of the Committee on Ways and Means with me.

Mr. HATCH. And if you search them you will not find such a bill.

Mr. WHITE. I have in my hand the bill to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania refers; and I ask that it be read to show that the gentleman from Missouri is quite correct in the position he has stated.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill could only be read to verify the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] who makes the point of order. There would be no use in reading the bill with the view of verifying the statement of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. WHITE. This is the bill to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania alludes.

Mr. KELLEY. It is one of a score of a similar kind.

Mr. HATCH. Let the gentleman produce the bill or any number of bills which he claims are the same in substance as this amendment. I deny the proposition that the amendment is the substance of any bill pending before this House, and I challenge the gentleman to produce any such bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Until such bill is produced, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] need not discuss that question further. The Chair thinks the amendment is in order.

Mr. HATCH. It is not my purpose to detain the committee by going over the argument in favor of this amendment which I delivered in extenso day before yesterday. I have spoken to this amendment, or the proposition contained in it, two or three times during this session of Congress.

I call upon my friends on the other side of the House who voted with us on a motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill introduced by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DIBRELL] to vote with me today for this amendment. I am willing that the vote shall be now taken.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I wish to offer a substitute for the amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Why embarrass in that way a proposition which has received the indorsement of a majority of this House?

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the sixth clause of section 3244 be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the words "Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to exempt from a special tax any farmer or planter who, by peddling or otherwise, sells leaf tobacco at retail directly to consumers, or who sells, or assigns, consigns, transfers, or disposes of to persons other than those who have paid a special tax as leaf dealers or manufacturers of tobacco, snuff, or cigars, or to persons purchasing leaf tobacco for export."

Mr. HATCH. I make the point of order on that substitute that it is in words, every single word of it a section of a bill introduced by myself, and which is now pending before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will submit that bill to the Chair.

Mr. HATCH. I will do so.

The CHAIRMAN. And if there be no objection on the part of the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] will proceed to speak upon his amendment until the bill referred to is produced.

Mr. ROBESON. I rise to withdraw my vote on the tobacco-tax amendment. I am paired on all amendments to this bill with Hon. ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS. When the pair was made I understood that he was opposed to all amendments to the bill, and therefore I voted as I supposed was in accordance with his views. Since then I have been informed that he was in favor of that amendment, and I desire now to withdraw my vote and correct the record in that regard.

Mr. RANDALL. How will that leave the vote?

Mr. ROBESON. It makes no difference in the result.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote now stands—ayes 105, noes 106.

Mr. RANDALL. A very narrow shave. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. I am glad to hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] designate it as a "shave."

Mr. WHITE. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE. Would it be in order now to have all the pairs read, so that we may see that we were not cheated on that vote? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. That would not be in order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that I am heartily in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. HATCH,] and if I did not believe that this amendment of mine would improve his I certainly would not offer it.

In my amendment I have gone further than he has. I propose to remove from the statute-book all restrictions upon the farmer to dispose of his tobacco and allow him the same liberty he now enjoys in disposing of his wheat or of any other product of his farm.

I do not wish to be understood as antagonizing the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri at all, but wish to improve it in the interest of the farmer. I have been for years and am now seeking to accomplish in a better way what my friend from Missouri is aiming to do.

I shall not be tenacious for my amendment if it is not in order. I would like, however, to test the sense of the House on my amendment, and if a majority shall prefer his to mine, I shall be content. I was not before aware that the gentleman from Missouri had offered the same amendment as this of mine. I understood he had some bill pending, but its exact nature was unknown to me. I was in Congress before he was, and advocated the repeal of this obnoxious law, and offered the same amendment exactly that I now present two years before he was in Congress.

It seems strange to me that he should raise a technical quibble in order to cut out a proposition which seeks to accomplish in a better way the same object which he has in view. If he introduced an amendment like this of mine, he must have regarded it as a worthy one. And why he should now seek to strike down the very object which he aimed to accomplish by the same amendment I cannot conceive. If the gentleman has in reality introduced a proposition like this, the point of order is good against it and I have no desire to press it. Is it so?

Mr. HATCH. Here is the bill. I will send it to the gentleman.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I will take his word for it, and withdraw my amendment, and will favor the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri if I cannot get all that I desire to accomplish. I will take as much relief for the farmer as is attainable. I am satisfied that the gentleman, as well as all others, will admit that my amendment is of greater advantage to the tobacco growers than his own. By his amendment some unfair restrictions are still left upon the farmer's right to dispose of his tobacco, while my amendment frees him from all restraint and leaves him in as complete control of his tobacco as he has over his corn or wheat. As under the rules I am only allowed five minutes to discuss this question I will content myself with appending some remarks I made in this House on June 15, 1878, when I first offered this amendment:

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. CARLISE.) The House is now as in Committee of the Whole, and resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4414) in relation to internal revenue, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of line 22, section 14:

"That all of that portion of the sixth clause of section 3244 of the Revised Statutes of the United States embraced in the following words: 'Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to exempt from a special tax any farmer or planter who, by peddling or otherwise, sells leaf tobacco at retail, directly to consumers, or who sells or assigns, consigns, transfers, or disposes of, to persons other than those who have paid a special tax as leaf dealers or manufacturers of tobacco, snuff, or cigars, or to persons purchasing leaf tobacco for export,' be, and the same is hereby, repealed."

INTERNAL-REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The reasons impelling me to offer this amendment were induced partly by this circumstance: a short time before my departure from home for this city last summer I met on the railway a neighboring farmer who owned a small piece of land. I found him in custody of a deputy United States marshal, who was taking him to Springfield, the State capital, where the United States courts are held, some two hundred miles away. The only charge against him was that on his little farm, devoted mainly to other agricultural productions, he had raised a small patch of tobacco, intending it for his own consumption, but the necessity for bread in his family store rendered it necessary for him to forego his luxury and part with it. He had placed the tobacco under his arm, being the entire crop produced by him, and at a neighboring mill exchanged it for flour. Remember, the tobacco had been planted, cultivated, and gathered by his own labor, with no help save Him who gives the increase. The farmer was entirely ignorant of the legal restriction upon his right to dispose of the product of his farm to whomsoever he pleased. A malignant neighbor, moved by a grudge, being better advised, had informed the United States revenue officers. These officers and the marshal, knowing there would be fees in their pockets, no matter what became of the unsophisticated farmer, had caused this man to be arrested, torn from his home and horror-stricken family, and the deputy marshal was conveying him two hundred miles away to answer this as a criminal charge.

I asked myself, can it be possible, considering the character of the men from whom we have sprung and who made this Government, men who a hundred years ago rose in rebellion because a small tax had been levied upon a foreign product—tea—that the descendants of those men of the third and fourth generations were being thrown into prison for daring to sell the product of their own labor in order to obtain the necessaries of life for their families; can it be possible that a man is not permitted to exchange his own honestly-acquired, God-given property for bread?

But, sir, as grievous and humiliating as it may seem, it must be confessed that our statute-book is disgraced with just such a law. The provision I seek to repeal prohibits a man from exchanging or selling this product of his farm to the highest and best purchaser, even where it be necessary to obtain the necessaries of life.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if you can by law restrict a farmer in the sale of his tobacco, I ask if it is not also in the power of Congress to enact a law restricting farmers in the sale of corn, wheat, or any other product except to a certain privileged class? If you build up such a class having a monopoly of the right to purchase the agricultural products of the country, will you not bind hand and foot the producing classes and deliver them over to the power and control of a combination having the power governed by their greed and avarice to fix the price of farm products?

In my judgment, the foundation of the wealth and prosperity of this country rests upon the producing classes; when you strike down that class you will have retarded the growth and development of this land and shattered the basis of its greatness.

If the revenue officials who had arrested my neighbor had been in office in the day of our earliest ancestor, Adam, they would not have arrested him or his wife for stealing from the tree of forbidden fruit; but, sir, if Adam had dared to exchange tobacco produced by the sweat of his brow with the men of Nod or any other land, he would have been arrested and thrown into a prison.

The letter of the law is as I have stated it, but when I contemplate the purposes for which this Government was established, when I read in the Constitution that it was ordained "to establish justice, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty," when I go farther back and read in that Declaration of Independence which gave birth to the Constitution that all men are endowed by their Creator with the inalienable rights of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness"—as these reflections run through my mind, I am driven to the belief that this law is unconstitutional. It is violative of the spirit of the Constitution, as it is certainly in violation of the inalienable right of man to exchange his property for bread. As I have already said, if you can dictate to whom the farmer may sell his leaf tobacco, you can dictate to whom he may sell his corn and wheat; if you can deprive him of the right to sell his leaf tobacco to his neighbor for consumption, you can deprive him of the right to sell his corn or wheat to his starving neighbor for food. Such a law is unjust. It is not an enactment of freedom; it is an edict of tyranny.

While on this subject I will avail myself of the liberty of saying that our system of Federal taxation is wrong. Taxation should be equal and uniform and in proportion to the amount of property. Dollars, not individuals, should be taxed. Every man should bear the burden of taxation in proportion to the value of the property he possesses. The larger the amount of property a man possesses the greater the amount of protection he receives from the Government. Among the principal objects of government is the protection of property, and yet we find under our system that the poor pay as much Federal taxation as the rich. It is especially so in regard to the internal-revenue tax, of which by far the heaviest proportion falls upon the impoverished South and the young and undeveloped West. In 1875 the West and South paid into the national Treasury as internal-revenue taxes the sum of $75,361,276.38, while the New England and Middle States only paid $28,123,789.42. My own State, although ranking only fourth in population in the Union, paid last year a much larger sum than any other State.

I have no time now to dwell upon figures, but I desire to call attention to a table, for which I am indebted to the speech made during this session by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. TUCKER:]

Localities.	1867.	Actual in 1875.	Proper proportion in 1875.
Northeastern States	$46,915,829 42	$4,003,155 13	$19,674,380
Middle States	95,082,021 95	24,120,642 29	39,808,589
Northwestern States	45,144,364 71	43,476,694 73	18,931,507
South Middle States	22,631,406 18	26,181,412 74	9,490,587

Before I yield the floor, as a parting word, I desire to remind this House that the national legislation of the past fifteen years has borne heavily upon the agricultural classes; so grievously are they oppressed that they are unwilling to submit to further endurance.

They constitute the bone and sinew of this land. They are patient, law-abiding, self-sacrificing, and ardent lovers of their Government, but as they are the main support of the social and political fabric they feel that they have a right to demand relief from the oppressive features of the present laws.

This amendment is a step in that direction, and I now conclude with an earnest appeal to you who are the direct representatives of the people to listen to their complaint and commence at once to repeal the unjust legislation of the past.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I desire to call the attention of members for one moment to the character of this amendment. It is said that "he takes my life who takes away the means by which I live." Now, this is one way of defeating the internal-revenue law. That law as it now exists is found to be absolutely indispensable in order to keep trace of the tobacco. It is a mistake to say that it is a special hardship on the producer.

How is this revenue collected? I will state in one moment. The farmer does not, as stated here, pay a license or tax for the right to sell the tobacco he produces; that is not true. But the law provides that the man engaged in the purchase of tobacco shall take out a license. Why? In order that the Government may keep the trace of the tobacco.

The dealer who buys is licensed, must be licensed before he becomes a dealer. When he buys any quantity of tobacco an entry of the purchase is made, and reports made to collector in his book. Thus the collector of internal revenue has a record of it. When this licensed dealer sells to the manufacturer the amount is entered, and the manufacturer keeps a complete record of all purchases and sales. But if you permit those who raise tobacco to sell wherever they please, and to whomsoever may be pleased to buy, what is the result? The manufacturer finds men selling tobacco everywhere to all consumers without license—tobacco upon which no tax has been paid. Thus you strike down the manufacturers, and at the same time defeat the collection of the internal revenue. At a near day we shall be able to wipe out all this taxation, but until we can do that let us not take away the only means by which the tax can be collected.

Mr. SPEER. Mr. Chairman, the House has already passed judgment upon the principle of this amendment by almost a two-thirds vote in favor of suspending the rules and passing the bill presented in the early part of the session by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. DIBRELL.] Largely more than a majority voted for that proposition. There never was a more just measure of relief to the small farmers of this country than is contained in this proposition. If the amendment be adopted, the farmers of remote and mountainous sections of the country, at a distance from railroads, can sell the small quantities of leaf tobacco which they raise, and thus provide money to pay their taxes, to purchase the necessaries of life, and in many ways to contribute to their comfort and support. Take my district, for instance, where the Blue Ridge Mountains divide it into two sections. All up the sides of these mountains, perhaps forty or fifty miles away from a railroad, in the rich coves, and, indeed, all through the twenty counties of the district, the tobacco plant grows in great luxuriance. In a place half the size of this Hall a farmer might raise enough tobacco to buy his sugar and his coffee for a year. Yet now, while he is permitted to sell his cabbages and his potatoes raised on one part of that patch, he cannot sell his leaf tobacco raised on the other because there is no one permitted to buy except a licensed dealer. If his crop amounts to a hogshead, perhaps it will pay him to ship to a warehouseman. The tax, however, on the retail dealer is virtually prohibitory. I am informed there are only five of them in the United States, the object being to discourage the sale of leaf tobacco, so that the manufactured article shall have no competition.

Gentlemen talk about affording relief to the poor man. This is relief to the poor man, to the poor agriculturist who, maybe, wants to smoke leaf tobacco. It is not necessary, as the gentleman from Ohio says it is, to trace the leaf tobacco into the hands of the man who grows it that the law is of force. It is necessary to trace it back to the point where it begins to be manufactured; but it is not necessary to trace it back to the producer. This is a pretense in behalf of the manufacturers.

Mr. Chairman, as I have said, this House has once by a considerable majority, not quite two-thirds, approved the principle of this proposition; and I trust that this relief will now be given to the poor agriculturists of my own and other sections of the country.

Mr. HOUSE. I move pro forma to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday or the day before I submitted to the committee a few remarks upon this amendment of the gentleman from Missouri. I then stated that this prohibitory tax upon the sale of leaf tobacco by retail was in the interest of the manufacturer. Now I did not catch all that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] said; but as I understood he asked this committee to vote down the amendment upon the ground that the farmer, if permitted to sell his tobacco in whatever quantity he may see fit, as he sells his oats and his wheat, will come into competition with the manufacturer.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Oh, no; I did not say that. The gentleman does not state the law correctly. There is no planter in the country who may not sell all the tobacco he raises, one leaf or a million, under the existing law.

Mr. HOUSE. I do not understand the gentleman.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I say the gentleman misapprehended what I said, and he misstates the law if he says that any man is prohibited from selling the tobacco he raises in any quantity he pleases. There is no restriction so far as that is concerned.

Mr. HOUSE. The farmer cannot sell his tobacco in any quantity he pleases.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Certainly he can.

Mr. HOUSE. Certainly not.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Here is the point. The licensed dealers in leaf tobacco—and they are everywhere——

Mr. WHITE. There is not one in my county or district.

A MEMBER. Because you raise no tobacco.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Wait a moment. The licensed dealers in leaf tobacco are required to keep a record, and there is no pretense that the planter cannot sell to the licensed dealer any quantity he chooses, whether a leaf, a bale, or a hogshead.

Mr. HOUSE. I am utterly surprised at the gentleman's statement. Every retail dealer in leaf tobacco, under the law as it now stands, has to pay a license of $500; and for every dollar's worth of tobacco he sells over $1,000 he has to pay 50 cents to the Government.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. My friend does not insist, does he, that the planter has to pay a cent for selling his crop, to take out a license, or pay a special tax?

Mr. HOUSE. He cannot sell it by retail unless he sells it to the retail dealer; and no man can be a retail dealer because the tax is prohibitory. Here is the provision of the pending bill:

> Retail dealers in leaf tobacco shall pay $250, and 30 cents for each dollar on the amount of their sales in excess of $1,000.

The gentleman from Ohio has totally misapprehended the law, and also the grievance under which the farmer is now suffering.

I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, to this provision of his bill and to ask him why he has inserted it. Why do you put a provision in the bill that a retail dealer in leaf tobacco shall pay a license of $250 and 30 cents on the dollar for every dollar's worth of tobacco he sells? Does not the gentleman from Pennsylvania know that is prohibitory? Does he not know no man can afford to pay $250 license on the first $1,000 and 30 cents on every dollar's worth of tobacco he sells over $1,000? That is as much prohibitory as the law now is.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. HOUSE. I wish I could have more time on this important question.

Mr. WHITE. I ask by unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee may have his time extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Tennessee be extended for five minutes.

Several members objected.

Mr. REED. I object, unless the same time be given to reply.

Mr. HOUSE. I am willing to agree to that.

Mr. REED. Very well; I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HOUSE. Not only that, but you have in this bill a provision equally prohibitory as the law now stands. It is not only prohibitory but you go even further. At the last session of Congress a law was passed by which retail dealers of leaf tobacco got out a license by paying $5. The farmer on the tobacco he raised on his own farm, or on what he got from tenants who raised tobacco on his own farm, might sell to the retail dealer on the payment of a tax or license of $5 per annum. He might sell it to him in any quantity, but this repeals that provision. You not only put a provision in this bill which makes it prohibitory on the farmer to sell the product of his soil and the result of his sweat and labor——

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Where is that done? Show me the law.

Mr. HOUSE. What?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Where is the proposition to prohibit the farmer from selling?

Mr. HOUSE. Why, my dear sir, it has been the law always.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I hold the statute in my hand; show me the law.

Mr. HOUSE. There has been a bill here to repeal that ever since I have been in Congress. A vote was taken on a bill offered by my colleague, [Mr. DIBRELL,] and it was carried through this House by nearly, if not, a two-thirds majority. I wish the farmer might sell his tobacco as he sells his oats.

Mr. VANCE. To sell to the consumer you mean?

Mr. HATCH. He cannot sell to anybody but a licensed dealer.

Mr. HOUSE. He cannot sell to anybody except a licensed dealer. You not only propose to repeal by this bill the act of June, 1880, but you put a provision into this bill which is equally prohibitory with the law as it now stands which makes a retail dealer pay $500 for the first $1,000 worth he sells and fifty cents for every dollar's worth he sells over a thousand dollars. There is no doubt about that. I never heard anybody doubt it except the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KELLEY. If the gentleman will refer to lines 8 and 9 he will find dealers in leaf tobacco shall pay $12.

Mr. HOUSE. Why that is a different thing altogether.

Mr. HATCH. The dealer under that license of $25 can only sell to another licensed dealer. He cannot sell to the consumer at all.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I hope we will be permitted to have a moment to reply.

Mr. HOUSE. I am talking about retail dealers. I am astonished the gentleman from Ohio should so misapprehend the law. I refer here to the Revised Statutes, page 624. I wish I had time to have it read. "Retail dealers in leaf tobacco shall each pay $500, and if their annual sales exceed $1,000, shall each pay in addition fifty cents for every dollar in excess of $1,000 of their sales."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. KELLEY. This bill reduces the $500 to $250, and fifty cents on the $1,000 to thirty cents on the $1,000.

Mr. HOUSE. Let me ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HOUSE. It is a pretext and a sham and a fraud to say that this affords any relief to the farmer.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the effort has been made here constantly during this debate and on previous occasions to induce the House to believe that the farmer of the country cannot sell his tobacco without paying a special tax; and gentlemen have made the mistake all the way through this discussion of calling him a retail dealer. Now, there is no provision in the law requiring him to pay a tax for the privilege of selling his crop.

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman from Ohio is very much mistaken. He can only sell to a licensed dealer——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I do not yield. The law expressly provides:

No farmer or planter shall be required to pay a special tax as a dealer in leaf tobacco for selling tobacco of his own production or tobacco received by him as rent from tenants who have produced the same on his land.

Now, wherein does that levy a tax upon the farmer?

Mr. HATCH. Read the proviso, the balance of the section.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I intend to read it. But yet it has been asserted here that they have no right to sell tobacco without paying a special tax.

Mr. HATCH. I hope the gentleman from Ohio does not mean to misstate the position taken on this question.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. By no means. I will read the remainder of the section:

Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to exempt from a special tax any farmer or planter who, by peddling or otherwise, sells leaf tobacco at retail directly to consumers.

Now, that is exactly what I have asserted, too.

Mr. HATCH. Go on; read the rest.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The section goes on:

Or who sells, or assigns, consigns, transfers, or disposes of to persons other than those who have paid a special tax as leaf dealers or manufacturers of tobacco, snuff, or cigars, &c.

Mr. HATCH. Now, I ask the gentleman from Ohio to state in all fairness if under this statute the farmer is not prohibited from selling his crop to anybody but the licensed dealer?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That is precisely what I have stated the case to be, and what you said it was not.

There is no prohibition or tax imposed upon the farmer for selling his crop, but when he enters into the business of a retail dealer he must pay, as everybody else, the special tax.

Mr. HOUSE. The gentleman from Ohio is entirely mistaken in saying——

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. You have iterated and reiterated and reiterated the assertion here that the farmer was unable or could not sell his crop without paying a special license.

Mr. HATCH. I never made that statement on the floor of the House.

Mr. HOUSE. It never was made in that way.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Then you were not happy in making yourself understood by me, at all events.

Mr. HATCH. If the gentleman had desired to understand the statement, or had listened to the statement that was made, he would have understood the position taken with reference to this matter. The law is very plain.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio declines to be interrupted.

Mr. HOUSE. I yielded to the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman did not yield, but the time allowed him was exhausted. The Chair must insist that gentlemen will address the Chair when they wish to interrupt the gentleman having the floor, and the Chair will then ask the gentleman who is interrupted if he will yield for a question.

Mr. HOUSE. Then I ask the gentleman from Ohio to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If you will allow me to conclude what I was about to say when you interrupted me we will understand each other better.

Mr. HOUSE. Will you yield to me for a question?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes, for a question.

Mr. HOUSE. Do I understand the gentleman from Ohio to say that the farmer can sell his tobacco by retail to anybody just as he would sell his wheat or his corn or his oats?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I never said so, and the law does not say so.

Mr. HOUSE. No, it does not; and that is just what we want it to say.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I never intimated that it was so.

Mr. HOUSE. Can he sell to anybody but a licensed dealer; to a man who has paid his $500 special license and complied with the other requirements of the law?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. No, he cannot.

Mr. HOUSE. That is all we want you to acknowledge.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. But that is not all. This is not a question as to whom the farmer can sell, it is a question of who may be the purchaser. Now, dealers in tobacco are required to pay a tax, and, as the gentleman from Tennessee must understand, for the purpose of keeping a trace of the tobacco so that the revenues may be collected upon it. There is no tax upon the farmer in that respect; and when the gentleman from Tennessee and when the gentleman from Missouri take the ground that the farmer has no right to sell his crop, it is an error, and, as I have shown, not consistent with the law. The truth of the matter is that gentlemen reverse the conditions constantly. The law requires that all dealers in tobacco shall pay a special tax, but the gentleman put the farmer in the category of the retail dealer continually, and, of course, if he engages in the business of selling directly to consumers, he does take that position and must comply with the law as other dealers are required to comply with it. Now, we have all over the country men who have paid the license to deal in tobacco; they are purchasers, and there is no other way to preserve, as I have said, a trace of the tobacco, so as to provide for a collection of the revenues, than by requiring just such license. If you allow the farmer, planter, and producer, and everybody else that chooses, to engage in this business without paying the license, then you, as a result, prevent the collection of the revenue altogether. It is the men who buy the tobacco and who are engaged in the trade who pay the license, just as the man who is engaged in selling whisky is required to pay the special tax. You do not punish the man who drinks the cock-tails, but you punish the man who is engaged in selling in violation of the law. That is exactly the case with tobacco; you do not punish the man who sells, but you require the dealer to get out a special license——

Mr. HOUSE. But you make the business of retail dealing pay such a license that few men can engage in it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If this bill is adopted——

Mr. WHITE. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to yield to me for a question.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I yield to the gentleman for a question, but not for a speech.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio if he were to compel the man who owns an orchard to sell his apples to a licensed apple buyer, who was compelled to pay $500 tax before he could sell those apples to the distillery, if then his case would not be a parallel, instead of the one he has presented?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I do not desire to discuss hypothetical cases when we have a distinct case here before us to consider. The whole point of this is whether we will adopt this amendment which takes away the means indispensably necessary to collect the internal revenue. The experience of this country and others shows there is but one way, and that is to require dealers and manufacturers to take out a license. Now, if you permit the farmer, planter, and producer, as my friend suggests in his amendment, to sell without a license—and I would be glad to have it so, except for the fact that you would thus defeat the collection of the revenue, and would at the same time utterly destroy the manufacturer—it is perfectly clear that if you permit him to sell to Paul, Barnabas, Silas, Sebastian, and everybody else, you will observe that the manufacturer must close business, as his tax-paid goods would have to compete with those that are non-tax-paid; and thus your manufacturer would go down and the revenue go down also. It may be a hardship in one sense, but it is a hardship which is inevitable in the collection of the internal revenue. When the time comes—and I hope it will soon—I will be glad to remove the whole internal-revenue tax on tobacco. But I do not want to remove the prop that holds up the house before I am ready to take down the house. When I am ready to take the house down I will then be ready to take down the prop that upholds it. Until then it is unwise to do what is here proposed. If we are to collect this revenue at all, it is idle to seriously propose to withhold the means without which the revenue cannot be collected.

Mr. HATCH. I want to set the gentleman representing the Cincinnati district right. Mr. Chairman, there cannot be any misconstruction or misapprehension of this law, either the law as it stands upon the statute-book or the proposed amendment of the Committee on Ways and Means. All they propose to do is simply to reduce this prohibitory tax from $500 to $250 and from 50 cents to 30 cents on the amount of sales of leaf tobacco made within a given time by any one single person.

As I explained fully to the House on the day before yesterday there are two classes of licenses; one known as the dealers' license, and one known as a license to retail dealers of leaf tobacco. The man who takes out a license as a dealer can only sell to some other person who has a similar license or to a manufacturer of tobacco. He cannot sell one single ounce or pound to a consumer. He cannot sell an ounce or a pound in any market where there is not a licensed dealer authorized by the Government to buy. And the hardship upon the farmer is this, that in the West and in all the tobacco-growing sections of the country there are a large number of farmers who raise less than a hogshead of tobacco and cannot afford to ship it to a tobacco market for sale. They cannot go into the open market and sell it to the highest bidder. And all that my proviso means, and all that can be made out of it, is that it permits the farmer to go to the nearest country store and take his little crop of tobacco, ten pounds or a thousand pounds, and sell it for whatever the country merchant will pay for it. And the moment it passes into the hands of a buyer it becomes subject to all the rules and regulations of the revenue department.

Mr. WILSON. Subject to taxation.

Mr. HATCH. Yes; and subject to taxation. It does not reduce the revenue of the Government a single dollar. There is but one single apprehension about it, and that is what I explained the day before yesterday. It is that these manufacturers, for whom the gentleman representing the Cincinnati district pleads so eloquently, are afraid some poor laboring-man in the United States, who has no money but what he makes every day from his labor, may go into the market and buy some unmanufactured tobacco to chew or smoke for his own gratification rather than that which is stamped.

Mr. WILSON. I rise to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY.] We have been here from Monday morning, I may say from ten o'clock every morning, when we enter upon our committee work, until five or six o'clock. Considering the length of labor of this week, I suggest that the gentleman move that the committee do now rise, and let us have an adjournment to Monday morning, when we will come back fresh and vigorous to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to reach the point of having the previous question ordered this afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] which has been reported.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 64, noes 93.

Mr. HATCH. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. KELLEY and Mr. HATCH were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 89, noes 92.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS. I now offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 2 the following:

"Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury, from and after the 1st of January, 1883, shall grant permission to any firm, individual, or corporation to withdraw from bond alcohol or any spirits containing alcohol and subject to internal-revenue tax, in specific quantities of not less than 350 proof-gallons, without the payment of the internal-revenue tax on the same or on the spirits from which it may have been distilled, for the sole purpose of use in industrial pursuits, under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. KELLEY. I make the point of order on that amendment that it affects the general system of collection of revenue, internal and from customs; also, that there are bills now pending before the House containing the same provision.

Mr. WILLIS. I do not think that either of the two points of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] will stand a moment's examination. I challenge the gentleman to produce any bill now pending before this House which is "substantially," as the rule requires, the same as this proposition.

Mr. RANDALL. It is very evident that we cannot get through with this bill to-night.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Yes, we can.

Mr. RANDALL. We have been a long time in session, and it is a very hot day. I therefore suggest to my colleague [Mr. KELLEY] that he move that the committee now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] yield?

Mr. WILLIS. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. KELLEY. I had hoped that we might reach the previous question on this bill. After this amendment shall have been disposed off there is but one section of the bill left.

Mr. RANDALL. This is Saturday, and the House has been hard at work all the week.

Mr. KELLEY. I will say, however, that a great number of gentlemen on both sides have appealed to me, saying that they have made arrangements to go to different parts of the country and to the seaside. Some of them have said that their families are already away from the city. I think it possible that the next half hour will thin the House out so much that we will not have a quorum here. I therefore will move that the committee now rise, and this bill can come up hereafter as unfinished business.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CAMP reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. RANDALL and Mr. CAMP moved that the House adjourn.

Mr. ROBESON. I call for the regular order.

Mr. BELMONT. I rise to a privileged motion.

Mr. RANDALL. I will yield to the gentleman from New York for that purpose.

A COMMON PRIME MERIDIAN.

Mr. BELMONT. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House this morning refused to order to be engrossed for a third reading the joint resolution (H. R. No. 209) to authorize the President of the United States to call an international conference to fix on and recommend for universal adoption a common prime meridian to be used in the reckoning of longtitude and in the regulation of time throughout the world.

Mr. CAMP. I make the point that the motion is not in order pending a motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the motion to reconsider may be entered upon the Journal, and that will be done.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DAWES, for four days.

To Mr. ERMENTROUT, indefinitely.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ROBESON. I now call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BLISS: Papers relating to the claim of the heir of General Count C. Pulaski—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. E. W. ROBERTSON: The petition of citizens of Marksville, Louisiana, for the speedy enactment of a national bankrupt law—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. URNER: The petition of J. L. Belt and 34 others, citizens of Montgomery and Frederick Counties, Maryland, for legislation to regulate charges for railway transportation—to the Committee on Commerce.

SENATE.

MONDAY, June 26, 1882.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of Major Amos Stickney, Corps of Engineers, of a survey, made in compliance with provisions in the river and harbor act of March 3, 1879, for a breakwater in Lake Pontchartrain, in the vicinity of the new canal outlet near New Orleans, to serve as a harbor of refuge; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GORMAN presented the petition of John M. Robinson, president of the Baltimore Steam Navigation Company, praying that an appropriation be made to satisfy the allowance and recommendation of the Quartermaster-General, made under the authority of the Secretary of War, for services rendered during the rebellion in keeping the channel at Locust Point open and free from ice; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BROWN. I present a petition of a large number of citizens of Brunswick, in the State of Georgia, setting forth the fact that the post-office building in that city has recently been consumed by fire. It was a wooden building. There is no custom-house building there except a wooden building, and the port has now two important railroad lines centering at that point. It is a very fine harbor, with a growing business. The petition prays for an appropriation to erect a suitable building there for post-office and custom-house purposes. I move its reference to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom were referred the bill (H. R. No. 3856) to provide for the muster and pay of certain officers of the volunteer forces, and the bill (H. R. No. 4676) for the relief of certain officers of the Army for services actually performed during the rebellion, reported a bill (S. No. 2083) forthe relief of certain officers of the Army; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred sundry bills in regard to the salaries of district judges of the United States, to report an amendment to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, which I move be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

SIXTH NORTH CAROLINA COLLECTION DISTRICT.

Mr. VANCE. I am instructed by the select committee to investigate the administration of the collection of internal revenue in the sixth district of North Carolina to report a resolution, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the select committee to investigate the administration of the collection of internal revenue in the sixth district of North Carolina is granted leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate.

SOCIETY OF THE RED CROSS.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 73) providing for the publication at the Government Printing Office of certain information in aid of the Society of the Red Cross, under the recent accession of the United States to the Geneva convention to provide for the amelioration of the sick and wounded in time of war and for furnishing relief in other national calamities, to report it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution. The joint resolution as originally introduced provided for a permanent appropriation of $1,000 a year. The committee thought that the object would be sufficiently answered by an appropriation for this year, as it is the first year of the accession of the Government to the organization.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was reported from the Committee on Printing with an amendment, to strike out the preamble and all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State in the printing and publication of necessary information concerning the Societies of the Red Cross for the amelioration of the sufferings of soldiers in time of war, and the recent accession of the United States to the Geneva convention for the organization of said societies, and giving a brief history of such organizations and the results thereof.

Mr. CONGER. Is there any objection to the preamble except that it takes up room?

Mr. HAWLEY. It is of considerable length, and recites a sort of history which the committee did not deem necessary.

Mr. CONGER. It seems to me the preamble might be printed with the joint resolution. It is a matter of universal interest, and the little amount of extra printing which it would require cannot make much difference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state on the question of leaving out the preamble, that half the time the preamble recites what is not true, and nobody knows whether it is true or not.

Mr. HAWLEY. The preamble in this case recites, besides a long title:

Whereas by the recent action of the President and Senate, the accession of the United States to the Geneva convention for the organization of Societies of the Red Cross for the amelioration of the sufferings of soldiers in time of war, and for furnishing relief to sufferers in national calamities, has been ratified and confirmed—

Everybody knows that—and the terms of the said treaty have been made public; and

Whereas a national society has been organized in the city of Washington, of which Miss Clara Barton is the president, and local societies are being organized in different parts of the United States; and

Whereas it is desirable that full information of the objects and purposes of said societies should be disseminated—

This is another long paragraph, and we thought it was not necessary.

Mr. CONGER. It certainly can do no harm to retain the preamble.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have no special objection to retaining it.

Mr. CONGER. I hope the preamble will be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question on agreeing to the preamble will come up after the joint resolution passes. The pending question is on the amendment reported from the Committee on Printing to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert a substitute.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the preamble, which the Committee on Printing report to strike out. Does the Senator from Michigan wish a separate vote on the preamble?

Mr. CONGER. I hope the preamble will be adopted.

Mr. ANTHONY. It seems to me that is a very long handle to a very small resolution. I do not think it is proper to cumber up the statute-books with long preambles, giving the reasons why we pass legislation. I hope the Senator from Michigan will not press his request.

Mr. CONGER. As a matter of gratification to hundreds who are interesting themselves more than we are in the benevolent and charitable work intended by the joint resolution, and as it certainly cannot make much difference, I wish to have the preamble retained.

Mr. HAWLEY. The whole measure will have to be redrafted if the preamble is retained, because the substance of the preamble is condensed in the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee striking out the preamble.

The preamble was rejected.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution providing for the publication at the Government Printing Office of certain information in aid of the Society of the Red Cross."

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. GORMAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2084) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Europe; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BROWN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2085) to appropriate $75,000 to erect a building for a post-office and custom-house in Brunswick, Georgia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HAWLEY asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2086) to regulate the practice of the United States courts in certain cases; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. McMILLAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2087) to protect and promote the navigability of the navigable rivers of the United States, and to prevent the deposit of sawdust or other material in said rivers to the injury of navigation, and to punish persons guilty of depositing such material therein; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

GARFIELD MEMORIAL ADDRESS.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That in addition to the number heretofore ordered, there be printed for the use of James G. Blaine 750 copies of his eulogy upon James A. Garfield, and 750 of the same for the use of Mrs. Lucretia R. Garfield.

PRINTING OF ORDNANCE REPORT.

Mr. HAWLEY. A resolution was reported from the Committee on Printing a day or two ago providing for the printing of certain papers and illustrations accompanying a letter from the Secretary of War and a report of the board on heavy ordnance. Objection was made at the time by the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. McMILLAN,] in order that he might inquire into the matter further. He has no further objection, and I ask that the resolution be passed.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the following resolution, reported from the Committee on Printing on the 22d of June:

Resolved, That such parts of the papers and drawings from the records of the board on heavy ordnance and projectiles as may be selected by the Chief of Ordnance be printed.

The resolution was agreed to.

DISTRICT WATER SUPPLY.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask to call up at this time the bill (S. No. 1723) to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes, for the purpose of acting upon the House message in reference to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 1723) to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes, further insisting upon its amendments to the bill, and asking a further conference of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate do further insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the House, grant the further conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the Senate conferees.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. HARRIS, Mr. INGALLS, and Mr. GORMAN the managers at the conference on the part of the Senate.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 6244) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, have instructed me to report it with sundry amendments, and to ask that it be printed and lie upon the table; and to-morrow morning after the morning business I desire to call it up for action. It is very important to have action on it at once.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill and amendments will be printed, and the Senator from Iowa gives notice that to-morrow morning immediately after the routine morning business is over he will ask to have all other business set aside and take up the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD sundry tables showing the changes which the Senate Committee on Appropriations have made in the bill as it came from the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Leave will be granted if there be no objection.

Mr. ANTHONY. Had not the statements better be printed as a separate document? The printing of such papers cumbers up the RECORD. The paper can be printed in the ordinary way and laid on the tables of Senators.

Mr. COCKRELL. I approve of the suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island. This matter had better be printed separately.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Rhode Island and the Senator from Missouri concur, I do not object, and the paper may be printed separately, though it would be more convenient I think to have it in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The statement will be printed separately.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4222) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 6.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out from said amendment the word "five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "two;" and the Senate agree to the same.

EUGENE HALE,
M. W. RANSOM,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
J. C. S. BLACKBURN,
BENJ. BUTTERWORTH,
THOMAS RYAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. JOHN BAILEY, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 3825) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a ponton railway bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the mouth of the Upper Iowa River, in the State of Iowa;

A bill (H. R. No. 3920) to amend section 4766, title 57, of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 243) to provide for a deficiency in the appropriations for fees of witnesses in the United States courts for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882.

The message also announced that the House had passed a resolution that the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives declare their respective Houses adjourned sine die on the 10th day of July, 1882; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the resolution of the Senate of the 17th of May, 1882, for printing 5,000 copies of the report of Lieutenant T. W. Symons, Corps of Engineers, respecting the navigable waters of the Upper Columbia River and its tributaries, and resources of the country adjacent thereto.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the resolution of the Senate directing the Public Printer to furnish, commencing with the first session Forty-seventh Congress, 3,425 copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the use of the Senate, instead of 3,100 copies as ordered by the concurrent resolution of June 4, 1874.

The message also announced that the House had passed a resolution for the printing of 2,000 copies of the fifth report of the United States entomological commission, being a special report on the insects affecting forest trees, for the use of the Department of Agriculture, with necessary illustrations, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed a resolution for the printing of 5,000 copies of a special report from the Department of Agriculture on insects affecting the orange tree, with the necessary illustrations, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a resolution for printing 1,000 copies of a special report entitled Bibliography of Economic Entomology, for the use of the Department of Agriculture, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. If the routine morning business is through with, I ask that the bill (S. No. 1683) for the relief of Benjamin Holladay be taken up and considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] gave notice that he would ask to take up a resolution submitted by him this morning.

Mr. PENDLETON. If the routine morning business is now completed, and the privileged motions are out of the way, I desire to call up a resolution which I offered several weeks ago in the Senate in relation to political assessments, and which it was agreed should be called up this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair announces that the routine morning business is finished, and that business under the Anthony rule is in order. Resolutions have precedence when they are asked for over bills. After the disposition of this resolution, then the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin will be in order.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Will the Senator from Ohio kindly indulge me while I say one word?

Mr. PENDLETON. Certainly.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I am under instructions from the Committee on Claims to secure at as early a moment as possible action on the bill to which I have called attention; that is, the bill for the relief of Benjamin Holladay.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that it would be in order for the Senator from Wisconsin to make a motion outside of the Anthony rule to proceed to the consideration of the bill and set aside the Anthony rule.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I do not desire to antagonize the motion of the Senator from Ohio, but if the Senator would consent to allow me to go on with the bill until one o'clock, I think it could be disposed of in that time.

Mr. MORRILL. I am very sure it cannot be disposed of in an hour, or in two hours.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The bill is not a new bill; its merits are thoroughly understood by the Senate; and its demerits, if it has any, are understood by the Senator from Vermont. He will make his speech and I know what it will be. I have heard it a great many times.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the merits of the bill are not a subject of debate.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I was not discussing the merits.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. PENDLETON. I am perfectly willing to yield to the convenience of the Senator or of the Senate. I am perfectly willing that the resolution shall go over until one o'clock, if at that time it can be taken up and the debate proceed as it was agreed it should be proceeded with, freed from the limitation of the Anthony rule. If that cannot be agreed to; if such is not the disposition of the Senate, then I shall call up my resolution now.

Mr. CONGER. I had objected formerly, and I still object to taking up the resolution under the Anthony rule. I have no objection at all to the Senator occupying an hour, or whatever time he may desire, to make his own remarks, but I shall insist that the same opportunity shall be given to others to speak upon his resolution, and that others shall not be trammeled by the five-minute rule. If the resolution can be taken up, as I have no doubt it can be, unless the Senator prefers to make his remarks this morning at some interval between the consideration of the appropriation bills, and go on with the discussion, it will be more agreeable to me than to divide up the time in different mornings by a mere permission to speak. If the Senator from Ohio prefers to speak this morning I will not object of course to that, but I do object to taking up the resolution for final disposition until I shall have had an opportunity of being heard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the resolution is taken up now, and the Senator from Wisconsin gives way, it will be proceeded with under the Anthony rule. If the Senator from Michigan objects to considering the resolution under the Anthony rule, with five minutes' debate, then the Senator from Ohio can move, notwithstanding the objection, that the Senate proceed with its consideration, and then it will be open to debate, without limitation.

Mr. CONGER. I desire it to be distinctly understood that I do not object to the Senator occupying any time, now even, only I do not want the resolution to be called up for final disposition, either under the Anthony rule or at any time, until others may have an opportunity to express themselves upon it.

Mr. PENDLETON. It is my desire that the resolution shall come up and full liberty of debate be given to every Senator who desires to speak. I desire to occupy more than five minutes myself on the subject. I will, according as it may be the pleasure of the Senate, now move to take up the resolution, notwithstanding the objection of the Senator from Michigan, and then it will be freed from the limitation of debate.

Mr. CONGER. If the Senator cares so little for the proposed courtesy which I intended to express as to drive through without listening to it, he may take his own course.

Mr. PENDLETON. I did not understand myself as meaning to be discourteous in the least degree to the Senator. I meant to meet his suggestion in exactly the spirit in which I understood it was made.

Mr. CONGER. My proposition was that if the Senator from Ohio desired now to make his remarks I had no objection; I only asked if the resolution should be taken up now that the debate should not be forced to-day, as I am not prepared now to say what I wish on the subject.

Mr. PENDLETON. If the Senator has a suggestion to make as to any particular time at which the resolution shall come up I will listen to that with pleasure.

Mr. CONGER. Any time hereafter when there will be an opportunity for discussion.

Mr. PENDLETON. There never can be a better opportunity, one in which the Senate has more leisure than now, I think, during this session.

Mr. CONGER. There are very important public and private bills pressing here (I have one or two myself) in the morning hour, which have the right over the Senator's resolution under the Anthony rule, and we are giving way to that out of courtesy to the Senator from Ohio to hear his interesting remarks on the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio insist upon his motion to consider the resolution notwithstanding the objection?

Mr. PENDLETON. I do, sir.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator give way for a moment?

Mr. HAWLEY. I desire to say a word on that point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not really think that any debate is in order upon the question, because if it is allowed it will occupy more time than it usually takes to pass a bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not consider it debate. I shall make no argument, but suggest, as chairman of the Committee on Civil Service, as the Senator from Ohio is a member of it and took an interest in this very question, that the committee has reported a bill, a bill that I approve of most heartily, which the Senator from Ohio introduced in the last Congress and also in this. It seems to me much more profitable that any discussion of these abuses, or alleged abuses, of the civil service, and the matter of the reorganization of the civil service should take place upon that bill. Then the arguments and appeals would be directed to some practical object. That which the Senator desires to speak on now is simply a resolution, really brutum fulmen. The other is direct and, as I think and as he thinks, practical and useful legislation. I will join him heartily in trying to get that bill up, on which the debate would of course be very general.

Mr. PENDLETON. I am not aware that the committee has reported the bill to which the Senator refers. If it has been reported and is on the Calendar I should like to take it up instead of my resolution.

Mr. HAWLEY. The general bill offered by the Senator early in the session has been reported by the committee.

Mr. PENDLETON. The bill to which I refer has not been reported from the committee.

Mr. HOAR. The bill (S. No. 133) to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States is Order of Business No. 465 on the Calendar. Is not that the bill?

Mr. PENDLETON. No, I refer to a bill relating specially to political assessments.

Mr. HALE. That has nothing to do with the bill reported from the committee.

Mr. PENDLETON. No, there is a bill before the committee prohibiting political assessments, and it has never been reported, as I understand.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand that the Senator from Ohio desires to submit some remarks upon his resolution, and I think it has generally been the courtesy of the Senate to allow a Senator to do that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The consideration of the resolution being objected to by the Senator from Michigan, the Senator from Ohio moves to take up the resolution notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. HALE. If the motion of the Senator from Ohio should be agreed to, in what way would the resolution be before the Senate—under the five-minute rule, or otherwise?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without limitation of debate. The Anthony rule, as amended on motion of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] provides that—

> Bills and resolutions that are not objected to shall be taken up in their order, and each Senator shall be entitled to speak once and for five minutes only upon any question; and the objection may be interposed at any stage of the proceedings unless upon motion the Senate shall otherwise order; and this order shall commence immediately after the call for "concurrent and other resolutions," and shall take precedence of the unfinished business and other special orders. But if the Senate shall proceed with the consideration of any matter notwithstanding an objection—

An objection is now made to the consideration of the resolution, and then the Senate may agree to take it up by a majority vote—

> the foregoing provisions touching debate shall not apply, but the subject shall be proceeded with under the standing rules of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I only wish to understand that if the resolution is taken up now, the matter will be launched on the Senate, the Senator from Ohio will have an opportunity to speak, and some of us who are upon the committee against whom the resolution is aimed will have an opportunity, as well as other Senators, of replying.

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the resolution is taken up it is open to debate as wide as the law can make it and the inclinations of Senators besides.

Mr. HALE. Without any five-minute rule, I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Any Senator who wishes to speak to the resolution will have a right to do so.

Mr. CONGER. I heard no objection at all to the proposition that the Senator from Ohio should have his time for making his remarks upon the resolution, if he chooses, without adopting this motion, and I have no objection to the resolution being brought before the Senate in that way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio cannot make any remarks except for five minutes, unless the Senate decides that the resolution shall be considered notwithstanding the objection of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. CONGER. The Senator from Ohio can be heard for a longer time by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It cannot be done, because the Anthony rule is mandatory.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire under what rule of the Senate any Senator can be prohibited from making any remarks on any subject he chooses?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Because the Anthony rule is in force. Of course by unanimous consent a Senator may make remarks on anything, for an hour or more, if he chooses.

Mr. SHERMAN. As I understand, the Senate agreed to take the resolution up this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There was no agreement to take it up.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understood that last Thursday the matter was announced, and my colleague gave notice that he would call up the resolution on Monday. He gave a proper notice for bringing up the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Of course; but there was no agreement about the time allowed for debate. That is the question.

Mr. SHERMAN. But there was an agreement that the resolution should be taken up, as I understood my colleague.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will inform the Senator from Ohio that his colleague has a right to have the resolution taken up. The resolution is before the Senate now under the Anthony rule, but the Senator from Michigan objects to its consideration under the Anthony rule. The Senator from Ohio moves to proceed with its consideration notwithstanding the objection, and that is the question for the Senate to decide.

Mr. FERRY. I suppose the mere notice given last week has nothing to do with the action of the Senate to-day. The Senator from Ohio now proposes to take up the resolution, in order that he may debate it, and it requires a vote of the Senate to take it up, unless by unanimous consent the resolution be proceeded with under the Anthony rule. I think there can be no objection to the Senator from Ohio submitting his remarks this morning, as the discussion will end at two o'clock, as I understand it.

Mr. PENDLETON. I should like to have the resolution taken up for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio, by unanimous consent, can speak upon the resolution.

Mr. CONGER. I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The objection is withdrawn, and the resolution will be proceeded with under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HALE. That is not what the Senator from Ohio wants.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate if it chooses can allow the Senator from Ohio to speak longer than five minutes by unanimous consent.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to the Senator from Ohio occupying as much time as he may choose to occupy, but if the honorable Senator debates this question more than five minutes, I desire that it shall be open to other Senators to do so.

Mr. FERRY. If the Senator from Ohio will now move, notwithstanding the Anthony rule, to take up his resolution, that will open it to general debate, and if the Senator from Ohio should not occupy the floor until two o'clock the remaining time could be taken up by any other Senator. When two o'clock arrives the discussion will go over until another morning, when it will be resumed.

Mr. BUTLER. That is precisely the effect of the motion made by the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There cannot be any motion made to proceed to the consideration of the resolution when it is being considered under the Anthony rule by unanimous consent.

Mr. BUTLER. With a view of getting around all difficulty, I object pro forma to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. PENDLETON. I move to take up the resolution notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. LOGAN and others. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on proceeding to the consideration of the resolution indicated by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] notwithstanding the objection of the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. BUTLER.]

The motion was agreed to.

POLITICAL ASSESSMENTS.

The Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, submitted by Mr. PENDLETON on the 5th of June:

Resolved, That the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment be instructed to inquire whether any attempt is being made to levy and collect assessments for political partisan purposes from any employés of the Government in Washington, whether the same be under the guise of asking voluntary contributions or otherwise, and to report to the Senate by bill or otherwise, in its discretion.

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. President, when I offered this resolution two or three weeks ago I was anxious for information. I did not know the state of facts as they existed at that time. I had seen in the newspapers that the Republican Congressional committee was about to take means to replenish its funds, and vague intimations were given that a circular under the form of a request for voluntary contributions, but in fact a demand for specific sums of money, was being distributed among the employés of the Departments and the employés of the two Houses of Congress. I had also heard that this circular was backed by authority, and that its language conveyed covert promises, which implied threats, in case the demands were not acceded to.

I was quite astonished, somewhat startled, when I found that this resolution met with objection. I had supposed that no Senator would object to having the truth discovered as to this circular and its intent; and certainly that no Senator would object to the inquiry whether forced contributions were being levied under the guise of invitations for voluntary contributions. Mr. President, I was not quite as much astonished as those words would imply, and candor requires me to say that I was more astonished at the form than the substance of the objection. I had thought if gentlemen objected to it at all they would not do so in express words, but would consign my resolution to an untimely grave in the friendly embrace of a committee of investigation.

Be that as it may, I desired information and was sincerely seeking it. A friend of mine who sits upon this floor and who had some opportunities of knowledge gave to me one of the circulars. He gave it rather in confidence, though not entirely so; rather with the understanding that I should use it for my own information than otherwise. I was enabled to hand back that circular to him within two days, not having exhibited it to anybody else and scarcely having had time to read it myself, for as soon as the resolution appeared in the newspapers I received from many cities and from many States and from many classes of employés of this Government copies of the circular which had been sent to them. I have in my hand quite a number of copies of it. It is very nicely gotten up, written with care, as nicely as a billetdoux between lovers or an hospitable invitation to dinner.

Mr. HALE. Not extravagantly.

Mr. PENDLETON. I do not know that they are extravagantly gotten up, but that would depend altogether upon the moneys the committee may finally have from the sources on which they have drawn.

Mr. HALE. Will not the gentleman hold up one of them so that Senators may see it?

Mr. PENDLETON. I will hold up one of them, and read it also, for the delectation of my friend from Maine. Here it is in full:

HEADQUARTERS OF THE
REPUBLICAN CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE, 1882,
520 THIRTEENTH STREET, NORTHWEST,
Washington, D. C., May 15, 1882.

SIR: This committee is organized for the protection of the interests of the Republican party in each of the Congressional districts of the Union. In order that it may prepare, print, and circulate suitable documents illustrating the issues which distinguish the Republican party from any other and may meet all proper expenses incident to the campaign, the committee feels authorized to apply to all citizens whose principles or interests are involved in the struggle. Under the circumstances in which the country finds itself placed, the committee believes that you will esteem it both a privilege and a pleasure to make to its fund a contribution, which it is hoped may not be less than $ ——. The committee is authorized to state that such voluntary contribution from persons employed in the service of the United States will not be objected to in any official quarter.

The labors of the committee will affect the result of the Presidential election in 1884 as well as the Congressional struggle; and it may therefore reasonably hope to have the sympathy and assistance of all who look with dread upon the possibility of the restoration of the Democratic party to the control of the Government.

Please make prompt and favorable response to this letter by bank-check or draft or postal money-order, payable to the order of JAY A. HUBBELL, acting treasurer, P. O. lock-box 589, Washington, D. C.

By order of the committee.

D. B. HENDERSON, Secretary.

As far as I have seen, all of these circulars are in exactly the same language, except that a blank was left in each originally to be filled by the amount which a certain specified proportion of the salary received would reach. Now, sir, in order that there may be no charge of unfair dealing with this committee and its circular, I have read to the Senate every word of it, and I ask the Senate to consider it a little in detail.

The committee is organized for the protection of the interests of the Republican party in each of the Congressional districts of the Union.

Party from beginning to end, the country nowhere alluded to—"the interests of the Republican party in each of the Congressional districts."

In order that it may prepare, print, and circulate suitable documents illustrating the issues which distinguish the Republican party from any other, and may meet all proper expenses incident to the campaign the committee feels authorized—

"Feels authorized!" What necessity is there to have authority to invite gentlemen who desire to make a voluntary contribution to a political fund? What is the necessity for any authority for an invitation of that kind?

"Authorized!" By whom authorized; for what purpose authorized? To apply for contributions to the Republican expense fund! Apply to whom? Apply to "all those whose interests are involved in this struggle."

The committee discriminates very closely between those whose principles lead them to desire the success of the Republican party and those whose interests are involved in the struggle; those whose principles or interests induce them to take an interest in this struggle. Who are they, Mr. President? Who are interested beyond what their principles require in the success of the Republican party in the coming campaign? Certainly the officers; the office-holders; those who enjoy the powers and emoluments of office; those who are in possession of the political power and the moneyed emolument at the disposal of the party. When application is to be made for authority to apply to these officers for a money contribution who is it that can give the authority to make the application? Manifestly those who have the power of appointment and dismissal; manifestly those who can say to these men whose offices are involved, "contribute to the success of this party or the power of appointment and dismissal is hung over your head." I submit to gentlemen on this committee that the paraphrase was entirely unnecessary. I submit that the circumlocution was entirely out of place, and that it would have been much more direct and much more pointed and equally delicate to have said, "we are authorized by those who have the power of appointment and dismissal to say to you whose offices are involved in this struggle that we are authorized to make this application for money to you."

The circular starts out with a declaration on its face, which any man who can read at all can read between the lines: We are authorized by those who hold your places in their hands to apply to you office-holders of the Government to make this contribution because your interests are involved in this struggle.

The circular continues:

Under the circumstances in which the country finds itself placed, the committee believes that you will esteem it both a privilege and a pleasure to make to its fund a contribution.

"A privilege and a pleasure!" Indeed, a blessed privilege! an exquisite pleasure! These officers, forsooth, would never have had the opportunity of enjoying this privilege and pleasure if this committee had not given them the opportunity and the method; the opportunity in the sinking circumstances of the fortunes of the Republican party, and the method by contributions to the committee! Knowing that these office-holders could not have enjoyed this privilege and pleasure except for its invitation; knowing that as soon as they heard of it, they would be ready and willing, nay, eager and anxious, to embrace the opportunity; fearing lest in a moment of enthusiasm and desire, these office-holders might indulge to excess in the enjoyment of the pleasure and privilege; fearing lest on the other hand an ascetic self-denial might restrain them below the bounds of legal moderation, this committee informs them that, in its judgment, it would be about right that clerks having $900 a year should indulge in this enjoyment to the amount of $20 worth. Then fearing that might be a damper upon their ardor, the committee express the hope that the contribution shall not be less than the amount suggested by the committee, to wit, $20.

The committee is authorized to state that such voluntary contribution—

"Voluntary contribution!" Voluntary as the contribution the traveler makes to the pocket of the highwayman when commanded to stop and hold up his hands; voluntary as the contribution which the man of the world makes to the harvest of the Great Reaper when he puts in his scythe—voluntary contribution from persons employed in the service of the United States will not be objected to in any official quarter.

Mr. President, is a voluntary contribution objected to anywhere? And does it need any close discrimination as to that passage to see that it means that, while contributions will not be objected to in any official quarter, a refusal to make the contribution will meet with the condemnation of all official quarters?

The labors of the committee will affect the result of the Presidential election in 1884, as well as the Congressional struggle; and it may therefore reasonably hope to have the sympathy and assistance of all who look with dread upon the possibility of the restoration of the Democratic party to the control of the Government.

"With dread." Who look with dread upon it? What sensible man in this country looks with dread upon it? The people of the country do not look with dread, the material interests of the country do not look with dread, the patriotism of the country does not look with dread, for at the last two Presidential elections the people of this country have been almost equally divided in numbers upon the question as to which party better deserves success. In the Presidential election before the last it is an undisputed fact that a numerical majority of the people of the United States did actually vote to restore the Democratic party to power.

"We appeal to you for sympathy and assistance, and we hope you will make prompt and favorable response to this letter." How? By expressions of confidence? By telling us the political necessities of your neighborhood? By going forth as an apostle to demonstrate to the people the excellence of the principles of the Republican party? No, sir; none of such sympathy we want. It is your assistance which we hope you will promptly send to us in the shape of "a bank-check, or draft, or postal money-order," payable to the treasurer of this committee.

Now, Mr. President, I will not insult the Senate by undertaking to prove to it that this is no invitation for a voluntary contribution. I will not waste its time by showing that it is a demand for a specific sum of money, levied according to a rule, accompanied by a promise and a threat. "Your purse or your official life" is the alternative offered; or to use the language of President Garfield in describing a circular almost identical in terms with this, "It is a circular sent to the employés of the Government upon the distinct understanding that if they fail to make return according to the demand, in check or postal money-order, others will be found to take their places who will receive their salaries and pay up the assessment."

Mr. President, to whom has the circular been sent? I venture to say here upon this floor, and I speak it upon information which challenges my belief, that this circular has been sent out to every person whose name can be found on any of the rolls of employés of the Government, however remote they may be from the source of power itself. The circular has been sent to the Boston custom-house—seven hundred copies of it—and a demand made for an aggregate of $15,000. It has been sent to the armory at Springfield, and an assessment of $18 been made upon each armorer in that institution. It has been sent to the great offices in New York, the post-office and the custom-house, and the collector's office, and the various institutions connected with the Government there. These offices have won exceptional credit by reason of their freedom from the debasing arts of political assessments, and yet are to be again plunged into the mire from which they so laboriously have emerged. It has been sent out to employés at Chicago, and assessments made there of the exact sum of $9.30. How considerately accurate in computation! It has been sent to every postmaster in the country; at least I have returns from almost every State east of Nevada. It has been sent to the men engaged upon the works on the Ohio River at Marietta, and $18 has been assessed and demanded of men who day by day for their daily wages cut stone in making the dam. It has been sent to every employé in the Departments in Washington, every clerk, and they have been assessed in various amounts from $18 to $50. It has been sent to men who are engaged in daily labor on the Capitol grounds, digging up and beautifying these grounds, and $6 has been assessed upon each of them. It has been sent to the boys in the Printing Office, to whom you pay only a dollar per day and furlough them without pay, and $7 has been demanded from each of them. It has been sent to enlisted men in the Army, and an assessment of $18 made upon men who are paid from the Army appropriation bill. Wherever a name can be found upon the pay-roll of the Government for any amount, great or small, this circular has been sent, or is now being sent.

I said it had been sent to every clerk in all these Departments. Why, sir, it has been sent to those unfortunate ladies whom the exigencies of life now compel to support a family off the pittance earned painfully by them, which would scarcely have sufficed to dispense their yearly charity in other days. It has been sent to the women who scrub out the Departments in this city, whose poverty is so great that when they leave for their daily work they are obliged to lock up in their close and fetid rooms the infant children who cannot be allowed to wander in danger in the streets. It has been sent to the employés of the Senate, and men have been required to pay $30 in order that they may hold their places.

Nay, more, Mr. President, it has been sent, at least in the other House, and possibly in this, to the little pages, bright, intelligent, active little fellows who do the bidding of members there and here. I imagine I can see this grave committee with this circular in their hands going to one of these little pages and urging him by his appreciation of the emergencies of the country, by his appreciation of the excellence of Republican practices, by his dread of the restoration of the Democratic party to power, to make his contribution of $9 in order to avert such a terrible calamity.

Mr. President, if this were not a sad scene of political degeneracy and partisan tyranny it would be in many of its aspects a broad farce.

I have no fitting words in which to express my apprehension of the degradation and danger of this whole system, of which this is one of the most dangerous outgrowths. It demoralizes and breaks down every man connected with it, those who give and those who take alike. Among the names on this circular are some of our own cherished associates and members, men of the other House also who stand high in the estimation of their party and their country. They are important factors in wielding the political destinies not only of their party but of their country, honorable, upright, excellent gentlemen to whom we would willingly commit, and do commit our honor, and if necessary would commit our lives, men who could not be forced even by torture to go themselves and with this circular in their hand to make application to these persons to whom it is sent; men who could not be induced to do it; who would feel it to be a personal dishonor to do it. Yet together they combine and put in operation this machine which has no heart to be touched, no body to be punished, no soul to be damned, to visit the houses of the widow and the fatherless, and extract from them for political partisan purposes a large proportion of their hard earnings.

It degrades the men to whom it is sent. What sense of self-respect can be left to the man who feels himself compelled to submit to this extortion which his honest judgment abhors and which his penury rejects, and yet is obliged with a hypocritical smile to pretend that it is a voluntary contribution? What faithful, honest personal service in office can a man render when he feels that upon his very best service is put this badge of servitude? How can he admire our institutions with his whole heart as he ought and devote himself absolutely to the duties of an office when he is made to buy with money that office which he knows, and everybody knows, is a public trust involving duties to the public? What discipline can there be in a system when all above him and all below him are bound together by the consciousness of this common degradation? The galley slaves are chained together; and their proximity making them conscious of the common infamy, the common degradation and the common punishment leads them to hate and despise and dread and suspect and injure each other.

Mr. President, this system is a great wrong to the people. A fair day's work and a fair day's pay is common honesty imported into our Government. If these employés can have extracted and abstracted from their salary 2 or 4 or 10 per cent., and yet sufficient remuneration is left to them, then I say the deduction should be made directly from their salary and be left in the Treasury.

I will not speak of what this system is, if against their interest, against their will, against their moneyed capacity, these men are compelled to submit to contributions which are extracted out of the suffering of themselves and their families. When I see that this system tends to such degradation, such demoralization, to the breaking down of our civil administration, the destruction of the instinct of patriotism in our country, I declare upon my conscience I believe it would be better for the country, better for the service, better for the people, if a felonious hand were put into the Treasury of the United States and this money were abstracted for this purpose and a clean thing were made of it by charging it up to "soap."

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator from Ohio know that about the time he was running for Vice-President, or a little before that, the method followed in the Departments by the Democratic party was that the money was retained by the disbursing officers of the Departments and never paid to the employés, but taken directly from the disbursing officers and made a political fund?

Mr. PENDLETON. No, sir; I do not know it. I do not believe it. I deny it ever was done.

Mr. HALE. I will show the Senator.

Mr. PENDLETON. When the gentleman takes the floor I challenge him to show that at any time since I have been in public life and a candidate for public office the Democratic party has been in a position to go into the Departments of this Government at Washington and obtain money contributions.

Mr. HALE. The Senator will bear in mind that I said about the time he was running for the Vice-Presidency or before that, and not long before either.

Mr. PENDLETON. I have already said that I deny the fact and require the proof of that statement.

Now, Mr. President, how are we met when we make this arraignment of this practice of the party in power? One gentleman who signs himself "assistant attorney-general," with a great deal of ostentatious gasconade, says that he defies and spits upon the enactment which is in existence because it is no law, for he has examined carefully the Constitution of the United States and does not find any clause which authorizes Congress to prohibit voluntary contributions for lawful objects. Why, sir, the man who in the face of that circular can talk about voluntary contributions, is either entirely ignorant of the force of language or of the substance of things; and in either alternative discussion with him would be useless.

The gentleman whose name is signed to the circular as the acting treasurer of the committee vaunts himself that he has broken no law. Listen to his defense. The law declares:

That all executive officers or employés of the United States not appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, are prohibited from requesting, giving to, or receiving from, any other officer or employé of the Government any money or property, or other thing of value, for political purposes.

He says "I have committed no crime, I have not violated the law, because I am not an officer or employé of the Government." Putting himself upon a decision made in the last century that a Senator of the United States was not liable to impeachment, he says "I am not liable to this law, because I am a member of Congress, and not an officer or employé of the Government. If I were a door-keeper, or a clerk, or a messenger, I would be liable under the statute. As a member of the House of Representatives I am not."

Mr. President, that question is to be taken into the courts. I will not anticipate their decision. I say to the gentleman who signs this circular that before he gets through he will find if he has not landed some of these men in the penitentiary he has drawn them perilously near to the verge of a criminal conviction.

But if he is right, if he is not guilty of a technical offense because he happens not to be in technical language an officer of the Government of the United States, then what is his defense? It is this: "I have done the thing denounced in this law; I have invited other people to do the thing denounced in this law; I admit the moral wrong of this transaction; I admit the evil of the practice which the Congress of the United States has denounced; but I plead that I cannot be convicted because, though I am a member of Congress, I am not in technical language an officer of the Government." Lawyers are sitting all around me. They are here in great numbers. I ask them if they have never seen a man on trial for perjury who admitted his falsehood, admitted his oath, but escaped punishment on the ground either that the officer had not the authority to administer the oath, or that the affidavit was not one taken in pursuance of a requirement of the law? The people of the country will be quite astonished when they hear that a member of Congress who receives out of the public Treasury $5,000 a year is not an officer of this Government; and if they approve this section of the law they will speedily correct it so as to involve him also, if indeed now, which I doubt very much, he can escape conviction.

My friend from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] thought it very well to belittle this whole subject by introducing an amendment instructing the committee to inquire what legislation was necessary to prevent people from making voluntary contributions. The Senator is not in his seat and I will leave that suggestion to be discussed at some other time.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] has invented a new defense to the charge that I am making against his party. He confesses and avoids. He confesses the crime and avoids the punishment. He says even if we did all this thing, we plead in bar, not of public condemnation, for we admit the facts, but in bar of punishment non-obstante veredicto that the Democratic party in its time has been guilty of like practices. I think my friend from Maine [Mr. HALE] has imitated that plea of the Senator from Michigan in the interruption which he made just now to my remarks.

Mr. CONGER rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio give way?

Mr. PENDLETON. Certainly.

Mr. CONGER. I suppose the Senator's disposition is strong enough to stand on his own proposition and assertions, without dragging in here assertions in regard to me which have no foundation in fact, and remarks I made which never were intended for any such purpose.

Mr. PENDLETON. If I have misrepresented the Senator——

Mr. CONGER. I desire to say that while I do not care what the Senator says in advance in regard to me—for I will take care of that when my time comes—it would perhaps be as well and as courteous not to assign to me any reasons or any statements which I have not in any sense made here or anywhere else.

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. President, I am perfectly ready to withdraw, if I may, any remark which the gentleman thinks was not warranted by the facts, or warranted by the intention he had in uttering the sentence upon which I based my remark; but when this resolution was offered, or the next day, it having been objected to when I called it up, the Senator from Michigan in his place, and with a number of books before him, said he wanted when the discussion came on to show the animus of those who were suggesting and pushing forward this resolution by contrasting the course of the Republican party with what the Democratic party did in the days of its power.

Mr. CONGER. In so far the gentleman is wrong again. I wish I could at least have him confine his remarks to what I did say. I was objecting to the then consideration of the subject under the five-minute rule. I said then, as I am prepared to say at any time, that it opened a question requiring more than five minutes and more than an hour, and I said then that I had before me the documents to show that this practice had been in existence when the Senator himself was a member of Congress, and when his party had the power to make these assessments, and when the Senator and the President and the principal leading men of his party met on the Sabbath day to declare who should be turned out of office for not complying with the requirements of their party in paying assessments. I referred to that for the sole purpose of having more time.

Mr. PENDLETON. The gentleman has had three weeks' time, and I hope he will have just as much time on the floor of the Senate as he desires.

Mr. CONGER. But the gentleman cannot misrepresent what I said——

Mr. PENDLETON. I have not.

Mr. CONGER. He should not misrepresent what I said in asking for more time as an expression of opinion which I may have made then.

Mr. PENDLETON. The remarks of the Senator were exactly these. I quote from the RECORD the debate of June 6:

Mr. CONGER. Understanding that this resolution would be proposed, I have been looking up the history of Democratic experience on that matter, and I have several volumes which I wish to present to the Senate, and I desire more time than you will allow me to show the custom under Democratic rule, when the Senator from Ohio was at the head of affairs in Congress.

I submit that I have done the Senator no injustice at all, and I repeat that now in what he proposes to say he intends to appeal against punishment for himself and his party by contrasting or comparing its course, whichever he pleases, with the course of the Democratic party when it was in power. I do not know what the gentleman may be able to find in the past history of the Democratic party subject either to his reprobation or mine. I do know that whatever he may be able to find, he will find nothing so small and petty in its details and so widespread in all its ramifications as this conspiracy against the purity of the ballot-box and the freedom of election. The history of the Democratic party is before the country. It is a long and glorious history. For more than one-half of this century which is passing away it held possession of the powers of this Government, and illustrated the beneficence of its policy by an unexampled purity of administration. If he shall be able in the course of that long and illustrious career to find that either in its organization or its prominent men it has at times fallen into evil practices, I can tell him that the Democratic party has been subjected to discipline. I thank God it has come out of that discipline purified and renewed and strengthened, and is now ready to take possession of the powers of this Government again, and with a higher inspiration, a stronger courage, a purer faith, to apply its humane philosophy to the conduct of public affairs, and by the vigor and the patriotism and the purity of its administration to eclipse even the glories of its earlier years.

Justified by example! "The woman beguiled me and I did eat." It was a bad excuse in the olden days, and it has gotten to be much worse ever since. I can tell the Senator now, in anticipation of whatever he may have to say, that it will be a vain thing for him to seek to justify the evil practices of the Republican party under any examples, however illustrious they may be.

Have we not been told, are we not told constantly, that this Republican party is the party of God and morality in the country? Has not the Senator declared, with a seriousness of tone and sincerity of manner that leaves no room to doubt his conviction of the truth, that it is the best and purest party that has ever existed in this Government. Why, sir, I have read the description of a such party as this: "But all their works they do for to be seen of men; they make broad their phylacterics, and enlarge the borders of their garments; and love the uppermost rooms at feasts and the chief seats in the synagogues; and greetings in the markets, and to be called of men 'Rabbi, Rabbi.'" And if, after making all these professions of purity and excellence, when you happen through the flimsy device to be caught in evil practices, you seek to screen yourselves from the consequences behind the examples of others, there will be denounced against you that terrible anathema, "Woe unto you * * * hypocrites, for ye devour widows' houses, and for a pretense make long prayer; therefore ye shall receive the greater damnation."

Mr. President, the men of our race and language have always been tenacious of the purity of the civil service of their government. Even as our fathers emerged from the ages which we are in the habit of calling dark, they began to require that the purity of the civil service should be the characteristic of their Kings as well as of their Commons. Six hundred and fifty and more years ago King John in the Magna Charta was compelled to declare:

We will not make any justiciars, constables, sheriffs or bailiffs, but of such as are knowing in the law of the realm, and are disposed duly to observe it.

Nearly a hundred years afterward, in the time of Richard II in 1388, the Commons passed a statute—

That the chancellor, treasurer, &c., the justices of the one bench, and of the other, &c., and all other that shall be called to ordain, name, or make justices of peace, sheriffs, escheators, customs, comptrollers, or any other officer or minister of the king, shall be firmly sworn that they shall not ordain, name, or make justice of the peace, sheriff, escheator, customer, comptroller, nor other officer or minister of the king for any gift or brocage, favor, or affection; nor that none which pursueth, by him or other, privily or openly, to be in any manner office, shall be put in the same office or in any other; but that they shall make all such officers and ministers of the best and most lawful men, and sufficient to their estimation and knowledge.

Lord Coke says that that was—

A law worthy to be written in LETTERS OF GOLD, but more worthy to be put in due execution.

A few years passed on and Edward IV, pressed by his necessities, commenced to levy "benevolence" upon the commons of England, which the people very turbulently, as he thought, called "malevolence," and thereupon, in the first year of Richard III, the bloody monster as he was called, the exactions were prohibited. Lord Coke mentions how "the exaction under the good name of benevolence," begun in 12 Edward IV, came to be so that "many of the people did much grudge at it and called it a malevolence" and he refers to 1 Richard III, wherein the commons recite:

"That 'the commons of this realm, by new and unlawful inventions and inordinate covetise against the law of this realm, have been put to great thraldom and importable charges and exactions, and in especial by a new imposition named a benevolence, whereby divers years, the subjects and commons of this realm, against their wills and freedom, have paid great sums of money'—

After which, and other recitals, it is ordained—

"That his subjects and the commonalty of this his realm, from henceforth in no wise be charged by none such charge (exaction) or imposition called benevolence, nor by such like charge; and that such exactions called benevolences afore this time taken be take for no example to make such or any like charge of any his said subjects of this realm hereafter, but it be damned and annulled forever."

And Lord Coke, speaking of this very statute, 1 Richard III, says that:

Of the acts of Richard the Third one of the wisest was that of 1 Ric. III., ch. 2, "an act to free the subjects from benevolences!" But he did not adhere to it. There is mention of letters sent by him exacting these benevolences and specifying the sum which each person was required to give. It is stated that "this" was "a fatal blow at what remained of his popularity."

History repeats itself. Benevolences exacted for his private purposes by the king which the people called malevolences, and which were rejected and repudiated by the Commons. Richard seemed to favor the rejection, but he sent out circulars even in those days to his good subjects, and specified in those circulars the amount of money which he required each of them to pay. Behold the example which this committee has followed!

Mr. President, to these principles embodied in Magna Charta, embodied in these statutes, the people of our race have always been true. Sometimes they have wandered, sometimes they have straggled from the paths, but they have speedily returned to them, and in their return they have always been led in England by the Commons, and in this country by the Democratic party. To-day the time has come when they shall be led again to appreciate the beneficence of a pure civil administration. To-day the Democratic party is putting itself at the head of that return. Civil service reform is writ on its escutcheon and emblazoned on its banner. By its present strength, and in order to perfect it, the Democratic party will sooner or later come into power. I say to Senators on the other side of the Chamber that the sooner it comes into power the better it will be for them and for the country. The change may for a moment wound their susceptibilities, but it will advantage their prosperity and their liberties. When that time does come, when we shall take possession of this Government, when we shall put in the high places of power our worthiest and best, the President of the United States, the chief of the state, under the people the source and fountain of honors and powers in this country, will be able to say to all as Van Artevelde said in response to Vauclaire who was thanking him for his promotion:

Nay! say no more.
You owe me nothing; what I have to give
Is held in trust, and parted with for service;
Value received is writ on my commissions;
Nor would I thank the man that should thank me
For aught as given him gratis. * * *
* * * *
Supremacy of merit, the sole means
And broad highway to power. * * *
* * meritoriously administer'd
While all its instruments from first to last,
The tools of state, for service high or low,
* * * chosen for their aptness to those ends
Which Virtue meditates.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will the Senator allow me a moment before he proceeds? I want to have read the resolution which I offered on the same subject so that it may be considered at the same time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine give way?

Mr. VAN WYCK. It is on the same subject-matter, only more specific in its directions to the committee to inquire.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to the Senator having it read.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I want it read and acted on at the same time with the resolution of the Senator from Ohio.

The Acting Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. VAN WYCK June 5, 1882, as follows:

Whereas printed circulars are being sent to officers, clerks, and employés in the United States service, stating among other things:

"Under the circumstances in which the country finds itself placed, the committee believes that you will esteem it both a privilege and a pleasure to make to its fund a contribution, which it is hoped may not be less than * * *

"The committee is authorized to state that such voluntary contributions from persons employed in the service of the United States will not be objected to in any official quarter * * *

"Please make prompt and favorable response to this letter by bank check, or draft, or postal money order, payable, &c.;"

Whereas Congress, in the year 1876, enacted that no such contributions should be solicited or collected by one officer from another, substantially denouncing the practice of such assessments and contributions: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment be directed to make full investigation, and report whether such notices are served upon persons in the naval and military as well as the civil service; what amount would be realized by this assessment of 2 per cent. on the annual salary of persons in the United States Service; what additional legislation is necessary to protect persons employed in the service of the United States from such assessments or contributions; whether the payment by any person in the United States service on the demand in such printed notice will not be substantially a violation of the statute referred to; also by what authority the printed notice alleges that such assessments "will not be objected to in any official quarter."

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, at the request of the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON,] I yield to him such time as he may desire, and after that I shall be glad, with the leave of the Senate, to go on for no very long time, but following the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. That is after two o'clock.

Mr. HALE. After two o'clock to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless the Senate, by a majority vote, decide otherwise, discussion on the resolution ceases at two o'clock.

Mr. HALE. The request I make is that, as the debate has been opened by the Senator from Ohio, after the Senator from Iowa has concluded, and after two o'clock, I may be allowed to reply to the Senator from Ohio briefly, and have the matter done with to-day.

Mr. PENDLETON. I hope that request will be granted by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When two o'clock comes the Senate will have to decide that question.

Mr. HOAR. I certainly do not wish to object to anything which is for the convenience of the Senator from Maine; but if this resolution is to go on from day to day hereafter, I should object to its cutting out both orders of business. It will cut out the bankruptcy bill and the Presidential succession bill, as well as the Anthony rule. To the Senator's request that he may be permitted to address the Senate to-day after two o'clock if he prefers, I make no objection, with the understanding, however, that the regular order is to be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay the regular order before the Senate at two o'clock, and if the Senator from Maine replies to-day after that hour it must be by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I so understand. I am willing to leave that with the Senate when the time comes.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I only desire to occupy a few moments on this resolution at this time. I rise chiefly to correct some misapprehensions, and grave misapprehensions, that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] seems to have fallen into, and upon which misapprehensions he has based his remarks to a very great extent. This circular, I need not argue, is in its essence and in its spirit a voluntary circular. It has none of the elements of compulsion in it, upon which the Senator from Ohio has made his comments. The circular which was read by the Senator from Ohio, I will say to him, is an exact copy of the circular that was printed and circulated by the Republican Congressional national committee in 1880, save and except that "1880" is stricken out and "1884" inserted. The circular of 1880 alluded to the Presidential election of that year, and this circular makes the same allusion to the Presidential election of 1884.

The circular of 1880 was issued by the then Congressional committee of the Republican party. It was issued after consideration by the members of the committee, and after consultation with the gentlemen who then controlled the various Executive Departments of this Government. It was well known at the time that President Hayes objected to what were known as political assessments, and the Congressional committee did not undertake to make political assessments in any sense; and I want to proclaim now that this is not and is not intended to be a political assessment, and every man who holds office or is in public employment is just as much at liberty, if he so chooses, to decline to make this contribution as any citizen of the Senator's State is at liberty to decline if he does not see proper to make the contribution voluntarily.

Mr. BECK. I should like to ask one question for the benefit of some poor people. Do you believe they will be allowed to retain the positions they now hold if they fail to contribute? I should like to know that.

Mr. ALLISON. I thank the Senator from Kentucky for asking me that question. I was coming to that in a moment.

Mr. BECK. Several could not retain their places after 1880 that refused, I know.

Mr. ALLISON. In 1880, as I said, this identical circular was issued. A Presidential campaign of great interest to the American people was then going forward, and a struggle was being made then for the control of the House of Representatives by the two great contending parties in this country. This circular was sent then, as now, to employés of the Government and to men who were not employés of the Government. It was sent to persons who were supposed to be willing to contribute to the success of the Republican party.

I now come to give the answer to the Senator from Kentucky, and I want him to listen to what I say. To that circular in 1880 only 11,514 affirmative responses were made of the vast number of employés of the United States who are scattered throughout its borders. Of the 100,000 people in public employment only a little more than one-tenth responded affirmatively; and I now stand in my place and ask the Senator from Kentucky or the Senator from Ohio to name one single office-holder who failed to contribute in 1880 who was removed from office for that cause? Of the 100,000 public employés, only a little over 11,000 contributed in 1880, and I believe that not one man has ever been disturbed in his place because he did not respond favorably to that circular. So that so far from this being a compulsory circular, it is simply a voluntary one; and that was all the statement that I intended to make, or that I propose to make to-day in reference to this matter.

Being a member of this committee, and, to the extent of membership, being responsible for its action, I wish to say as such member that I regard this circular of 1880 and this circular of 1882 as simply a request for a voluntary contribution, and to my belief there has never been a man removed from place because he did not respond to it favorably, and in my belief no man will be disturbed hereafter if he fails for any cause to respond favorably to this circular.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the Senator from Iowa a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of two o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. No. 1382) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. JOHN BAILEY, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 5559) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WALKER. I move to lay aside the pending order and take up Senate bill No. 192, to quiet title to certain lands in the Upper Peninsula of Michigan.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS,] who has charge of the unfinished business, by note to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] said he would not be here to-day.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] be allowed to proceed with his remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. WALKER.]

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senate decide to allow the Senator from Iowa to proceed, that decides the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. HOAR. I take, for one, great interest in the measure which is now the regular order, the bankruptcy bill, and the Senator from Kansas announced his intention to address the Senate in reply to some remarks I made in regard to an amendment which I had the honor of offering to that bill. Now, if the motion of the Senator from Arkansas should prevail, that bill would be absolutely displaced.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not do that. The Senator from Arkansas has moved that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. HOAR. There is no such motion known to the parliamentary methods of this body.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is done every day, whether it is known or not.

Mr. HOAR. I believe I have the floor, Mr. President, and I prefer to state my proposition in my own way. I desire that the Senate shall unanimously consent that the bankruptcy bill shall be informally laid aside. Then the Senate can permit my friend from Maine to proceed, and can permit the measure of the Senator from Arkansas to be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is what the Senator moved: that the bankruptcy bill be informally laid aside. If there is any objection to its being informally laid aside, it cannot be done, of course.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Reporter to read the motion as stated by the Senator from Arkansas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to lay aside the pending order informally, to proceed with the consideration of the bill (S. No. 192) to quiet title to certain lands in the Upper Peninsula of Michigan.

Mr. HOAR. The Chair was totally mistaken in his understanding of the motion, as I find by referring to the Reporter's notes.

Mr. CONGER. What is the purpose?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. With a view of the bill being considered to-day.

Mr. CONGER. That is a bill which when taken up will require long and careful consideration, and will occupy the Senate several hours. It is a controverted matter, which is of no earthly consequence to the public as to when it gets precedence, and I hope that it will not be taken up to-day.

Mr. BECK. The resolution of the Senator from Ohio is certainly a very important one; and as the bankruptcy bill cannot be proceeded with to-day, I think the Senate cannot employ its time better than by allowing the Senator from Iowa to close his remarks and the Senator from Maine to continue the debate, and let us see if we cannot dispose of the resolution now up, introduced by the Senator from Ohio. I venture to remark now that from this time I shall endeavor as far as one Senator can to have the Calendar called. From the 19th of April up to the present time there has not been a case that has been reported favorably on the Calendar called unless it was by an unseemly scramble.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator means that no case reported since that day has been considered.

Mr. BECK. The case that was last reached on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 386) for the relief of Mrs. Eliza E. Hebert, which was reported on the 19th of April, now over two months since. Not a case reported since then has been reached except by a scramble. I shall hereafter insist, as far as I can, not seeking to offend any Senator, that the Calendar shall be regularly called and the cases reported favorably considered; and let us devote to-day, now that the Senator from Iowa has the floor and the Senator from Maine is ready to speak, to the consideration of the question introduced by the Senator from Ohio, and let the Michigan case, which will take a long time, take its chances on another day. I have no objection to its being heard, but I do think we ought to go on with this resolution now. We ought to have gone on with the bankrupt bill if the Senator from Kansas was here, but he not being here let it be suspended temporarily by unanimous consent, and let this resolution be considered, so that the Calendar may not be interfered with hereafter.

Mr. WALKER. I made the motion from no disposition to supersede the bankruptcy bill at this time; but the bill which I now ask to have considered is one that was reported in March, and a similar bill was reported at the last session favorably by the Committee on Public Lands. It was reached in April last, the 26th of April, and it was then passed over in order to give Senators time to look into it and understand its meaning, and it has been passed over time and again. Now we ask that it may be considered as a matter of importance, importance to all parties claiming title to these lands, and I hope it may now be considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ALLISON. I trust the Senator from Arkansas will not interpose that motion, cutting the Senator from Maine from the floor to briefly reply to the Senator from Ohio, and also relieving me of the little remnant of remarks I intended to make before the resolution was passed over.

Mr. WALKER. I certainly shall not do so if I can have the bill taken up afterward.

Mr. ALLISON. Why not leave that question open until we dispose of the matter now under consideration?

Mr. WALKER. For that time I will yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Chair submit to the Senate a request for unanimous consent that the bankruptcy bill be temporarily laid aside until to-morrow?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there unanimous consent that the bankruptcy bill be temporarily laid aside in order to take up the bill indicated by the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HOAR. No; that was not the request.

Mr. ALLISON. That cannot be done.

Mr. HOAR. My request is for unanimous consent that the bankruptcy bill be temporarily laid aside until to-morrow. My expectation is that the Senate then will consent to the brief speech of my friend from Maine, and that after that they will then also consent to the request of the Senator from Arkansas; but I did not couple that with my request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there unanimous consent that the bankruptcy bill be postponed until to-morrow? Is that the request of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HOAR. Temporarily laid aside until to-morrow, remaining the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That consent the Chair supposed was given when he mentioned that the Senator from Kansas was not here to go on with it, and that is considered as done. Now the next question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Iowa that if the motion of the Senator from Arkansas prevails it can be arranged so that this debate can go on if it is desired.

Mr. ALLISON. I have but a word more to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas agree to the suggestion?

Mr. WALKER. If it is the understanding that the bill is to be taken up at the conclusion of the debate I yield.

Mr. BECK. There is no understanding about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is whether the bill shall be taken up.

Mr. WALKER. Then I insist on a vote upon my motion.

Mr. ALLISON. Pending that motion I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. HARRIS. What is the motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion now is to take up the bill indicated by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. HARRIS. That means to postpone the consideration of the bankruptcy bill, undoubtedly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That has been postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Pending that motion I ask unanimous consent for the Senator from Iowa to proceed.

Mr. ALLISON. I thank the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And the Senator from Maine also.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas to proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. ALLISON. That is the motion, is it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. Pending that motion I ask that the sense of the Senate be taken on the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. CONGER. Let us have that motion stated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. While the motion of the Senator from Arkansas is pending, I ask that these gentlemen be allowed to be heard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas to take up the bill indicated by him.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I should like to inquire what the effect of an affirmative vote on that motion will be?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That bill will be considered during the day. The bankruptcy bill is the regular order for to-morrow, and the Chair will lay it before the Senate before adjournment to-day. The motion, if adopted, will keep the bill of the Senator from Arkansas before the Senate during the day. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. FERRY. I desire to appeal to the Senator from Arkansas. The bill he wishes to call up I understand comes from the Committee on Public Lands. It is a bill which I introduced in December and which was reported from the committee in March. It was reached on the Calendar in April and was laid aside at the instance of my colleague. Now the Senator has availed himself of the first opportunity, inasmuch as the bankruptcy bill has been laid aside, to call it up. The Senator from Iowa desires to reply on the resolution that was submitted by the Senator from Ohio and on which the latter has submitted remarks at length.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Maine desires to reply. I do not.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator from Maine also desires to reply. I hope the Senator from Arkansas will withdraw his proposition to take up this measure now and wait until these two Senators have spoken upon the resolution, and then I think the Chair will entertain the motion of the Senator from Arkansas to take up the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I trust the Senator from Arkansas will do that, and then by general consent the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Maine will be allowed to proceed.

Mr. WALKER. I accede to that suggestion, and withdraw the motion.

Mr. CONGER. I do not want the motion withdrawn on any understanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is withdrawn. Is the understanding of the Senate that the resolution of the Senator from Ohio shall be continued until the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Maine shall be heard? ["Yes."]

Mr. CONGER. I do not wish that motion withdrawn on any understanding that the bill is to be taken up to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no understanding on the part of the Chair. Before the debate is resumed the Chair will take occasion to lay before the Senate a resolution from the House of Representatives.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

The Acting Secretary read the following resolution of the House of Representatives:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives declare their respective Houses adjourned sine die at twelve o'clock meridian on the 10th day of July, 1882.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to refer that resolution to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BECK. I object to that reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it should go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BECK. I shall insist that the resolution shall go to the Committee on Appropriations, and that it shall not be acted upon until all the appropriation bills are sent to us from the House and action can be had upon them here. The sundry civil bill has not yet been reported to the House of Representatives; the naval appropriation bill has not been considered there; the legislative, executive, and judicial bill has not been considered by this body; the deficiency bill has not yet been considered by the Committee on Appropriations of this body; the pension bill has not yet been considered; the river and harbor bill has not yet been seen by the body.

At this point a message in writing was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the reference of this resolution excites debate, the Chair will withdraw it.

Mr. BECK. If I am entitled to the floor, I desire to be heard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But it interferes with the other gentlemen who are entitled to be heard. The Chair will withdraw it and submit it after they have gotten through.

Mr. BECK. I cannot be taken from the floor, even by the President of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, sir; the Senator will proceed.

Mr. BECK. The river and harbor bill has not yet been presented to the Senate. That is the state of the business. It is now the 26th day of June. Congress met on the 5th of December. It has always been assumed that the Senate and the House ought at least to have each of them an opportunity to understand the measures of appropriation upon which they were passing. Admitting that the Senate ought not to take so long time to consider the bills as the House does, still it was the old rule of the House, and a good one, that all the appropriation bills ought to be presented to that body within sixty days, and they were required by the rules to be so presented. When they are held back for seven months it is remarkable that we should be told that we must agree to an adjournment within fourteen days of the time that the resolution is sent over to us, when the House itself has not even seen the sundry civil bill, the most important of all, and the bill which contains all matters relating to the public buildings, to the building of new forts, the light-house establishment, in fact an omnibus bill. That has not been reported to the House by its committee; and so the naval appropriation bill that has heretofore been acted upon in February or March is not yet before the House and they have not had a chance to consider it. Under these circumstances I insist that the Appropriations Committee shall have charge of this resolution, and if my vote will do any good as a member of that committee, I will withhold all action on it until they have had an opportunity of considering these important measures.

I see the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] before me. While he was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, on the sundry civil bill I have sat in that committee night after night until the sun was shining before we got through in the morning, and had to meet again at nine o'clock, trying to work up to an adjournment, because the sundry civil bill was held back to that time by a Democratic lower House of Congress, and we had to work in that way in order to endeavor to get away. It is forcing the Senate to act under coercion. Members of the House go away and say there is no quorum; and in view of that contingency we ought to advise them now that this resolution will not be even considered until each appropriation bill has been sent to this body and has been acted on by it and considered by the committees of conference of the respective bodies, so that the appropriation bills can be passed carefully, without sitting night after night, as we shall otherwise have to do, with the thermometer at 95 or 100.

The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill came to us only last week, and the sub-committee of three, as I understand, sat until ten or eleven o'clock at night several nights—the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] knows whether I am right—in order to hurry that through; and on Saturday, while people were assuming that we were idling our time by adjourning from Friday to Monday, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] called us together, as chairman of that committee, at half past nine o'clock, and we sat until half past five, in the most hurried manner possible going over the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, and we had to meet again this morning, and even now we are not entirely satisfied that we have been able to understand it. We have to take time and see that these great appropriations that are being sent to us, important bills, are carefully considered.

What has the Committee on Finance to do with this question? I happen to be a member of that committee. We have surrendered all our authority to a tariff commission; we have confessed ourselves incompetent to do anything in relation to taxation, and a little fraudulent pretense is going on in the other end of the Capitol that there is to be some relief given now so as to please somebody or fool somebody with the idea that some reduction of taxation is to be had, and that makes us rise in our place and ask that the Committee on Finance shall control the question of adjournment, when it has absolutely trifled away the seven months we have been in session, and then confessed its incompetency and called nine men, the best of them less competent than the least competent upon the Committee on Finance, to tell us what we shall do next December.

I deny that the Committee on Finance ought to have anything to do with this resolution. The Committee on Appropriations have been ready and willing and anxious to consider, and consider carefully, the great questions that will prevent adjournment till they are passed on; and I hope the Senator from Iowa will insist that his committee, that is working and that is competent to do its work if it is allowed time to do it, shall not permit the question of adjournment to be determined by a committee that has confessed its incompetency, and confessed it on the 15th day of last December in advance, and invited a new commission to be called to arrogate its powers and to give it information what it should do next December. When the 4th of March comes next, and the question of adjournment is up, then we can refer it to the Committee on Finance, and it will be glad to agree with the House that on the 4th of March we shall adjourn, for its tariff commission will not then have made a report, and two years more will have been given to the gentlemen who are so much benefited by the present condition of affairs.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I really do not see that so much heat is called for on the part of the Senator from Kentucky, to repeat his old tariff speeches here for the fifth, sixth, or seventh time. In relation to this matter, the resolution clearly belongs to the Committee on Finance. It was reported by the Committee on Ways and Means of the House, and the Committee on Finance have always had this subject under their control.

Mr. BECK. They never had.

Mr. MORRILL. There is not any disposition to hurry the Senate to an early adjournment until after all the appropriation bills shall have been completed, but there are measures lying behind the appropriation bills that can be considered only by the Committee on Finance, and it may be that a longer time than what is necessary to pass the appropriation bills will be required. For instance, I suppose the House will determine to-day upon a tax bill; that will come to the Committee on Finance. The bill for the extension of the charters of the banks may be back here with amendments for further consideration.

I trust, therefore, we shall keep up the usage of the Senate. So far as I know since I have been a member of the body the Committee on Finance have had the control of this measure. I do not regard the jurisdiction of it, however, as of any great consequence. The Senator from Kentucky and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations belong to the Committee on Finance, and it will not be hurried until that committee shall have got through with all its work.

Mr. ALLISON. I only have a word to say on this question of reference. I think this resolution should go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BECK. It always has.

Mr. ALLISON. That committee has had control of the question of adjournment for the last eight or ten years in this body. It is manifestly the only committee that can really fix a day of adjournment with certainty, and I trust my friend from Vermont will not insist on sending this resolution to the Committee on Finance.

It is true, as was stated by the Senator from Kentucky, that the Committee on Appropriations are making every endeavor possible to bring the bills rapidly into the Senate. The legislative, executive, and judicial bill only reached the committee last Monday morning in print, and the sub-committee having charge of it sat every day, beginning at nine o'clock in the morning and remaining until twelve or one o'clock each day, and sat every night during last week with the exception of one night until eleven o'clock, and as stated by the Senator from Kentucky, the whole committee spent the entire day of Saturday on the bill. I think the Senate can be assured that every reasonable effort will be made to bring forward the appropriation bills as fast as they come from the House; but it is impossible, I think, for us to agree upon a day of adjournment until we know the exact status of the appropriation bills. Therefore I hope the reference will be made to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GARLAND. It is perfectly evident that the Senate cannot now agree on any time to adjourn, and I am satisfied that no committee can now fix any period when we can vote for an adjournment. I am satisfied further that the Committee on Appropriations have just as much as they can do if they work faithfully. I therefore move to lay the resolution on the table, with a view to take it therefrom at some future time and make proper disposition of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas moves that the resolution lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

FOREST-TREE INSECTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed, for the use of the Department of Agriculture, with necessary illustrations, 2,000 copies of the fifth report of the United States entomological commission, being a special report on the insects affecting forest trees.

ORANGE-TREE CULTURE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed 5,000 copies of a special report from the Department of Agriculture, on insects affecting the orange tree, with the necessary illustrations, 2,500 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,500 for the use of the Senate, and 1,000 for the use of the Department of Agriculture.

ECONOMIC ENTOMOLOGY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed for the use of the Department of Agriculture 1,000 copies of a special report entitled Bibliography of Economic Entomology.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 3825) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a ponton railway bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the mouth of the Upper Iowa River, in the State of Iowa, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. No. 3920) to amend section 4766, title 57, of the Revised Statutes of the United States was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 243) to provide for a deficiency in the appropriations for fees of witnesses in the United States courts for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. ALDRICH, Mr. COKE, (by request,) and Mr. HARRIS submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. No. 6242) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. VOORHEES. I offer two amendments to the sundry civil appropriation bill. These amendments in the form of bills have been reported from the Judiciary Committee of this body and they have passed the House. I move their reference to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. I offer an amendment to the river and harbor bill, appropriating $15,000 for the improvement of the Savannah River above the city of Augusta. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FERRY submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 6244) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

POLITICAL ASSESSMENTS.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. PENDLETON on the 5th instant, in relation to the collection of assessments for political partisan purposes from any employés of the Government in Washington.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I do not mean to take up too much time in replying to the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. PENDLETON,] but there are some things which he has said, there are some impressions that he has conveyed, no doubt honestly, to the Senate and to the public mind upon which I wish to touch. In the first place, I desire to say that as to the circular which has been paraded here, signed by the Secretary of the Republican Congressional committee, with the names of the executive committee at the head, my own included, I have no apology to make. The object and aim of the circular was precisely as stated by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON,] in the direction of a voluntary contribution, sent naturally, as it always has been done, first and foremost to certain employés of the Government. Here is the circular:

[Jay A. Hubbell, chairman; D. B. Henderson, secretary; executive committee—Hon. W. B. Allison, Hon. Eugene Hale, Hon. Nelson W. Aldrich, Hon. Frank Hiscock, Hon. George M. Robeson, Hon. William McKinley, jr., Hon. George R. Davis, Hon. Horatio G. Fisher, Hon. Horace F. Page, Hon. W. H. Calkins, Hon. Thomas Ryan, Hon. Wm. D. Washburn, Hon. L. C. Houk, Hon. R. T. Van Horn, Hon. Orlando Hubbs.]

REPUBLICAN CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE, 1882,
529 THIRTEENTH STREET NORTHWEST,
Washington, D. C., May 15, 1882.

SIR: This committee is organized for the protection of the interests of the Republican party in each of the Congressional districts of the Union. In order that it may prepare, print, and circulate suitable documents illustrating the issues which distinguish the Republican party from any other, and may meet all proper expenses incident to the campaign, the committee feels authorized to apply to all citizens whose principles or interests are involved in the struggle. Under the circumstances in which the country finds itself placed, the committee believes that you will esteem it both a privilege and a pleasure to make to its fund a contribution which, it is hoped, may not be less than $——. The committee is authorized to state that such voluntary contribution from persons employed in the service of the United States will not be objected to in any official quarter.

The labors of the committee will affect the result of the Presidential election in 1884 as well as the Congressional struggle; and it may therefore reasonably hope to have the sympathy and assistance of all who look with dread upon the possibility of the restoration of the Democratic party to the control of the Government.

Please make prompt and favorable response to this letter by bank check or draft, or postal money-order, payable to the order of JAY A. HUBBELL, acting treasurer, post-office lock-box 589, Washington D. C.

By order of the committee,

D. B. HENDERSON, Secretary.

It is almost exactly like those that were sent out in 1880 and in 1878, when I had the honor to be chairman of the committee, and, as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] says, those two were submitted to and approved by the then "civil-service reform" President, Hayes.

There has been no intention on the part of the committee in sending out this little circular, three inches by eight, as shown by inspection, of oppressing anybody; and it has not been sent out in the dark. There has been no secrecy, nothing whatever covert, nothing whatever apologetic on the part of the Republican Congressional committee in this act signed by Colonel HENDERSON, its secretary. If in sending out numerous circulars asking employés of the Government if they were willing to contribute to a cause which they believe to be the greatest politically that agitates men's thoughts in this country, there has been here and there a circular delivered to some poor woman in a Department or outside of Washington, that has never been intended. The whole scope and aim of political contributions as engineered by Congressional committees, whether on the one side or the other, has never been a mystery, and there is no more mystery about it to-day than there ever was before. No woman has ever been requested except where under her initials she has appeared as a man, nor has any poor day-laborer been intended to be even solicited. If there has been any such poor laborer that has received any invitation of this kind, he may be assured that he will never be troubled again by the Republican Congressional committee, whether he pays or not.

But the committee, without any pretense and without any sentimentalism, finds itself as the organ of the Republican party confronted with a most important campaign. The Congressional elections, upon which depends the fate of the next House of Representatives, are now impending, and so long as men believe that one thing is right in politics and another thing is wrong, so long as men believe that the party with which the Senator from Ohio is identified and of which he is a distinguished leader is bent upon mischief to the country, and so long as they believe that in the Republican party and in its future ascendency is bound up the good of the country, neither you, sir, nor the Senator from Ohio, nor I, will ever find a day when men will not be willing to put in time and effort and energy and part of the means that have been given to them to maintain the right and keep down the wrong. I want to say to the Senator from Ohio that with all of the pity that he has arrayed for the poor woman whom the Republican committee has not sent to, for the laborer in his shop whom the Republican committee does not seek, for the orphan that he says is besieged, but is not, and notwithstanding all that he has said about this being compulsory, I can tell him from the Republican Congressional committee that the constituency to which these invitations have been sent has been found a willing constituency.

If the Senator perchance has found among the many to whom these circulars have been sent out here and there a man who would inclose it to him complainingly, and declaring his revolt against the movement, and felt oppressed, there are thousands and tens of thousands who have willingly announced that rather than the Democratic power which he vaunts so much should gain power in the next Congress, they are able and willing to contribute; and the committee does not find itself surrounded by reluctant men.

I defy the Senator from Ohio or any man, who ever he may be, either in this little circular or any correspondence of the committee, or any resolution of the committee, or any utterance of any single member of the committee, or of the whole Republican caucus that constituted the committee, to find anywhere a single act indicating that the screws were to be put upon men; but we have gone out just as men go out in other fields, just as men go out in voluntary associations and ask the members, when an emergency arises, if they are willing to give, just as church and parish organizations are conducted. Does the Senator know that in running a society, whether it be social, educational, or religious, if an emergency arises, if a conflict impends, if means are legitimately needed, the men that are naturally sought are the men who belong to the association? Does he know that no man considers himself, to use his language, degraded and insulted because he has the opportunity offered him?

This thing has always been done, and if the Senator from Ohio ever becomes the President of the United States, the head of his party, with the distribution of patronage and the control of patronage, he will find that it will be done then as it was always done by the Democratic party.

But the question to be fairly considered, Mr. President, the question that thoughtful men should consider, the question that prudent, patriotic men should consider here is whether the matter of voluntary contributions for legitimate campaign purposes shall be conducted freely, openly, without oppression; that there should be no yoke imposed upon a man in office; that there should be no threat held over him because he is in office; that there should be nothing imperious and tyrannical, and so long as it is done in that way you have got nothing more than what I may say and stand here boldly to maintain is a legitimate source of contribution to a proper political fund for the purposes of legitimately carrying on a campaign. When I have said this for our circular I have said all that I need to say, I think, as to its moral force. For its legal aspect I quote the law and the following correspondence:

I.—POLITICAL ASSESSMENTS.

SEC. 6. All executive officers or employés of the United States not appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, are prohibited from requesting, giving to, or receiving from any other officer or employé of the Government any money or property or other thing of value for political purposes; and any such officer or employé who shall offend against the provisions of this section shall be at once discharged from the service of the United States; and he shall also be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $500. (Supplement to the Revised Statutes of the United States, section 6, page 245.)

ACTION OF THE NATIONAL CIVIL-SERVICE REFORM LEAGUE.

Resolutions of the Boston Association.

The following circular has been sent to the principal employés of the Government in the United States.

CIVIL-SERVICE REFORM ASSOCIATION,
New York, June 17, 1882.

DEAR SIR: We understand that a circular has recently been sent to you from the Republican Congressional committee, asking for contributions toward defraying the expenses of that committee at the coming election.

We desire to inform you that, in the opinion of counsel, as the members of the committee are officers of the United States Government, you as an officeholder are liable, under section 6 of chapter 287 of the United States Statutes, 1876, (supplement to Revised Statutes, page 245,) to punishment by fine or removal from office, or both, in case you subscribe as requested. The National Civil-Service Reform League proposes to bring the matter to the attention of the Attorney-General and other prosecuting officers of the United States, and until their decision is given we should advise you prudently to refrain from complying with the request of the committee.

Respectfully,

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS,
President.
EVERETT P. WHEELER,
Chairman Executive Committee.
WILLIAM POTTS,
Secretary for the New York Civil-Service Reform Association.

LETTER FROM JAY HUBBELL ON THE SUBJECT.

WASHINGTON, June 22.—Representative HUBBELL, chairman of the Republican Congressional committee, has addressed the following letter to George William Curtis:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., June 22, 1882.

SIR: I understand that a circular signed by you has been sent to large numbers of persons employed in the service of the United States, advising them to refrain from complying with the request of the Republican Congressional committee for a contribution to its campaign fund. In this circular you state that "in the opinion of counsel, as the members of the Republican Congressional committee are officers of the United States Government," all persons making contributions to such committee will render themselves liable under section 6, chapter 287, United States Statutes. If it be law that persons paying become thereby liable to a penalty, I, being a member of Congress and the treasurer who receives that payment, am also liable.

I am willing to meet you on this question anywhere or at any time, and to unite with you in requesting the President to ask an opinion of the Attorney-General. If you desire any other form of action in any tribunal which can give an immediate consideration of the point, I will join in testing the soundness of the circular, and I invite you to this mode of settlement, as both are more manly and more honorable than your attempt to confuse the action or alarm the minds of the employés alluded to. The law is misstated in your circular, and the alarm you seek to create is without justification in the law, your counsel, to whom you vaguely allude, either misunderstanding or perverting it. Disdaining to seek shelter behind any cover, I therefore challenge you to the step necessary to an immediate determination of the degree of responsibility which is attached to this fact, and to the correctness of your circular, which I distinctly deny.

Yours,

JAY A. HUBBELL,
Chairman and Treasurer Republican Congressional Committee.

To Mr. GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS, New York,
President Civil Service Reform Association.

The Senator from Ohio belongs to a party that has been noted for its discipline. He himself has said that for nearly half a century it held the control in this country. It held that control with a pitiless hand. In his early days he was taught the lesson of obedience to discipline, and the party hosts everywhere were mustered under whip and spur, and the cry of the Democratic party always was, "No revolt, and the shooting of deserters." There never was anywhere any party that held its organization together by systems of assessments, by contributions for political funds, by the levying of money for the purpose of maintaining political press and political agencies, more than the Democratic party always did during its day of power. The Senator from Ohio knows that, and there is, with all the sincerity which he manifests now and no doubt feels, an element of the ludicrous and the absurd that he, a scarred veteran politician in his party, worn and inured in its fights, once a candidate for the second office in the Government, again almost a candidate for the Presidency, to-day still a formidable candidate for his party's nomination, standing up here and proclaiming a sentimentalism upon this question which he says thoroughly enthuses him, and that his party is the avant courier in this great crusade in favor of simple, voluntary elections without any appeal whatever to men in office.

But it is the fact that the Senator from Ohio is precisely in the situation that other leaders in his party have been heretofore when they were out of power. There never has been a time when the path in which he is now treading has not been trod before by his forerunners who were leading in the battle to gain national power. Retrenchment, reform, opposing voluntary contributions to politics, all these have been the different cries, always leading the Democratic bands up to the breach to struggle for official power. I have been looking over some of the records; one or two of which I will use as illustrating the position of the Senator's party when it is out of power in setting itself up as the advocate of reform, and especially as now of civil-service reform. Has the Senator ever read that remarkable document, the letter of Andrew Jackson of November 12, 1816, to Mr. Monroe, of which I give him the substance? This is what Jackson said when out of office, Andrew Jackson, somewhat known to the American people afterward not only for his patriotism, for his stern will, and for his relentless purpose, but also for the political discipline that he maintained in the ranks of his party and for the record which that party made under him. But in 1816, Andrew Jackson, then out of power, as is the Senator from Ohio now, said:

In every situation party and party feelings should be avoided. Now is the time to exterminate that monster called party spirit. By selecting characters most conspicuous for their probity, virtue, capacity, and firmness, without any regard to party, you will go far to eradicate those feelings which on former occasions have thrown so many obstacles in the way of government, and perhaps have the pleasure of uniting a people heretofore politically divided. The Chief Magistrate of a great and powerful nation should never indulge in party feeling. His conduct should be liberal and disinterested, always bearing in mind that he acts for the whole and not for a part of the community. By this course you will exalt the national character and acquire for yourselves a name as imperishable as monumental marble. * * * These are the sentiments of a friend. They are the feelings, if I know my own heart, of an undissembled patriot.—Extract from a letter of Andrew Jackson to Mr. Monroe, November 12, 1816.

It is a sober fact that no man unless his attention had been called to that letter of Andrew Jackson in 1816, with the knowledge that the country has of him afterward, when in power, great as his merits were, great as was his patriotism, great as were the services he rendered to the American Republic, would have ever recognized in those lines emanations from Andrew Jackson's mind. The invocation to the serene and impartial atmosphere, the adjuration to cast aside all party spirit, the injunction to the other man who had newly been elected President to take all the American people into his embrace as belonging to one party, certainly were directly and diametrically opposed to every administrative act of that great President when he came into power. I only cite this as what seems to me pertinent illustration of the entire inadequacy, the insignificancy of the position of the Senator from Ohio to-day, when he is clamoring at the doors of popular favor that those doors may be opened in order to let his party in; and if Andrew Jackson was not able to stand up against the political pressure that beset him when he gained power, will the Senator from Ohio, if that Presidential day ever dawns upon him, possess a more Roman virtue, and will he be able to carry out as an administrator the lofty sentiments that he has enunciated here to-day?

Why, Mr. President, it was not long after the Democratic party gained power and had control and possession of the employés of the Government and all its offices that the policy it pursued—even since, when it has been in the majority—was outlined by a distinguished statesman from New York, who then was, and afterward continued, one of the brightest and ablest and most influential of the statesmen of that party. I refer to Governor Marcy. What does he say in that famous utterance of his, a part of which has become an epigram for Democratic spoilsmen:

When they—

Says Governor Marcy, speaking from a Democratic stand-point in power and not out of power—

When they (the politicians) are contending for victory they avow their intention of enjoying the fruits of it. If they are defeated, they expect to retire from office. If they are successful, they claim, as a matter of right, the advantage of success. They see nothing wrong in the rule that to the victors belong the spoils of the enemy.

Mr. President, there has never been any cardinal doctrine so dear to the Democratic soul, so ripe for the Democratic mouth, so grateful to Democratic contemplation, whether the Senator from Ohio understands it or not, as that old-fashioned doctrine of Governor Marcy, that "to the victors belong the spoils." It has always followed as a matter of course that when inaugurated in power upon that basis, with the spoils considered as belonging to them, there never has been a time when the spoils have not been levied upon and taxed and tithed without stint or mercy for political purposes at the risk and expense of removal on the part of the persons holding their places. The investigations which have taken place show this to be the fact.

I am not urging this in the line of declaring that the Republicans have any right to follow the extreme courses of the Democratic party, but as the Senator from Ohio has indulged in an eloquent panegyric as to the virtues of the Democratic party during its power, and has defied any man to accuse it of degrading itself and the men in office by assessing them, or by using the spoils of those offices, I speak now in answer to his claims.

As early as 1837, attempts were made to investigate the Democratic party upon this very question of assessments upon official employés. These attempts failed then, because the Speaker of the House, Mr. Polk, packed the committees, and the whole subject went away and came to nothing; but in 1839 the famous Harlan committee was raised for the purpose of investigating the operations of the Democratic party, including its deficits and defalcations, as well as with reference to its subordinates and the assessments levied upon them, and the threats of removal by which the assessments were made and the removals which followed, and the whole subject was thoroughly and faithfully gone over in the investigation which followed.

I have not time to and I shall spend but a few minutes upon the extracts which have been given me. Some of them I will give to the RECORD, in order that they may be seen there, and that the Senator from Ohio may read them. I select from a few places for the benefit of the Senator from Ohio, who has declared that nothing of this kind occurred in the Democratic party, and he may consider it for himself Democratic reading.

After grappling with the Swartwout defalcation in New York, amounting to over $1,200,000, and finding some rather curious Democratic methods as to the care and custody and execution of official bonds, according to Cashier Curtis's testimony, as follows:

The second bond was executed by Charles L. Livingston, M. M. Quackenbos, and Benjamin Birdsall. It had five or six seals to it, but no other person, to my knowledge, executed it. This bond remained in a trunk which contained all valuable papers, which was deposited in the bank after the closing of the office. The bond remained unexecuted until toward the close of 1836, and, as far as I can recollect, I handed it to Mr. Swartwout soon after or at the commencement of 1837.

* * * * * * *

I held the bond about three years before I handed it to Mr. Swartwout to deliver to Mr. Price, the United States district attorney. It was then executed.—House Report No. 313, third session, Twenty-fifth Congress, pages 58 and 59.

The committee go on to further investigation.

The following is an extract from the committee's report showing how they went on:

The system of a regular taxation of public officers connected with and deriving patronage from the custom-house at New York, by a tariff proportioned to such patronage in each case, for the support of party elections is now alluded to.—Harlan Report, H. Rep. 313, February 27, 1839, Twenty-fifth Congress, first session, pages 249, 250.

Then follows certain testimony, which I read for the benefit of the Senator from Ohio in his Democratic crusade for the protection of civil-service employés:

David S. Lyon, sworn:

I was the first deputy collector of the port of New York during the whole time Samuel Swartwout was collector. I have frequently been called upon to contribute to political objects while I was deputy collector, as an officer of the custom-house. The amount was from $20 to $100. The tax was pro rata, according to salary. It bore a proportion from one to six per cent. I frequently paid a part of the amount. When it was too high and more than I could afford, I urged them to reduce it. In one instance, when I was assessed $20, Mr. Swartwout told the collector of the tax that $10 was enough for me to pay. For a few years back I have not paid anything to the general committee, because I could not afford to pay the amount assessed. * * * The collectors of the Tammany Hall general committee, one of whom was John Becker, called on me several times. William Tyack once or twice called on me to collect the amount with which I was assessed. He was not the regular collector, but was one of the general committee. I believe that nearly all the officers of the custom-house, in doors and out, and the clerks, were similarly taxed, and generally paid what they were assessed. It was assessed by the general committee of Tammany Hall, and for the support of the party denominated the Tammany Hall party. If the individual did not pay the amount he was taxed with, the collector would remark: 'You will be reported to general committee; and everybody well understood that proscription would follow. The collector of the general committee has an alphabetical book, which contains the names of persons, and the amount each individual is required to pay.—Harlan Com. H. Rep. 313, Twenty-fifth Cong., third session, pages 250, 251.

I ask the Senator from Ohio if in the course of his exploration, broad and large everywhere into the work of the Republican Congressional committee, he has ever found any official who has stood over a civil employé of the Government and has said as much as that to him, that he would be reported anywhere; but, on the other hand, is it not the fact, as the Senator from Iowa has stated, that in the campaign preceding, where the circulars were sent out to over 30,000 men in office and only 11,000 responded voluntarily, no man in the United States is able to show anywhere that there was the pressure of a single leaf or a feather's weight brought upon one of those men who failed to voluntarily and freely and gladly respond?

I will call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to certain interesting reading that I find relating to the course of his party only four years before he was found as a candidate on the Presidential ticket for the second place in the Government. The famous Covode investigation upon this very subject was raised in 1860, and I read some choice extracts from it. These are all interesting witnesses—Vedder, Wendell, Cramer, and the others. One of them ran across the track of another Democratic civil service-reform Presidential candidate. He was a clerk in the Land Office, and he describes, as his testimony shows, the methods of collection for political purposes in the Land Office as late as the last years of the administration of Mr. Buchanan. An authorized agent and employé of the Government was instructed to go, and did go, around to the clerks with their names upon a list, and the assessment opposite their names, and the money that was checked opposite their names was directed, with their consent, to be left in the hands of the disbursing officer, and not paid out to the clerk at all, but contributed directly from the Treasury to the Democratic fund. When asked at whose inspiration this was done another witness declared that the whole thing was talked over and considered by the Commissioner of the Land Office, a gentleman since well and favorably known in the Democratic party and throughout the country, a former Senator from Indiana, Mr. Hendricks. Listen to some good, sound Democratic civil-service reform reading:

Arent S. De Peyster, sworn:

The weighers were called on to pay fifteen dollars each for the support of the election, and when I declined Mr. Vanderpool, the deputy surveyor, observed that I ought to consider whether my $1,500 per annum was not worth paying $15 for. Under the impression that it was the price of my situation, I paid it. The above occurred during the last spring election for charter officers.

Abraham B. Vanderpool, an appraiser of customs in New York, at $2,000 a year, was also sworn by the committee. In reply to the inquiry of Mr. Wise as to whether the officers of the custom-house had been assessed for political or party purposes, he began his answer with: "I have known officers attached to the custom-house to be called on for"—when Mr. Owens, a Democratic member of the committee, interposed and informed the witness that he was not bound to answer any questions relating to his private affairs, and Mr. Foster, another Democratic member of the committee, objected to the question.

The committee decided that the question should be propounded, when the witness declined to answer and was allowed to retire.

John Becker was also sworn as a witness. He said: "I have been collector for the Democratic-Republican party in this (New York) city. It is not an official appointment. * * * All the collections I ever made for the Democratic-Republican party were strictly confidential. I therefore respectfully decline answering the question." When asked whose confidence he would violate by answering the question, he replied: "The confidence of the finance committee of the general Democratic-Republican committee."—Ibid.

Isaac West, called and sworn.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Where do you reside?

Answer. I reside in Towsontown, Baltimore County, Maryland.

Q. Were you at one time engaged in the custom-house at Philadelphia?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what capacity?

A. I was appointed inspector. I had charge of the appraisers' stores there.

Q. When were you appointed?

A. The 1st of June, 1855, I think.

Q. How long did you remain in office there?

A. About five years.

Q. Were you there at the time of the election of 1856, when Mr. Buchanan was elected?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What do you know about moneys being raised off the employés of the custom-house on that occasion?

A. There was a certain tax levied upon the persons connected with the custom-house.

Q. What amount on each person?

A. A certain percentage. On a person receiving $1,095 a year I think the tax for the Presidential election was from $30 to $33.

Q. Do you mean for the Presidential election alone, or for both Presidential and Congressional elections?

A. I mean the Presidential election alone.

Q. What about the other election?

A. The amount was not so great for the State election.

Q. How much was that?

A. That I do not recollect. It strikes me that it was from $5 to $7, something like that.

Q. The two, then, would amount to in the neighborhood of $40?

A. Yes, sir, in that neighborhood.

Q. Upon what salaried officers was that?

A. Those of $1,100, or rather 1,095 a year.

Q. Were the others assessed in proportion to their salaries?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. To whom was the money paid?

A. It was generally deposited. That portion which I collected in my department I gave to the deputy collector, Mr. Harbeson. I believe he was the treasurer, so far as the custom-house was concerned, and he paid it over to the executive committee I believe.

Q. A political committee?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did all the employés pay?

A. I never knew one to refuse.

Q. What was the impression—that it was rather obligatory upon them to pay?

A. That seemed to be the impression; they all felt it their duty to pay that more promptly than some of their debts; that was the impression, but I do not know about whether they would have been removed if they had not paid, but it was considered obligatory I believe.

[Extract from testimony of Mr. Wendell, Public Printer.]

Question. I wish to ask you a few further questions concerning the elections in Pennsylvania. When you had interviews with Mr. Buchanan previous to the elections in Pennsylvania in 1858, did you not freely talk with him in regard to the use of money to carry certain districts?

Answer. I talked with him freely as to the use of money in elections; I do not remember as to any specific districts; I talked about the expenses of elections generally, the large amounts used; yes, sir.

Q. Did you not tell him you were compelled to use large amounts of money?

A. I cannot say that I told him I was compelled.

Q. That you were using large amounts of money?

A. He was cognizant of the fact that I contributed largely for elections.

Q. You had conversations with him upon that subject?

A. It was the subject of conversation at different times, the amounts that I contributed.

Q. What was the character of the several letters from Pennsylvania that he read you portions of during one of the interviews you had with him about carrying certain districts? How was it to be done?

A. I think the most of them wanted material aid; they made suggestions as to aid required in different districts generally, and the political affairs of their several districts.

Q. Why did he call your attention to those letters calling for that kind of aid? Was it because he expected you to attend to it?

A. Well, I do not know, indeed, what the motive was; our conversations were generally about politics and the contest going on, and the letters might have been shown in conversation, which in those days were generally political; almost always, I might say; my conversations with him were always of a political character.

Q. On what occasion was it that you had these long interviews with him? Was it not immediately before the election, and relative to the means to be made use of to carry the elections?

A. Well, I could not say; I had them at different times. I presume that during the time of elections I had some long interviews, and again at other times. I do not call to mind any particular date when these interviews were held. They were held at different times during all my intimacy with him.

Q. On what days of the week did you have long interviews with him? Can you recollect?

A. Pretty much every day, I should presume. I do not remember any particular day of the week.

Mr. OLIN, (to the chairman.) Do you suppose he took Sundays for that purpose?

The WITNESS. I have had interviews with him on Sundays.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was it not your habit previous to the election to spend the Sabbath day with Mr. Buchanan, conversing freely upon political matters, and particularly with regard to the use of money to carry elections?

A. I cannot say it was a usual habit. I saw him on Sundays; I could not say how many.

Q. I am referring to immediately preceding the elections.

A. Yes, sir; I may have seen him on one or two Sabbaths immediately preceding the fall election of 1858.

Q. On those occasions had you conversations with him on that subject?

A. Conversations on politics?

Q. In connection with money matters.

J. L. Cramer called and sworn.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Are you a clerk in the General Land Office?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any assessments made upon the clerks or employés there for political purposes?

A. I have asked the gentlemen—a portion of them—to contribute for that purpose.

Q. You asked them yourself?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How was that contribution made; was it a certain percentage on the salary?

A. In one instance it was; a small per cent. was asked of the gentlemen.

Q. In what year was that?

A. My impression is that it was in the year 1856.

Q. Do you recollect what per cent. it was that was levied that year?

A. I can only tell from my own proportion. My recollection is that I paid $3.20 on a salary of $1,600.

Q. Did you collect it that year?

A. I called on some of the gentlemen.

Q. In what way was that list made? Describe how it was prepared, whether with the names and the salaries, and the percentage that was assessed, or how was it?

A. So far as my recollection serves me, I am not aware that I had a list. I think I had a memorandum book, in which I put down the names of such gentlemen as contributed, knowing their salary and what proportion it would be. That is my recollection of the matter.

Q. Did you collect in 1858?

A. I collected on two occasions; it strikes me that one was in 1856, and the other was in 1858.

Q. Do you know for what State, or for what purpose, that money was collected either in 1856 or 1858?

A. I think the money in 1856 was collected to be appropriated to pay some balance to be supplied in Pennsylvania. If I remember right the Democratic State committee had got into debt quite a sum of money, and it was with a view of liquidating that debt that the money was raised. It was just after the October election, I think, there was another collection to pay for some documents that had been printed to be distributed.

Q. Were not there two assessments made that year—one before the election, and another afterward, to make up a deficiency?

A. That is what I spoke of. I think one was before the election, and another to make up a deficiency. I was under the impression that the deficiency was the only one I had anything to do with.

Q. That one you collected?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know at whose request that assessment was made to make up the deficiency in Pennsylvania?

A. I do not. I understood——

Mr. WINSLOW, (to witness.) Don't state what you understood; state what you know, if you please.

The WITNESS. I do not know.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. By whose authority was it done? Who was it that requested or directed you to perform this duty?

A. I took the paper around at the request of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Q. Was it the assessment before or after the election that you collected?

A. I think it was after the October election, but I may be mistaken about that. I am not positive whether it was after that election or after the Presidential election.

Q. Do you know the total amount of that Pennsylvania deficiency to be raised?

A. I do not know only from what I heard; I have no other means of knowing.

Q. What was the amount you heard?

Mr. WINSLOW. I object to the witness answering that question.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Who told you what amount was to be raised?

A. I think it was the Commissioner, Hon. T. W. Hendricks.

Q. Did he tell you what the amount was?

A. I think so.

Q. How much was it?

A. It strikes me that it was $2,500 or $3,000.

Q. That was to be raised in that one office?

A. No, sir; that the Pennsylvania Democratic State committee had incurred a debt to that amount.

Q. Did all the clerks pay their assessments?

A. Nearly all that I called upon. I believe there were but one or two exceptions.

Q. Who collected the first assessment of that year?

A. I do not know.

Q. Into whose hands was the money paid after you collected it?

A. The money that I procured, I think, I paid over to the then Commissioner.

Q. Now, in regard to the assessments of 1858, how was that done? Was the assessment so much percentage on the salaries; so much on the $1,400 clerks, so much on the $1,600, and so on?

A. No, sir, I think not.

Q. Did you collect that?

A. I collected some of some of the gentlemen in the office.

Q. Who assisted you in collecting it?

A. Mr. Vedder was one, and Mr. Heath.

No. 41.

TUESDAY, May 1, 1860.

Josiah M. Lucas called and sworn.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. I understand that you were a clerk in one of the Departments. If so, in what Department was it?

Answer. I was a clerk in the Land Office, Department of the Interior.

Q. Will you tell us all you know about the collecting and raising of money there for political purposes?

A. I can give all the information I have, probably in a very few words. Whilst I was a clerk in that Department levies were made upon various occasions upon the clerks for funds, and on every occasion I dissented. It was against my feelings and principles. They did not come on all occasions to me; but the last occasion to which I took exception was one on which they wanted to raise a fund of eight or nine thousand dollars in the various Departments. That, however, I do not know, but such was the statement made to me.

By Mr. WINSLOW:

Q. Say nothing about statements or hearsay, if you please.

A. The list of the clerks was made out, their names in one column, their salaries in another, and the percentage levied in another column. This list they presented to me and five others in the room, all of whom paid but myself. I looked at the list and asked the two gentlemen who brought it who sent them to me. They said they were not going to answer me any questions, but asked me if I would pay. I told them "no;" and that is pretty much the substance of all the information I have. They went, as I saw, in the different rooms I happened to have business in, to the different clerks, and presented this list to them, and they paid their pro rata assessment. The information that we received was that it was to raise a fund to pay off a debt that had been contracted in Pennsylvania, which they expected to have raised out of Congress, but it adjourned without raising this amount, and they had to raise it in another way.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Who carried that list into your room?

A. The persons who carried the list around for the portion of the office in which I was were Mr. Cramer and a Mr. Slocumb who hails from Mississippi, but is recognized probably as an Indianian. They brought the list around and there were four or five other clerks in the room beside myself. I refused to subscribe. My friends all told me that I had better subscribe, but I told them that I could not with my view of the case, and I denounced it in the public prints.

By Mr. OLIN:
Q. Do you recollect about what percentage was upon the salaries?
A. I do not, exactly; I think it was between 2½ and 5 per cent.

By the CHAIRMAN:
Q. You say that it was an assessment, and that you refused to subscribe?
A. It was a regular assessment. It was upon paper that I recognized as coming from a certain office. The names, the salaries, and the amounts to be paid were all put down.

By Mr. TRAIN:
Q. Where did the paper come from?
A. From the Department of the Interior. It was the same kind of paper as the pay-clerk uses. On a previous occasion an assessment was made in the middle of the month, when the clerks had no money, and the amounts were afterward deducted from their pay by the pay-clerk.

By the CHAIRMAN:
Q. Was that an assessment or a subscription?
A. I will not be certain whether it was an assessment or a subscription. At all events the money was deducted from the pay of the clerks by the pay-clerk.

By Mr. ROBINSON:
Q. When was that first assessment that you speak of?
A. I cannot be certain as to the exact time. It was during the struggle between Douglas and Lincoln.
Q. When was the last assessment made?
A. About two years ago, I think; somewhere about that time; I cannot fix the date precisely.
Q. There was none of that fund raised to help Douglas, I suppose?
A. No, sir, I think not. I know the Democrats as well as the others in the office denounced the matter, but yet paid. I know a great many of them denounced the principle, but they paid, to buy peace, as they said.
Q. Were you for Douglas?
A. No, sir; I was for Lincoln. I was a Whig, and had never voted for a Democrat in my life, I think.
Q. When did you leave the office?
A. It will be two years in September next.
Q. Did you resign, or were you discharged?
A. I resigned, because I believed I would be removed.

By Mr. WINSLOW:
Q. Under whom were you first appointed to office?
A. I received a temporary appointment not long after General Taylor came in, and was given a permanent appointment by Mr. Fillmore.
Q. How long did you hold office?
A. I was removed by Mr. Pierce, but while I was away I was reappointed again, without any application on my part. I continued in office until I resigned under Mr Buchanan.
Q. I understood you to say that you were for Lincoln and not for Douglas?
A. Yes, sir. I wrote political articles in his favor, which were published in the West.
Q. You supported Mr. Lincoln's election, and wrote for him in the Western papers?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You used the word "levied" in the first part of your testimony. Do you mean to say that these contributions of the clerks were forced contributions? Were any threats held out by the persons who brought the list?
A. No, sir; not in my presence.
Q. How long after your refusal to contribute was it that you resigned?
A. Very soon after; a month or less perhaps.
Q. What is your present occupation?
A. I hold the office of Postmaster of the House of Representatives.
Q. In your election as Postmaster did you make an agreement with members of Congress to give office under you?
A. No, sir.
Q. Were you approached upon that subject by any member of Congress?
A. I was approached by one man, I recollect, who said to me: "If you are elected I want an office for a friend of mine, but I don't want you to make any pledges."
Q. Did you do so?
A. I did not.

By Mr. TRAIN:
Q. Was that before or after your nomination?
A. It was about the time of the nomination; but I do not remember whether it was before or after.

By Mr. WINSLOW:
Q. You gave no pledges to any member of Congress, either directly or indirectly, in regard to any patronage of your office?
A. No, sir, not while I was a candidate. One man alleged that I gave him a pledge, but I denied it.
Q. Who was he?
A. A man from Indiana who applied for a place for himself.
Q. Then you came into office with no agreement, either directly or indirectly, with anybody in regard to the patronage of your office?
A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. ROBINSON:
Q. What papers did you write for?
A. For the Jacksonville and Springfield papers.

No. 42.

TUESDAY, May 1, 1860.

Stephen G. Dodge called and sworn.

By the CHAIRMAN:
Question. Where do you reside?
Answer. I have been in Washington the most of the time for the last seven years.
Q. What have you been engaged in?
A. I was for six years and over a clerk in the Pension Office.
Q. When did you resign, or were you removed?
A. I was removed on the 10th day of August last by a letter from the Secretary of the Interior; the letter was delivered to me by the Commissioner of Pensions; I asked him the very natural question upon what grounds I was removed; he said that he understood that it was on the ground of political unsoundness, and referred me to the Secretary of the Interior for fuller explanation as to what the special grounds were; I went to the Secretary immediately, and he informed me that I was removed because there was a necessity for the reappointment of a clerk who had been dropped on the 8th of July; I think it was in 1856; to aid the Administration party in the State of Maryland; I was not called upon to contribute to it, and I do not if I was present when the contribution was raised.
Q. Tell us that which you know about.
A. In 1858, I think in the spring, after the Lecompton controversy arose, the Indiana Club, of which I had been a member, was reorganized, and we, the members of the club, were called upon to contribute to a fund for the distribution of Lecompton documents in the State of Indiana.
Q. What do you mean by the "Indiana Club?"
A. A club composed of Indianians temporarily resident in Washington.

By Mr. WINSLOW:
Q. Was it a voluntary thing?
A. I do not know how voluntary it was.
Q. Was the club got up by orders of the Department or by the Government? That is what I want to know.
A. I cannot answer as to that distinctly.

By the CHAIRMAN:
Q. Tell us what your knowledge of it is
A. I could tell you very plainly what my ideas of it were, but that would not be evidence, I suppose.
[The witness then stated, without its being taken down by the reporter, the particulars about the Indiana Club, and also about a contribution to pay a debt of the Keystone Club for documents furnished by them to various States.]
Mr. WINSLOW. If the club was a voluntary organization, we have nothing to do with it.

By the CHAIRMAN:
Q. I want to know whether it was an assessment or a contribution?
A. I regarded the thing as a matter of moral duress, that is all. I had drawn up the articles of the association originally. The original organization of the club was entirely voluntary. The reorganization I regarded as under moral duress.
Q. In what year was that reorganization?
A. In 1858, after the Lecompton message.
Q. Tell us what you know about that reorganization.
Mr. WINSLOW. This opens the door to an immense investigation. I could put any of you gentlemen upon the stand and question you about any organization to which you may have belonged.

By the CHAIRMAN:
Q. State what you know about a paper that was handed around relative to raising money to meet a deficiency of the Keystone Club, and the manner in which that money was paid or to be paid.
A. In the spring of 1858——
Q. Was it the spring or summer?
A. In the spring or summer of 1858, or some time in 1858, a paper was presented to me for signature, headed, as near as I can recollect, in these words:
"The undersigned request the disbursing clerk of the Department of the Interior to retain out of our salaries for the current month the sums set opposite to our respective names."
Q. In whose handwriting was that paper drawn?
A. It was apparently in the handwriting of the Commissioner of Pensions.

By Mr. WINSLOW:
Q. The present Commissioner, Mr. Whiting?
A. Yes, sir; the subscription was headed with the name of the Commissioner with the sum of $10.

By the CHAIRMAN:
Q. Did you know it to be his handwriting?
A. I say it was apparently in his handwriting. He has clerks in his office who frank his name, and whose handwriting is almost exactly like his. I could scarcely distinguish between their writing and his. It was apparently in his handwriting.

By Mr. ROBINSON:
Q. Go on and state what else you know about it. What other names were to the paper?
A. The name of the chief clerk, who I think was absent, was also down for the sum of $10, I think.

By the CHAIRMAN:
Q. In whose handwriting?
A. I think that was in the handwriting of the Commissioner; I think that Mr. Boyington's name was also down, and the best of my recollection is that he also contributed $10; I was asked to sign the paper, but objected to doing so, on the ground that I had already contributed $25 to the funds of the Indiana Club for the purpose of circulating the same kind of documents; but being advised by some friends that it would be better to make the contribution I did so; and in a conversation with the Commissioner of Pensions himself, I said to him that I had done it upon the principle of life insurance—to insure my office to me.

By Mr. ROBINSON:
Q. What reply to that remark of yours did he make?
A. I do not remember of his making any answer; I presume he had acted upon the same principle that I had; that is only my presumption, however.

Thus in the last days of the last Democratic administration that ever was, and putting my word against that of the Senator from Ohio, I should be tempted to say that ever will be, in the last days of the Democratic administration under Mr. Buchanan not only were the clerks in the Departments found followed up under a belief and a threat of removal to the paying of involuntary contributions, but they were hounded from room to room by superior officials, the heads of the bureaus and of the Departments standing over them; and the President of the United States, the leader of his party, a veteran in political strife and political organization, was found consulting with the instruments through which this was done from day to day and week to week, including Sundays, for the purpose of making this great haul more exhaustive, so that no man should escape from its meshes. Yet to-day the Senator from Ohio stands up in his place and declares the former purity and glory of the Democratic party, and defies the Republican party to point out in its history anything touching what he calls the degradation of civil service by reason of contributions.

I can imagine nothing that would be more degrading to the civil service than such a spectacle. The loftiest figures in the Republic prostitute their time and talent and attention to deal with the little details of this work, and the heads of the Departments and of the great bureaus of the Government, and the deputies and subordinates engaged from day to day through a hot campaign, with assessment after assessment, for the records show that that one was not complete, and hunting and following these poor people up and obliging them to contribute, with the whole power of the Administration being so brought to bear on them.

Let me tell the Senator from Ohio that in the contest which is now going on, and in which he and I and every man who has a political belief is engaged, he may look in vain to discover any such prostitution of the power of the Government or of the Administration as that. Our circular has been carefully submitted to the best legal minds, not for the purpose of evading, and avoiding, and dodging responsibility, but in order that everything which may be done may proceed in a legal and regular fashion, and that no man, either who contributes or who asks for contributions, shall violate the law, knowing that outside of that, in a fair and reasonable way, there is ample domain for the exercise of this voluntary right by the person who holds anoffice.

The Senator talks about the degradation which comes both to the giver and taker because of these contributions, and he throughout his speech continually dwelt upon the enormous funds which have been raised for the purpose of carrying elections and thereby degrading American politics. Does the Senator from Ohio, do you, sir, or do many Senators know the comparatively insignificant amount that is derived from such contributions as these? Does he know that when any amount that is raised by such contributions is put in the scale against the debauchery of the franchise by other methods, it is nothing but dust in the balance? Do you say that the giver and taker are degraded by these voluntary, almost insignificant contributions to a political fund? My colleague and I have known for years earnest and well-contested fights in the State of Maine, where contributions have been raised upon the one side and upon the other for legitimate purposes in campaigns. That State has a front of 200 miles of sea-coast, and a width as great, with 400 and odd towns. The plan of both sides is in great campaigns in Maine that no township is so small as to be neglected, but that the living truths of politics shall be presented and the men assembled together in public meetings.

It is an enthusiastic population. I mean by that, a people which turns out at its political meetings with bands of music and flags flying on both sides, and processions and organizations. All of these things are paid for by legitimate uses of the party, and in all the contributions that were ever laid in the State of Maine, with that vast field which is worked over sometimes for six weeks, the aggregate amount that was ever raised in the State from all the offices and other sources, as the chairman of the State committee will tell you, up to 1880 was less than $6,000 in any one year. Sir, that was not much more than enough to reach into the little villages, to furnish money enough to pay for the posters and the bills to announce the meetings. It is not from such sources that any corruption or harm comes to the constituency.

Let me tell the Senator, let me tell the gentlemen of the Civil-Service Reform Association who have written their letters to the chairman of this committee and who have been well answered, that there is in the field of American politics something besides windmills to fight. There is a debauchery of politics and of the franchise which may go on apart and aside from the little dues which fall from political assessments that is worth looking into and contending with.

The Senator has not cited, but those who sympathize with him and fill the papers with their communications and the public with their speeches are continually talking to us about the perfect civil-service system in England, where they say that no man dares to call upon an official for a contribution of money. Does the Senator from Ohio know, does the president of the Civil-Service Reform Association of New York, if that is the technical name, know that a constituency is debauched in Great Britain a hundred and a thousand fold more than has ever been seen in the State of Maine or in any such State of this country, as I have described, by the reckless and wanton profusion with which money is poured out by the candidate for the purpose of corrupting the voter? This is something that is well worth looking at.

To return to my own State, I have seen the elections conducted year after year, both sides straining their utmost endeavor, and with their little contributions paying these small bills, when throughout the whole length and breadth of the State there never was a charge that a member of the Legislature or any officer of the State had been elected by bribery, wholesale or retail.

But elsewhere in America have been found repeated instances of the corruption of the electoral system by money poured out from other than these assessments, and there are cases enough to be looked upon, to be contemplated by the Senator from Ohio and by these associations to give them full play for their benevolent work, and in that I bid them God speed. I do not desire that they should keep their hands from the machinery of party organization where it runs to the extent that I have described in the Democratic party, but as I have said, as long as men are in earnest and believe in a cause with which they are identified, you cannot prevent them, no man can prevent them, from coming up and contributing freely of their little substance for the proper purposes of the campaign.

I never desire to see the day when men holding civil offices will refuse to so freely contribute. When a race of men shall have grown up in this country who occupy and claim all places of emolument as their own and refuse to take part or interest in the important conflicts which must always agitate our Republic to keep its currents pure and healthy, then I shall look to see other people, not holding office, penetrated with the same insensibility, the same indifference to public questions and public issues and public dangers, and I shall suspect the health and endurance of our institutions.

Mr. President, while there is a good deal of sentiment in politics there is very little of sentimentalism. Men in political life give and take hard blows. There are reversals; there are the ups and downs that try men's characters and their integrity. I can see in my incomplete view of politics and the political field ample room for earnest efforts at reform in educating the voter, in restraining the insolence of officials, in restraining the undue meddling of employés and officers of the Government with politics. I can see room in the political field for a man to cultivate the highest kind of political honesty, to keep his hands free from public money, from public spoils, to maintain his consistency propped up by his sincere beliefs, to sometimes stand alone when discordant voices seek to put him down, to keep from cheating and lying, and from the worst falsehood in politics the cheating and lying of friends. I can see how a man in politics may go on from year to year, strive earnestly to keep up his ideal, and may see that ideal almost only in his own imagination at last, but I do not see how it is that an earnest, practical man can spend his time in neglecting the things that need looking after and in attending to the little matters that do not touch the heart of the people and that have no root whatever in corruption.

Whenever the Senator from Ohio, in his investigation of this field in which he has gone so deliberately, brings to the Senate or to the country instances showing that the Republican organization through its constituted authorities has engaged in any work of oppression, that it holds any man by the throat, that it threatens his place that he now has, that it is harrying women and orphans, and that it follows them, or indeed follows anybody with a determination to get a political fund to be spent in debauching the people, when he furnishes that information to the Senate and to me, then I shall be able to discover that he has gone out on an honest, earnest, hopeful fight against the giants that beset the path of men in political life, and not that he is engaged in that old work, so gratifying and so safe, however inadequate and barren in results, of fighting the wind-mills of politics.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President——

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me to present a conference report on the Army appropriation bill?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LOGAN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 5559) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 8, 11, 14, 21, and 22.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 9, 10, 12, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 29, 30, 31, 32, and 33, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with amendment as follows: In line 1 of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment strike out the words "passage of this act" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "1st day of July, 1882;" and in line 5 strike out "section" and insert in lieu thereof "sections," and add after the word "sixty-one" the words "and twelve hundred and seventy-four;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert before the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment the following: "the necessity for such travel to be certified by the officer issuing such orders;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the word "five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "four;" and on page 3 of the bill, in line 20, strike out "ten" and insert in lieu thereof "fifteen;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out on page 4 of the bill, in line 4, the word "corps" and insert in lieu thereof the word "service;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "ten" and insert in lieu thereof "twenty-five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof "seventy-five," and add at the end of the matter inserted by amendment numbered 37, page 14, line 26 of the bill, the following: "And the Chief of Ordnance shall give attention to such programme of tests as may be submitted by the American Society of Civil Engineers, and the record of such tests shall be furnished said society to be by them published at their own expense;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 5 of said amendment strike out "six" and insert in lieu thereof "seven," and in same line strike out the words "per month," and in line 13 strike out the words "and paid to the trader and laundry man;" and the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN A. LOGAN,
M. W. RANSOM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
BENJ. BUTTERWORTH,
J. C. BURROWS,
E. JNO. ELLIS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MAXEY. The points of disagreement in the report are stated by numbers which throw no light on the report and I should be glad if the Senator from Illinois would make a short statement so as to explain the report.

Mr. LOGAN. I will say that so far as the language of the amendments is concerned there is very little change except in verbiage in some places, and so far as the appropriations are concerned something is added to and something is taken from different items. In the item for the powder-magazine the appropriation agreed upon by the Senate was $50,000, while $100,000 was fixed by the House. The conference divided it and fixed the appropriation at $75,000. The appropriation for furnishing ammunition for target practice was changed from $10,000 to $25,000. The House conferees insisted upon the appropriation made by the House and the Senate conferees concurred in regard to that item. In reference to retirement——

Mr. MAXEY. That is the important point which I desire to have explained.

Mr. LOGAN. The House agreed to the Senate amendment fixing compulsory retirement at sixty-four years of age, and voluntary retirement after forty years' service, and the Senate conferees receded from the amendment of the Senate excepting the professors at West Point, and striking out the first Monday of December, making it operative from and after the passage of the act. The Senate conferees receded from the Senate amendment in regard to the professors at West Point on a letter that was sent by them asking that they be put on the same basis with the others, and that no exception be made in their case. I do not know of any other important amendments. The bill was left substantially as the Senate passed it, with these exceptions. There were no other amendments of importance. As far as the matter of railroads is concerned, that was agreed to by both Houses. In regard to the testing machine, the Senate conferees agreed to add the words which were read at the desk, that the scientific association should have tests made, and they should be published, and they should have the right to print them at their own expense. That was added to it. These changes are about all of any importance.

Mr. BUTLER. Do I understand the Senator from Illinois to state that by the conference report retirement after forty years' service is made compulsory?

Mr. LOGAN. No, it is at the option of the officer.

Mr. HAWLEY. Do I understand the Senator from Illinois that the retirement of officers at the age of sixty-four is to take effect immediately on the passage of the act?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAWLEY. Was it not thought well to give them any grace whatever?

Mr. LOGAN. That was the agreement of the conference. The House insisted on that, and the Senate conferees receded from our amendment in that regard. It was thought after adding two years, making the age sixty-four, as it affected only a very few persons who would probably be retired soon if the bill had not passed, that the Senate had best recede from its amendment. The House were very determined in reference to the proposition.

Mr. MAXEY. I wish to state, in reference to the professors at West Point, that I think they were wrong in making that request. At the same time, of course, I shall vote to concur in the report of the conference. The clause respecting them placed them in a far better condition than they are in without it.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator remembers very well that I agreed with him in regard to that amendment.

Mr. MAXEY. I so understood the Senator.

Mr. LOGAN. But the professors wrote a letter themselves asking that they be placed on the same footing with others.

Mr. MAXEY. I can see no reason why men who are professors should go out because they have reached the age of sixty-four, but they seem to desire it.

Mr. LOGAN. That was their desire, and for that reason the conference agreed to it.

Mr. MAXEY. I have received letters to the same effect from one of them; yet I am wholly unable to comprehend the reasoning. Why a professor, mentally, educationally, and physically competent, should retire from his duties simply because he is sixty-four years old, will be hard to explain to thoughtful men.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. GARLAND in the chair.) The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

POLITICAL ASSESSMENTS.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. PENDLETON on the 5th of June.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President, I agree with much that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] has said, particularly where he proved so conclusively that the Democratic party is responsible for the abuse which has crept into and is being exercised by the Republican party to-day. That part of his address may be very well as a reply to the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. PENDLETON,] but certainly I desire some better warrant for my action than the record of the Democratic party. Has the Senator forgotten that in the evidence which he read the charges were made against that organization in the decay of its existence? Has he forgotten that those facts were the terrible arraignment aimed against it, and when they were brought into the grand assize of this Republic and tried upon those charges they were found guilty and driven from power? Does the Senator desire that the parallel shall be complete?

Mr. President, it seems surprising that no better authority can be adduced than that to which the Senator alludes, that this system was exercised to a greater extent, if you please, in the days of the Democracy than now. That is certainly no justification for a weaker exercise of the power.

The Senator says that the clerk and employé was followed even to the receipt of his money from the Government and it was paid directly from the Treasury for the benefit of the Democratic party. I ask my friend if we do not go nearly as far to-day?

He further states that the assessment is voluntary, and the circulars are sent to prominent citizens throughout the country. I ask the Senator from Maine or the Senator from Iowa if in the circular sent to private citizens any amount is designated? Why is the distinction made when the circular is sent to an employé, and the committee say they hope his contribution will not be less than a certain sum? Is that inserted in the circular which is sent to men of wealth, who are supposed to feel a great interest in the legislation of the country? When the circular is sent to the eleven Bessemer steel manufacturers in the United States are they asked to give 2 per cent. upon their income? Will the Senator from Iowa explain?

Mr. ALLISON. I received a circular the other day from a little college society to which I belonged when a boy, asking me to contribute to a small fund in Cleveland without naming the sum. I could not of course tell how much to contribute until I understood how much they wanted; so I wrote to my young friend, if he would tell me about how much they wanted in all, and about how much they expected from me, I would be obliged to him. He wrote me in reply that he hoped I would be able to give them a hundred dollars, but if I could not, that $25 would be enough; that that was the smallest sum any member of the society had contributed. Now, my friend wants to know if we assess 2 per cent. upon the profits of Bessemer steel? I do not know what the circular contains in that regard, or whether we have issued a circular to the Bessemer steel men, or have written them letters; but I should say, for one, that the Bessemer steel people ought to contribute pretty liberally to such a fund.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes, I think so. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is notice to them to do it!

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator from Iowa has not exactly answered the question, but the point is, the circulars which go to the employés of the Government designate how much they are expected to pay. Am I right in that?

Mr. ALLISON. I think that is true in part, and in part not true.

Mr. VAN WYCK. What part is not true?

Mr. ALLISON. A portion of the officers have a sum designated.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Does the designation extend as high as the President and Cabinet ministers?

Mr. GROOME. It is only the minimum that is designated.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Precisely. It has been said that the circulars are sent to those out of Government employ as well as those in the employ of the Government. Then I want to know why a distinction is made between the circulars sent to employés of the Government and those sent to private citizens, if it is purely voluntary? Will the Senator explain that?

Mr. ALLISON. Am I to be catechised now by the Senator from Nebraska? If we sent a circular, for example, to a rich man like the Senator from Ohio—our circulars, of course, do not go to him—but if we sent circulars to leading Republicans in the country, I do not suppose that we should fix a sum. If we send circulars, however, to men who are in public employment, the circular names a minimum sum, as was stated by the Senator from Maine. The Senator from Nebraska asks me why that is done? It is done simply because we only expect to receive a small sum. Did the Senator from Nebraska hear me when I stated in his presence, or in the presence of the Senate, that in the last campaign of all the employés less than one-tenth have contributed one dollar? I ask him to name a man in public employment who has ever been disturbed in the slightest degree because he did not contribute to a campaign fund?

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Nebraska indulge me for a moment?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to ask the Senator from Iowa why it is that the manufacturers of Bessemer steel ought to contribute—that is what the Senator said—to the Republican party, and very largely?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think I can enlighten my friend from Alabama on that question. If he absolutely states that he is ignorant of the reasons that probably would occur to a Senator, then I would answer him.

Mr. MORGAN. I think I am not.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I agree with my friend, but I am endeavoring to see how far this matter is voluntary. That is what I was proceeding to find out. If it was entirely voluntary I did not understand how it was that a circular sent to a poor man should tell him that he must not give less than a certain sum, and in one sent to a man who was extravagantly wealthy, and probably by special legislation, there should not be some sort of intimation to him that he should give of his riches as the other was to give of his poverty. I wanted to see where the point was about these voluntary contributions.

I think I shall be excused for saying this much or a little more on this line. I think I have a right to say that it is not prudent for the Republican party to adopt that policy which largely contributed to the destruction of the Democracy. I claim the right to occupy that ground as a Republican to-day. I choose as a Republican here, differing with my associates, to take warning from the past. If the party of the gentlemen on the other side has gone to decay, and that too by the voice of the American people, I think it behooves the organization with which I am connected to at least take warning from the lights, the false lights, if you please, which brought them to ruin and destruction. I desire to be excused from any such fatality, or at least from the toleration of any such evil.

I do not like to see one of these circulars sent to a poor clerk in the Treasury Department, saying to him that he is expected to contribute not less than a certain designated amount, which is 2 per cent. on his salary, and the mockery of telling a man whose salary would not probably give bread to his wife and clothing and shoes to his children, that it would be a pleasure and a privilege to him to do this thing.

Senators will excuse me for what I did when I heard that the committee went, not only to the pages of the Senate and House, but also to the day laborer, when in some cases he could work but half time, and at full time would not receive enough to support his family, and mocked him by sending a circular telling him that it is no doubt a privilege to give 2 per cent. of the little pittance which he receives. I do not suppose that I am to be arraigned here or anywhere because I am a Republican and protest against such injustice.

Senators say that money is absolutely necessary in all the ways of life. Certainly it is. It is also said that you cannot stop men from giving voluntary contributions. Certainly not; but if your employés are so enthusiastic about giving this money, why the necessity of sending them any printed circulars? Why the necessity of sending them a circular designating that you do not want to receive less than 2 per cent. of their pay? Make the contributions voluntary; but these are not so. Your circular does not ask for a voluntary contribution. It does pretend on its face to be voluntary, but it is a demand from the Administration under which they serve; it is a demand from the Administration which requires their allegiance as well as their dollars, and nothing else. You can make nothing else of it, and it is a mockery of language to say to them that it is a mere privilege and pleasure to give out of their daily labor this 2 per cent.

I took occasion to introduce a resolution on this subject, thinking it was wise that the committee should ascertain just how much money would be realized from this 2 per cent. I am not able to figure it up. I do not know how much is given, and I do not know how earnest this Administration will be to enforce the demand.

Then in my resolution I desire to inquire whether a demand is made upon the Army and Navy officers of the Government why should the circular be confined to the civil service? This Government is just as dear to a man in the Army or Navy as to the man in the civil service. The Republican party is just as dear to a man in the Army or Navy as it is to one in the civil service. I want to know how great is the extent of this demand and how far-reaching it is. I say to my friend from Maine that the Republican party is not imperiled so much as to render it necessary to extort a few dollars from the hard earnings of these men.

Mr. ALLISON. I agree with you thoroughly.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It is a sort of high tariff all the way through. Take the postal-car clerk, who is absolutely running night and day for $900 a year. When he has paid his expenses upon the road; when he has paid the moderate rent and subsistence for a house for his family, he has not of his monthly earning sufficient left to pay medical attendance. You go to that man and tell him it is a pleasure and a privilege to give 2 per cent. of his pay!

Mr. HALE. What is the trouble with the Senator?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I am saying this in answer to the Senator's statement in arraying the iniquities of the Democratic party as a justification for this method.

Mr. HALE. Who does the Senator know that has been hurt in this matter? He talks about the postal clerks and about other people in the employ of the Government as if they were ground down and driven to pay, and therefore especially deserving of pity. Does the Senator know of any postal clerk who has been harmed? Has any postal clerk complained to him?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Some other clerks have complained.

Mr. HALE. Has any postal clerk complained?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Most of the clerks complained when their pay was reduced by the want of appropriation to $900, and they were compelled to give 2 per cent. of their reduced pay.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator answer my question?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Hear me a moment. I will answer the Senator's question. When any one had to give a percentage it was the man who did the most work and received the least pay, and the consequence was when the appropriation act reduced the salaries of clerks who were receiving $1,300, and $1,050, and $900 they complained, as I said, that they did not have money enough at the end of the month to pay a doctor's bill.

Mr. HALE. I wish the Senator to tell the Senate of a single postal clerk who has complained to him of any exaction in this matter anywhere. I will go further. I wish him to show to the Senate where by any assessment, as he calls it, in the past or at present, by this plan of voluntary contributions, any postal clerk has complained or the postal service has been harmed. I would be glad if the Senator would show the Senate anywhere any real grievance. Do not let him deal in phrases; do not let him talk about pity and about people being ground down, but let him tell the Senate where there has been any real grievance.

Mr VAN WYCK. I will do that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They are afraid to complain, I will suggest to the Senator.

Mr. HALE. How does the Senator know that there have been any grievances?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I have seen postal clerks, probably the Senator has, and every other member of the Senate within the last six months, toiling at their desks, when they were complaining, as they had reason, that the annual pay did not cover the actual yearly expenses. When I again meet these men, or the Senator meets them, he will receive assurance from them that the additional burden or tax of 2 per cent. was not a pleasure and privilege. Not having met postal clerks since this assessment was made, I cannot therefore give any actual experience, but I will as to other clerks without designating them. Other clerks, and many of them in the city of Washington, are protesting against this exaction and the extortion.

I do not want my friend to misunderstand me. I objected that he should undertake to satisfy me that this was right because the Democratic party in the days of its degeneracy approved this practice. That was the Senator's argument. He read from the Covode investigation. Then the people arraigned the Democratic party for doing this thing. Was not that the charge which we made against them in Buchanan's administration, that they sought to corrupt the ballot-box, and did it by forcing money from the office-holders? Am I not correct? Was not that the Senator's argument?

Mr. HALE. The Senator is entirely mistaken,

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then I should like to be corrected.

Mr. HALE. What I said was this, and the Senator ought to have listened——

Mr. VAN WYCK. I did try to listen.

Mr. HALE. I said that no reasonable man if he examines faithfully and fairly into the matter will object to it; that it is purely and essentially voluntary; that no man, woman, or child is harmed, or has been or will be, if he or she declines to pay. I said that the Senator from Ohio had challenged me to show in regard to the Democratic party any course tending to what he called the degradation of political assessments; and, not as an excuse, for I do not ask for any excuse for the Republican committee—I stated in terms that it was not to excuse it, but to show that the Democratic party of the olden time did a thousandfold worse—I pointed out the fact that they ran in paths where we would not pretend to penetrate. I quoted the examples that I cited from the record, and I did it for that purpose. I say to the Senator from Nebraska, and not as an excuse for what we are doing now, for I ask no excuse——

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator read the extracts to condemn the practice of the Democratic party.

Mr. HALE. Certainly I did, and I do condemn that method.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That is just what I mean.

Mr. HALE. Those were different methods from ours.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The only difference was that the Democratic party was bolder than we are. They always have been in such things. They went further than your circular says, but you were more shrewd than they probably. Either the Senator from Maine or the Senator from Iowa said that they were careful of what they did; that they were prudent; that they had eminent counsel to examine this question to see how near they could go to the felon line. They wanted to see just how far they could go and be safe in this matter; that was all. I do not want to force my Republican brethren, only I beg to be excused from following the methods which the Democratic party pursued. It was a thorny road for them, and I propose not to wear that kind of stones in my shoes.

I have felt it my duty to say this much, and I was about saying to my friend when he interrupted me that the Republican party is not reduced to such straits as to have a few dollars wrung from the pockets of the employés of the Government. The Senator differs from me. I think we can do more in twenty-four hours for the Republican party than by such a system of assessments if every office-holder should respond. If we would take a little of the burden off the people of this nation it would help us far more; if we could reduce our tariff it would aid us more than to raise a few dollars from the employés of the Government. At the commencement of this session we had thousands upon thousands of petitions praying us to regulate interstate commerce. Those petitions were referred to the appropriate committee, and there they have slumbered. Just a little healthy legislation in that direction would have helped the Republican party more than the few thousand dollars which we collect in that way. We differ.

One word more, since the Senator has been so persistent in talking about whether there has been force in this matter. It is natural for an administration to want all in its own party to conform to its wishes. We know that to be so. Senators say that no man shall suffer by reason of his unwillingness to pay the few dollars demanded. I trust that will be so, but we know that every administration grows to be intolerant of any contradiction of its wishes. That is natural. The point I make is how voluntary this contribution is. I suppose it is just as voluntary for an employé of the Government to refuse to pay that money as it is for a United States Senator to vote against the confirmation of a President's nominee. They are both voluntary. You are a Senator and you are told that your right is inalienable, that nobody can trample upon it. You are free to vote against measures, principles, and policies, but be careful how you do it. So I take it that it is voluntary with the employé to refuse to pay, but he must be careful how he does it. I do not know whether I draw a parallel, but I only make this statement to illustrate the point.

My friend from Maine wanted to know if anybody had been hurt by this assessment plan. I suppose not. I do not suppose any employé has been hurt, nor do I suppose that any Senator in this body has been hurt, but I know the point has been made all the same. A Senator is free to act. Forsooth, if he acts according to the freedom which is given then he is to be called in question. In my judgment both policies are wrong; it is wrong to extort money from an employé and it is wrong to force a Senator in his vote with the understanding that there is a drawn sword over his head.

Mr. SLATER. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Nebraska, if he will yield for a moment?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. SLATER. I should like to ask whether the Senator can give any information as to how the employés and clerks in the various Departments regard the circular; whether they do not regard it as of necessity compulsory upon them to pay the assessment made?

Mr. VAN WYCK. From the conversation I have had with those who have received these little pleasant attentions, I suppose it is so. I want to keep the Republican party a little better than the Democracy was kept.

I was trying to illustrate to my friend from Maine that if nobody had actually been hurt, at least some were in danger of being hurt, and I think my illustration was proper, because the two cases are on all fours; they are parallel cases as to voluntary action. Gentlemen are told the consequence in this circular; it is distinctly stated that they do not receive any official displeasure in case of payment. That is very much as lawyers would call a negative pregnant. The civil-service members of this body have not rushed to the rescue on this proposition as I supposed they would. No matter; I am not for that kind of civil service; I am free to say that; but I should like a civil service that would preserve the purity of the ballot-box and the freedom of every man who is in the employ of the Government.

I have been, as I have stated, forced to make this statement, so far as it affects Senators, because of the persistence of the Senator from Maine to know if anybody was hurt or if anybody was likely to be hurt. I think it was then a fair illustration. I have already stated that all administrations are alike. You will remember that in 1878 there was a distinguished Senator, who was much esteemed, who is now Postmaster-General, and who is also now much esteemed. Those Senators who were here at the time will remember his strong, bitter, scathing speech against the administration of Hayes. I am speaking of how administrations change and how men change. He arraigned the administration most bitterly. It was a powerful speech, and those members of this body who were not here then and who had not the pleasure of listening to it will excuse me if I read a few choice extracts. He said:

> Mr. President, during the past year we have seen here and everywhere throughout the country small but active squads of political inquisitors busy with the work of assorting the Republican party, gathering into hallowed garners all those who avow themselves supporters of "the President's policy," and pouring unquenchable fire upon all the rest. Poles have been set up at all the cross-roads, flags inscribed with the "President's policy" have been suspended from them, and the self-appointed inquisitors have lurked in convenient jungles to detect who did and who did not uncover under the flag.

That is correct. It is about so with all administrations. There was Senator Howe's statement of the Republican administration of Hayes that there were inquisitors; and it seems there will be under all administrations. I will be excused in carrying out the illustration, because it is a matter of public notoriety that I was asked a few conundrums as to what took place in secret session, and of course as I do not believe in secret session I told very frankly how I voted. Had I been arraigning myself against the President's policy in secret session, except possibly in that case? I have no apology to make for it.

Another thing is true. If there is to be a freedom of action in paying this money it should be distinctly understood, and if there is to be freedom of action in the Senate Chamber that should be as distinctly understood.

The Postmaster-General said, in arraigning Hayes's administration, they were inquisitors. He wanted their private judgment; that was right. But all administrations, I say to my friends, are alike. Changed relations produce changed ideas. He claimed that there should be this private right of judgment; yet, when those same men become the administration they suddenly take the views of all administrations and want an obedience to their power and a yielding to their faith. How sudden the conversion. Of course we have the record of other sudden conversions. Paul's was sudden, but when he was converted he stopped persecuting the Christians. Senator Howe's was sudden, but then he fell to persecuting Republican Christians. I am surprised that the present Postmaster-General should have gone so far in arraigning an administration of his own party bitterly, even arraigning severely the selection of a member of the Cabinet. He said:

> He had selected one other, who, although not a Democrat, was yet not a Republican; who was equally at home with all parties and in all places. By turns he had been everywhere and had espoused and deserted every party. He spoke like an oracle, and his facile speech could be fitted to the vicissitudes of parties as readily as a double-faced satin can be turned to hide the accidents of society. His critiques upon his political associates always gave him popularity with his political opponents; and he resembled the prophets in never being without honor, except where he happened to reside. Inconstant in everything else, he has been constant to his trade: that of politics. He entered upon that before he was of age, and he has pursued it since without variableness or shadow of turning. His first enterprise was to revolutionize the government under which he was born. That failed and he fled. He was for a short time a lawyer in Wisconsin, but without clients. He was a minister at Madrid, but did not reconstruct the diplomacy of the world. He was a major-general, but perverse history refused to record his victories. He was a newspaper correspondent and was not unsuccessful. He was an editor in Detroit, and was not successful. He was transplanted into Missouri, and the generous Republicans of that State bore him into this Senate. That elevation did not prove fatal to him; but his party died, and died not in spite of him but because of him and under blows which he inflicted.

I am trying to convince the minds of my amiable friends here how far "voluntary" goes and what it means. The distinguished Senator then was voluntary to act and he did act. What was the result? Inquisitors were watching him, he said, but the martyr, if you choose to call him so, the complaining disciple, finally came to wear the crown, and then like other Cabinet ministers he became a sort of keeper of the king's conscience. Then do they begin to play the rôle of the inquisitor and do they want it understood that in the Departments are kept the rack and the thumb-screw, the iron boots and the brass collar? Mr. Howe further said, speaking of civil-service reform:

> If so, the President has already abandoned it, or I am misinformed; or if he still believes that means reform, he is the only man in the United States who does believe it. That is not reform. That is tyranny.

He was not a martyr then; he was a patriot.

> Tyranny which no predecessor of his ever attempted and no successor will venture to imitate. Undoubtedly the first obligation of a public officer is to discharge his official duties. If he neglects to do that he ought to be removed. But if he does that, then the President who removes him because he attends a political or religious meeting, or because he acts upon a political committee, or is trustee of a church, uses the power of removal not to regulate the official conduct of the incumbent but to control his personal conduct. That is tyranny, no matter by whom practiced.
> Once it was industriously advertised that public officers should not be removed during their official terms without cause. As already remarked, I believe in that rule. I have myself adhered to it. But the President has flagrantly violated it. That surely cannot be what is meant by reform of the civil service.
> Latterly it has been suggested that the great reform consisted in making appointments to office regardless of the advice of Senators and Representatives from the States, and so smashing the machine. In some conspicuous cases the very reverse has been done. What the rule is upon this or upon any point touching appointments it is not given to finite intelligence to know. But I have four remarks to make upon this last suggestion.
> First. All Presidents have been, all Presidents must be, and President Hayes is guided by some advice; and that advice does come and will come from one or the other of three sources. Either it will be supplied by those whom the several States have selected for their representatives or by those who have not been but aspire to be chosen as representatives, or it will come from office-brokers who have no political aspirations but do a strictly cash business.
> Second. When any President will absolutely relieve representatives from all responsibility for that multitude who want office and do not get it he will shield them from that service which most impairs their usefulness and imperils their continuance of their employments.
> Third. When any President will take upon himself the sole responsibility for all men whom he does and all others whom he does not appoint he will not need to pledge himself against a second term. The best man ever born could not achieve a second term under such a load.

I am as much a supporter of this Administration as these gentlemen who opposed the confirmation of its nominee in Tennessee, to which I before referred. I am with the Administration; I am with the Republican party. We all differ on political questions; we differ on questions of policy, on the tariff, on the revenue, on finance, on the mode of conducting campaigns. Necessarily I am with the Republican party. I cannot go anywhere else. The terrible record produced by my friend from Maine of the corruptions of the Democracy preclude any alliance there. [Laughter.] I neither could go to that very select party which has at its head the distinguished Presiding Officer of this body. [Laughter.] I am in the Republican party, claiming the same privileges I have always enjoyed in that organization. Of course it will be impossible for me to resign my position in this body, because it would violate the precedents of the Senate, and precedents must never be disturbed. The great and only precedent established shows that, and my colleague has never suggested resigning. Neither do I think I should had he done so. Besides, other conditions are not complete. There is no Vice-President to follow into the State and aid in securing a re-election.

Unfortunately every Administration and every Cabinet officer thinks the country depends on them, and, without any disrespect, I think this is usually a little more so in the case of Presidents made by accident rather than by design. [Laughter.] Look at what Johnson did. Will you say, when you take Johnson and his Cabinet, that we could probably gather together in the American Republic a stronger Cabinet, a stronger administration, than that contained? And yet it failed on its "policy." Mistake is made when these men think the Administration is greater, higher, and beyond the party. The party will live and the Administration may die.

Many timid men then thought they must adhere to the fortunes of the Administration. The grand old Republican party, those of it out of office, did not change their views because they were elevated to a higher position, stood by their flag and their principles, and Andrew Johnson and his administration went down before them; and any administration that makes this mistake will go down necessarily.

I do not mean to say there is a parallel. I only want to say that no Administration can put out a standard of policy, and because it is the Administration ask freemen to bow down and worship—uncover to it, as my distinguished friend Howe said.

That is the position in which we stand to-day, and as a firm friend and supporter of the Administration I am not here to attack it and do not seek to do so. The President has discharged his duty satisfactorily to himself and I trust satisfactorily to the people.

I only wanted to show the meaning of this word "voluntary," hoping it will be forcibly illustrated to the employés of this Government so that those who can and those who cannot pay the assessment will have perfect freedom in the exercise of their discretion, and that it will be as distinctly understood that there is perfect freedom inside the Senate Chamber for every member to bring to the discharge of his duties the same free will and voluntary judgment.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, we have spent the day so very profitably to the country that I think we can afford to adjourn very soon. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before putting the motion the Chair will lay before the Senate a message from the President of the United States.

The Acting Secretary read the following message; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of War, dated the 9th instant, and its accompanying copy of a telegram from the general commanding the Military Division of the Pacific and Department of California, relative to the construction of additional quarters, barracks, storehouses, &c., within the limits of the Military Department of Arizona. The Secretary of War recommends that for the purpose of constructing the additional buildings referred to, the sum of their estimated cost ($205,000) be appropriated during the present session of Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 26, 1882.

BANKRUPTCY SYSTEM.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. No. 1382) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM.]

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at five o'clock and twenty-two minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 26, 1882.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

PUBLIC BUILDING, WILLIAMSPORT, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. WALKER. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4460) to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for the United States district court, post-office, and other Government offices at the city of Williamsport, Pennsylvania, and that the same be now put on its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the United States district and circuit courts, post-office, and other Government offices, at the city of Williamsport, Pennsylvania. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $125,000: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than forty feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Pennsylvania shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owners thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think we had better have the regular order.

Mr. WALKER. I ask the gentleman to listen to the reading of the report in this case. The building which this bill proposes to erect is necessary for Federal purposes, for the accommodation of the United States courts, in the business of which twenty-two counties, embracing a population of over 800,000 people, are interested. There has never been a dollar of public money asked for that district. I hope the gentleman will withhold his objection, at least until the report has been read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to the reading of the report, the right to object being reserved. My objection to all these bills is that the amount involved is too large.

The SPEAKER. The right to object will be reserved until the report has been read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1449) for the erection of a public building at Williamsport, Pennsylvania, beg leave to report that they have had the same under consideration, and find the following facts:

Williamsport is situated in the State of Pennsylvania, county of Lycoming, on the west branch of the Susquehanna River. It is the acknowledged center of the lumber interests of the Middle States, and this vast industry coupled with the coal-carrying trade of the bituminous coal-fields lying in counties adjacent on the west and south, and the anthracite coal measures in counties immediate to the east, stimulate a carrying trade which supports the fourteen railroads and three canals now traversing that prosperous section. Its trade is rapidly increasing, in petroleum from westward, and bark, tanneries, agricultural and manufacturing interests in its closer proximity, and the population of the city has now reached 19,934.

The great boom on the Susquehanna is located here, extending up the river four miles, and at one time in 1881 contained about 200,000,000 feet of lumber in the log; nearly 350,000,000 feet of lumber were here manufactured during that year; for a long term of years the annual product has exceeded 200,000,000 feet. In addition to the numerous saw-mills, the finest in the world, are extensive manufactories in wood, iron, and one, the only rubber works in the State, with a capacity of 3,000 pairs of boots and shoes per day. There are six national banks, two daily and nine weekly newspapers, thirty-two churches, nine public schools, and others of academic proportions, and hotel accommodations the finest in the State, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia excepted.

The United States court is held at Williamsport for the accommodation of the citizens of twenty-two counties, which, by the census of 1880, contain a population of 834,490. This is greater than any one of the Eastern States, excepting Massachusetts, and more than any one of the fourteen States named in Exhibit B.

The United States courts are held in a small room which is used by and contains the library of the Law Association of Lycoming County, and which will not comfortably seat one hundred people. It is located in the second story of the county court-house. The United States courts have been held here more than forty years. The internal-revenue office is in a hat store. No fire-proof accommodations for court records and valuable post-office contents have ever been provided by the Government.

The net proceeds of the Williamsport post-office for 1881 was $20,270.37. It is the depository for nearly all the post-offices of the third and fourth class in that Congressional district, comprising six counties, with a population of over 184,000, and also the offices in Clinton, Centre, and part of Elk Counties.

The receipts of the internal-revenue office for the year 1881 were:

Special tax	$20,069 88
Tax on beer and cigars	29,639 14
Whisky in bond	6,000 00
Sale of distilled spirits	10,000 00
Total	65,709 02

At the September term of 1880 there were one hundred and twenty-six cases on the trial list at Williamsport of civil business alone. This does not include business in the district court, namely, all criminal cases and causes arising under the tax and internal-revenue laws of the United States, of which there are always large lists at each sitting of the court.

In view of these facts the committee recommend that the erection of the building proposed be authorized, and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. Reserving the right to object, I will say that gentlemen around me think, on account of Williamsport being a place where the Federal courts are held and a town of very considerable importance, an appropriation of some amount for a public building there would be proper. While I think that an appropriation of $100,000 is much too large, I shall feel constrained to withdraw my objection if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER] will consent that the bill be amended by striking out $125,000 and inserting $100,000.

Mr. WALKER. I say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and to the House, that not one of the bills of this character presented and considered possesses greater merit than this, and I believe that reflection and investigation would so convince any gentleman, but rather than jeopard the interest of so large a number of my people I will reluctantly consent to accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER. It is moved to amend the bill by striking out the words "and twenty-five," so as to make the amount of the appropriation $100,000. If there be no objection, this amendment will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLS. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will now withdraw his objection to giving $75,000 for a public building at Houston, Texas.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WALKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OBSTRUCTIONS IN HUDSON RIVER, NEW YORK.

On motion of Mr. PAGE, by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R.

No. 5953) authorizing the removal of certain obstructions in the Hudson River opposite Poughkeepsie, in the State of New York, was taken from the House Calendar and recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

PUBLIC BUILDING, OXFORD, MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. MANNING. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4179) for the erection of a public building at Oxford, Mississippi, and that the same be now put on its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the United States courts, post-office, and other Government offices, at the city of Oxford, in the State of Mississippi. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $50,000: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than forty feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Mississippi shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same during the time the United States shall be or remain the owners thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

During the reading of the bill,

Mr. RICH said: I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. MANNING. I think the gentleman from Indiana will not insist on the call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RICH] objects.

Mr. MANNING. I hope the gentleman from Michigan will not object, at least until he hears the merits of this case——

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for.

Subsequently,

Mr. MANNING said: I understand that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RICH] is willing to withdraw his objection.

Mr. RICH. I am willing that the reading of the bill shall be concluded, reserving the right to object.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. MANNING. I wish to say to the gentleman from Michigan that for over half a century court has been held at Oxford, Mississippi, or in the immediate vicinity. There are twenty-two large counties embraced within the jurisdiction of the court, comprising 11,000 square miles, about $40,000,000 of taxable wealth, and between three and four hundred thousand people. The judge of the court has written a most earnest letter in favor of the passage of this bill; the clerk of the court has done likewise. It is manifestly important that a public building should be erected for the purpose of holding the court at that place and for occupation by the postmaster.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in this bill I have asked for an appropriation of only $50,000. The size of the town——

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICH. There is.

Mr. McMILLIN. I demand the regular order.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. THOMPSON] desires to make a personal explanation.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, in an appendix to the speech delivered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] on the 22d of this month, I find among other statements one that the vote in favor of seating Mr. MACKEY in the contested-election case from South Carolina was but 147, while the RECORD of June 1, page 18, shows that the vote in the affirmative was 150. Secondly, in the same statement, the gentleman has placed me among the "filibusterers," and on that occasion as not voting. Ordinarily I might have little objection to that, but under the circumstance I believe it is due to myself to have that corrected, as the RECORD I have already referred to shows the fact I was here, and not only present, but that I voted in the affirmative.

A MEMBER. And made a speech.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. And furthermore, I say I have voted on every election case when the yeas and nays have been called during this session.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called, which cuts off all unanimous consent.

Mr. CRAPO. I wish to ask a parliamentary question as to the order of business. If there be no objection, I should like to take from the Speaker's table House bill No. 4167, in relation to national banks, for the purpose of moving non-concurrence in the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. McMILLIN. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. CRAPO. If the gentleman will allow me to submit the motion——

Mr. McMILLIN. I demand the regular order of business, and I do it for the purpose of preventing the consideration of that national-bank bill.

The SPEAKER. The call for the regular order cuts off unanimous consent.

Mr. CRAPO. If the gentleman from Tennessee will hear me, I would like to make a statement with a view to advance the consideration of the public business.

Mr. McMILLIN. I am opposed to the gentleman's bill, and object because I am opposed to the bill.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 5559) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 8, 11, 14, 21, and 22.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 9, 10, 12, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 29, 30, 31, 32, and 33, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 1 of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment strike out the words "passage of this act" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "First day of July, 1882." And in line 5 strike out "section" and insert in lieu thereof "sections," and add, after the word "sixty-one," the words "and twelve hundred and seventy-four;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert before the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment the following: "The necessity for such travel to be certified by the officer issuing such orders;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the word "five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "four;" and on page 3 of the bill, in line 20, strike out "ten" and insert in lieu thereof "fifteen;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out, on page 4 of the bill, in line 4, the word "corps" and insert in lieu thereof the word "service;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "ten" and insert in lieu thereof "twenty-five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof "seventy-five," and add at the end of the matter inserted by amendment numbered 37, page 14, line 26 of the bill, the following: "And the Chief of Ordnance shall give attention to such programme of tests as may be submitted by the American Society of Civil Engineers, and the record of such tests shall be furnished said society to be by them published at their own expense;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 5 of said amendment strike out "six" and insert in lieu thereof "seven;" and in same line strike out the words "per month," and in line 13 strike out the words "and paid to the trader and laundryman;" and the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN A. LOGAN,
M. W. RANSOM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

BENJ. BUTTERWORTH,
J. C. BURROWS,
E. JNO. ELLIS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The statement which under the rule accompanies the report will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the Army appropriation bill submit the following detailed statement in explanation of the conference report submitted.

The effect of the action recommended on the amendments of the Senate will be, if ratified by the two Houses, as follows:

On amendment 1: Makes a verbal correction in the text of the bill.

On amendment 2: Strikes out the following: "That in computing the length of service for additional pay the time of service on the retired list shall in no case be computed, nor shall any additional pay be allowed for such service;" and inserts the following: "That from and after the 1st day of July, 1882, the 10 per cent. increase for length of service allowed to certain officers by section 1262 of the Revised Statutes shall be computed on the yearly pay of the grade fixed by sections 1261 and 1274 of the Revised Statutes."

On amendments 3 and 4: Provides that mileage shall be paid to officers for travel over the shortest traveled routes on duty under orders, the necessity for such travel to be certified by the officer issuing such order, and limits the whole amount of mileage for 1883 to $180,000.

On amendment 5: Fixes the compensation of paymasters' clerks at $1,400 per annum each, and makes the appropriation for paymasters' messengers $15,000.

On amendment 7: Fixes total amount for pay of the Army at $12,200,000, and makes verbal correction in text of the bill.

On amendments 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 14, 15, 16, and 17: Makes the text of the bill in reference to the retirement of officers read as follows: "That on and after the passage of this act, when an officer has served forty years either as an officer or soldier in the regular or volunteer service, or both, he shall, if he make application therefor to the President, be retired from active service and placed on the retired list, and when an officer is sixty-four years of age, he shall be retired from active service and placed on the retired list: Provided further, That the General of the Army, when retired, shall be retired without reduction in his current pay and allowances; and no act now in force shall be so construed as to limit or restrict the retirement of officers as herein provided for: Provided further, That any officer who is supernumerary to the permanent organization of the Army as provided by law may, at his own request, be honorably discharged from the Army, and shall thereupon receive one year's pay for each five years of his service, but no officer shall receive more than three years' pay in all."

On amendment 18: Inserts the following: "That section 3 of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes,' approved June 23, 1879, providing that the examiner of State claims in the Office of the Secretary of War shall have, while on such duty, the pay, emoluments, and allowances of mounted officers one grade higher than that held by him in his regiment or corps, is hereby repealed."

On amendments 19 and 20: After the provision that subsistence stores may be sold to companies, detachments, and hospitals at cost prices, strikes out the words "not including cost of transportation," as proposed by the Senate, and provides that the cost price shall be construed to mean the invoice price of the last lot of that variety received prior to the first day of the month on which the sale is made.

On amendment 21: Inserts the following: "That no part of the sum appropriated by this act shall be used or expended in the investigation of claims under the act of July 4, 1864, entitled 'An act to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermaster's stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States' and acts and resolutions amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto."

On amendment 22: Fixes amount of appropriation for incidental expenses of the Quartermaster's Department at $911,000.

On amendment 23: Fixes amount of appropriation for transportation of the Army at $4,164,000.

On amendments 24 and 25: Makes text of the bill in reference to payment for Army transportation over land-grant railroads read as follows: "For the payment for Army transportation lawfully due such land-grant railroads as have not received aid in Government bonds, to be adjusted by the proper accounting officers in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court in cases decided under such land-grant acts, but in no case shall more than 50 per cent. of the full amount of the service be paid, $125,000: Provided, That compensation shall be computed upon the basis of the tariff rates for like transportation performed for the public at large, and shall be accepted as in full for all demands for said services: And provided further, That any such land-grant roads as shall file with the Secretary of the Treasury their written acceptance of this provision shall hereafter be paid for like services as herein provided; and all accounts of such railroads for services heretofore rendered shall be audited and paid as herein provided upon application of such roads and their acceptance of such sum in full of all claims for such services; and all laws inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed."

On amendment 26: Appropriates $100,000 for the erection of an Army and Navy hospital at Hot Springs, Arkansas.

On amendment 27: Inserts the following: "For transporting, mounting, proving, and testing guns, including small-arms, constructed at private expense, said expenditure to be made in the discretion of the Secretary of War, $15,000.

On amendments 28 and 29: Appropriates for ammunition, tools, and material for target practice, $25,000.

On amendment 30: Appropriates for purchase and manufacture of ordnance stores, $15,000.

On amendments 31, 32, and 33: Appropriates for horse equipments for cavalry, harness for field and machine guns, and for cavalry forge-carts, $30,000.

On amendment 34: Appropriates for grading grounds, erecting magazines and other buildings at the powder depot, $75,000, and also provides that the Chief of Ordnance shall give attention to such programme as may be submitted by the American Society of Civil Engineers, and the record of such tests shall be furnished said society to be by them published at their own expense.

On amendment 38: Insert the following:

"SEC. 3. That traders and laundrymen at depots for recruits in the Army be, and hereby are, authorized to furnish such recruits, on credit, with laundry work and such articles as may be necessary for their cleanliness and comfort, at a total cost not to exceed $7 in value per man. That muster and pay rolls be made out showing the amounts the recruits respectively owe to the traders and laundrymen, and signed by them before leaving the depot, and that the traders and laundrymen be paid on such rolls, the amount paid for each recruit to be noted accordingly on the muster and descriptive rolls, in order that it may be withheld, after he joins his company, by the paymaster, at the first subsequent payment, under such rules and regulations as may be adopted by the War Department: Provided, That this provision shall apply only to recruits on their enlistment, and the credit shall only be allowed on the written order of the regular recruiting officer at said station."

The amount of the bill as it passed the House was $27,192,000, as it passed the Senate it was $27,307,000, and as agreed upon in conference it amounts to $27,258,000, or $49,000 less than it passed the Senate.

BENJ. BUTTERWORTH,
J. C. BURROWS,
E. JNO. ELLIS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The conference report was adopted.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

land grants to that railroad was presented and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I now ask consent to withdraw that memorial; it has not been acted upon.

There was no objection; and leave was granted accordingly.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference has been concluded.

Mr. PACHECO. I ask unanimous consent to take up House bill No. 77——

Mr. KELLEY. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The call for the regular order is in the nature of an objection.

ATLAS OF COLORADO.

Mr. VAN HORN, from the Committee on Printing, reported back with a favorable recommendation the following resolution of the Senate; which was read, considered, and concurred in:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That the copies of the Atlas of Colorado heretofore ordered for the use of the two Houses of Congress and the Department of the Interior be suitably bound by the Public Printer, for distribution in accordance with the resolution ordering the same.

TORNADOES IN THE WESTERN STATES.

Mr. VAN HORN, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the joint resolution (H. R. No. 240) for printing the report on the subject of tornadoes in the Western States.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That 3,000 copies of the report of John P. Finley, made under the direction of the Signal Service, on the subject of tornadoes, be printed; 1,500 of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 750 for the use of the Senate, and 750 for the use of the Signal Service Bureau.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

PRODUCTION OF GOLD AND SILVER.

Mr. VAN HORN also, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That 15,000 copies of the report of the Director of the Mint on the annual production of gold and silver in the United States be printed, 8,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 3,000 for the use of the Senate, and 4,000 for the use of the Director of the Mint.

BINDING OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. VAN HORN also, from the same committee, reported a joint resolution (H. R. No. 247) to provide for the printing of public documents for bindingand distribution to those entitled to receive them; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That whenever any document or report shall be ordered to be printed by Congress, there shall be, in addition to the number in each case stated, the "usual number" of copies for binding and distribution among those entitled to receive them; and this shall apply to all unexecuted orders now in the office of the Public Printer.

Mr. PAGE. I would like to hear some explanation of this.

Mr. VAN HORN. Until very recently it has been the uniform practice when the publication of any document was ordered to bind one copy in leather for the use of each member, and also copies for certain officers of the House. Under a construction of some legislation passed a year or two ago that custom has ceased. This resolution is designed simply to restore the custom and furnish to each member of Congress bound copies of documents which may be ordered to be printed.

Mr. ATKINS. I object to this until we understand what it is.

The SPEAKER. This is a privileged report. It is subject to debate, but not to objection.

Mr. PAGE. I understand that some time ago an order was made by the House directing the Public Printer to bind in calf or morocco certain documents for the use of members. That order continued in force for perhaps a month or two——

Mr. NEAL. A day or two.

Mr. ATKINS. A month or so.

Mr. PAGE. The order was rescinded by a resolution of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. ATKINS.] In the mean time, however, several members had documents bound for them, while others failed to have the same privilege. Now, I want the law to operate equally, so that all members may have equal privileges. The right to have these books bound should be enjoyed by all members or by none.

Mr. ATKINS. The motive which I had in introducing the resolution to repeal the order referred to by the gentleman from California (which order was made by the House upon the recommendation of the Committee on Public Printing, and was in force only a month or two before it was repealed) was to remedy what I considered an abuse. I understood that some members had a great many volumes at the Printing Office to be bound—not one volume each, but a great many, and to be bound in the costliest manner. I considered that an abuse. If some members have done that, I see no reason why the practice should continue.

A MEMBER. It is done for the Senate.

Mr. ATKINS. Well, Senators assert for themselves exclusive privileges not enjoyed by members of the House.

Mr. VAN HORN. This resolution has nothing to do with the subject spoken of by the gentleman from Tennessee. That was a resolution introduced by the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. MANNING,] adopted by the House, and subsequently repealed. Members are aware that until the last two or three years when public documents have been ordered to be printed, in whatever shape, each member has received a copy bound in leather. Under some legislation adopted a year or two ago it has been held there is no authority for binding these copies for members. This resolution, which simply restores that custom, was presented at the suggestion of the Clerk of the House, who finds it impossible under existing regulations to have copies of documents bound for members as heretofore.

Mr. ATKINS. The House might infer from the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. VAN HORN] that I was mistaken in my statement. The resolution to which I referred was introduced by the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. MANNING,] but was reported back by the Committee on Public Printing with a favorable recommendation and adopted by the House.

Mr. VAN HORN. That resolution was to allow members to have certain binding done for themselves or on their order. This resolution simply restores the old custom with reference to furnishing to each member a bound copy of various documents ordered to be published.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to ask the gentleman from Missouri one question. Does the resolution as now reported provide that a copy of all documents——

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I ask that the resolution be read again.

Mr. VAN HORN. The resolution simply restores a practice which existed almost from the beginning of the Government, but which lapsed a year or two ago by reason of some defect in legislation.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Now, Mr. Speaker, if I correctly understand this matter, I think the House should pause before they adopt it. I believe that there are a great many hundred thousand dollars of expenditure underneath this proposition. I would like to have it read before I surrender the floor. I may be wrong, but I had better be wrong and be corrected in time. Let the resolution be read.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. If I understand that aright it is just this—and the gentleman from Missouri explains it in that way unless I misunderstand him entirely—it is that any of us may have bound in leather any of the documents issued by order of Congress and printed at the Public Printing Office.

Mr. SPRINGER. No; that is not it at all.

Mr. WILSON. The gentleman from Massachusetts does not understand correctly.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Wait a moment. Then what is it?

Mr. HASKELL. It is to give this House the volumes every gentleman has received at the end of Congress bound in sheep; the volumes which have always been issued at the end of every Congress—the executive documents this House has ordered to be printed bound in sheep. This resolution is to continue that same distribution of executive documents bound in sheep. It is not to allow any individual member to have anything else bound. It only continues the practice which has been in existence for fifty years and enables each member to receive from the Clerk of the House the same executive documents members of Congress have heretofore always received.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It only relates to those executive documents which have always been distributed in the same way to members of Congress.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I hear the gentleman from Kansas, but if this does not mean anything more than what he says, then, unless I misunderstood it, we have had those volumes already.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. This resolution provides for this and future Congresses.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. May I have the floor? I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me. I wish to state my proposition. I have had sent to me bound copies of the Clerk's documents, a great many volumes of the Forty-fifth Congress, and I have also been notified so many volumes are ready for me of the Forty-sixth Congress, all bound, bound sufficiently well, I submit, for anybody's use.

Mr. HASKELL. Very well; but that has been repealed, and this is an order to restore it. If the gentleman will wait a moment he will get the wrong impression out of his head.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, if I may have the privilege which the gentleman from Kansas will accord to me, I will not interfere with him at any time. Now, if it does not mean anything more than the binding of the Clerk's documents—and I ask the gentleman from Missouri whether I am correct or not?—if it means nothing more than that, then why the necessity for any legislation in that regard?

Mr. VAN HORN. I will state, if the gentleman will allow me.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Certainly; I only want information.

Mr. VAN HORN. The Clerk of the House drew this resolution and had it referred to the Committee on Printing, and he came before that committee and stated that the practice had been for the last fifty years, as the gentleman from Kansas has stated it, to bind for members of the Senate and House copies of all executive documents in sheep or leather, but that owing to some change last year he found he was unable to carry out that former practice, and that the Government Printing Office claimed the authority for doing so had been taken away. This resolution, drawn by the Clerk of the House, referred to that committee, was reported back by us merely with the view of restoring the old practice.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Is it not a fact that we have had the same documents bound for the Forty-sixth Congress?

Mr. VAN HORN. The Clerk says it is impossible to have them bound for this Congress, because there is no authority for so doing. This is to restore the authority as it was before.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. What does "unexecuted orders" mean?

Mr. VAN HORN. There are some documents lying there which cannot be bound.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I know this House has been expending immense amounts of money at the Government Printing Office it would be well some time to put a stop to. I was instrumental in having the resolution rescinded providing for general binding, and I am glad the House put a stop to it. I do not want the power restored in another way, and I believe this re-enacts the whole thing.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to recommit this to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. VAN HORN. What for?

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to recommit.

Mr. VAN HORN. I hold the floor.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. VAN HORN. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now move to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that it is not now in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. It was before the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri was entitled to the floor to demand the previous question. There will be a time when the gentleman from Indiana can move to recommit, if he desires to do so, before the matter is disposed of.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time

Mr. VAN HORN. I now demand the previous question on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. Pending that I move to recommit it to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 32, noes 72.

So the motion to recommit was not agreed to.

Mr. VAN HORN. I demand the previous question on the passage of the joint resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The joint resolution was passed.

Mr. VAN HORN moved to reconsider the several votes by which the joint resolution and the preceding resolutions were passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HISCOCK, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 6675) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to reserve all points of order upon that bill.

The SPEAKER. The points of order will be reserved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. NEAL. I now demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the consideration of business reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. KELLEY. I will have to raise, if admissible, the question of consideration, and move to dispense with the morning hour for the purpose of going into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the unfinished business.

The SPEAKER. The question of consideration cannot be raised against this special order, which was adopted by a two-thirds vote of the House under a suspension of the rules, and which assigned this day for the consideration of business reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia. If, however, the chairman of the committee does not insist upon the execution of the special order at this time, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania to make the motion.

Mr. NEAL. There have been for the consideration of business for the District of Columbia practically but parts of four days during this whole session. The committee have matured a large amount of business, and it is a matter of very considerable importance to the citizens here in this District that such business should be disposed of. Now, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania is willing to allow the committee to proceed for two or three hours I think we will be able to get through with the bulk of the business which we desire to present, and will then waive our rights for the remainder of the day. Or if the gentleman from Pennsylvania thinks that he can dispose of the unfinished business within the next two hours I am perfectly willing to yield to him to proceed with that business, with the understanding that the committee shall rise at the expiration of two hours and the remainder of the day be devoted to the District business.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Ohio does not insist upon the execution of the special order the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania to move that the House go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the unfinished business.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to limit the time in which this bill is to be considered.

Mr. KELLEY. If the gentleman will permit me, the only understanding I can make is this, that I will do all I can to expedite the passage of this bill, and if it reaches the point where the yeas and nays shall be ordered I am perfectly willing to waive the final vote upon the bill until to-morrow morning.

But I cannot now indicate what time will be consumed in the further discussion of this bill. There are many gentlemen, I believe, who desire to be heard with respect to certain amendments. At the same time there are several gentlemen here who must leave the city. I have heard from gentlemen on both sides of the House that the bill must be pressed to a conclusion without delay, for they have engagements which will take them away. The bill ought to receive the fullest consideration possible and the largest vote. It is an important bill and I cannot therefore make any terms which will embarrass gentlemen in connection with it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I hope, then, we will go on with the consideration of District of Columbia business to-day.

Mr. RANDALL. We had better proceed with the unfinished business.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from Ohio will insist upon proceeding with the regular order.

Mr. NEAL. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow the Committee on the District of Columbia until a quarter past two o'clock——

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. No, take the whole day for the District business; I object to any such arrangement.

Mr. KELLEY. Then I move to dispense with the special order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain that motion at this time.

Mr. KELLEY. Then I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that as this is a special order providing that the Committee on the District of Columbia may present for consideration such business as they shall select, which order was made under a suspension of the rules, the question of consideration cannot be raised except as against any particular measure which the committee may see proper to call up. The Chair has already stated, however, if the gentleman from Ohio does not insist upon the special order, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania to move to dispense with the morning hour to go into Committee of the Whole on the unfinished business.

Mr. NEAL. I cannot in justice to the people of the District of Columbia waive their rights, which have been accorded to them by fixing this day for the consideration of their business. We have given away already two days, and I must object to any further delay.

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that the Committee on the District of Columbia have the right to the floor to-day, except by unanimous consent——

Mr. KELLEY. Then I ask unanimous consent that the special order of business be postponed until to-morrow, and that the unfinished business be taken up in order that we may proceed to a conclusion with the pending bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I object. I object to pressing this matter through the House in such haste.

Mr. CANNON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to ask, if we enter upon the consideration of business reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, will it not be in order, after having entered upon the consideration of any particular measure, for the gentleman from Pennsylvania to move to postpone its consideration, and likewise with any other matter reported from the committee, so that eventually the several bills reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia may be passed over in that manner, and the House in that way reach without delay the consideration of the unfinished business?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hold that as this day was set apart for the consideration of business from the Committee on the District of Columbia, the question of consideration might be raised as against any particular measure the committee may call up for consideration, but this would not cut the committee off from calling up any other matter they might see fit to present at this time under the previous order of the House. The Chair will state if the District of Columbia business is entered upon, and the committee at any time to-day has nothing further to present, then the regular order would come up.

Mr. HISCOCK. A motion to postpone the special order to a fixed time, I understand, would be in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that motion could not be entertained, this being an order made under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. HISCOCK. Why is it unlike dispensing with the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. The morning hour may be dispensed with for the reason that the rules expressly provide that that can be done.

Mr. CAMP. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CAMP. Wherein does this differ from a motion to dispense with private business on a day set apart for that business?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will give the same answer as that already given, that the rules provide that by a two-thirds vote the House can dispense with private business on Friday.

Mr. KNOTT. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KNOTT. I desire to know whether, this being District day, the District Committee has absolute control of the business of the House, or whether any other member might not call up business affecting the District that may be on the Calendar?

The SPEAKER. In answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Kentucky the Chair will call attention to the terms of the order, which provides that this day shall be set apart for the consideration of such business as may be presented by the Committee on the District of Columbia. That is the language of the order, and it gives that committee the right to call up such business as it chooses on this day.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the regular order.

Mr. CAMP. Has not the House the right to dispense with that order by a two-thirds vote?

The SPEAKER. This is not suspension day, and the rules do not provide for dispensing with this order.

Mr. CAMP. Cannot the question of consideration be raised?

The SPEAKER. The question of consideration might be raised as against any bill presented by the committee, but not as against the order itself.

Mr. McCOOK. Is it in order to rescind the previous action of the House as to this matter?

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent would rescind it; or, if the committee should conclude its business at any time during the day, then the order is executed.

Mr. KELLEY. I wish to ask how long would the District Committee require to-day?

Mr. NEAL. If you will give us until half past two o'clock we will then yield the floor.

Mr. CANNON. The members of the House will then be scattered.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I rise to a question of order. The confusion is so great that I cannot hear what is being proposed.

The SPEAKER. The House will come to order.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman from Ohio agrees to go on till half past two, and then to yield the floor.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I object to any agreement.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on the District of Columbia has control of the floor to-day for such business as it may present. If the committee declines to present any business the Chair will entertain the next matter in order.

Mr. ROBESON. I understood the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] to say if the House allowed him until half past two, then he would retire and let the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] go on with his bill. I wish to know if that is the gentleman's statement. If not, we may be obliged to antagonize his measure when it comes up.

Mr. NEAL. That is the statement I made.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the regular order.

FILLING UP GROUNDS SOUTH OF THE CAPITOL.

Mr. NEAL. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to move that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 159) making an appropriation for filling up, draining, and placing in good sanitary condition the ground south of the Capitol along the line of the old canal, and for other purposes, and that the same be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. That is a wholly immaterial matter.

Mr. NEAL. We want to get this joint resolution off the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union will be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution, and it will be laid on the table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. NEAL. I now yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from West Virginia, [Mr. HOGE.]

CRIERS IN DISTRICT SUPREME COURT.

Mr. HOGE rose.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to know, before the gentleman from West Virginia commences, what business is before the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will learn when it is presented.

Mr. HOGE. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to move to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S No. 1158) to authorize the supreme court of the District of Columbia to appoint two additional criers, and that the same be put upon its passage.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to know if that bill is on the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. It is. It is called up for present consideration by virtue of the right of the committee under the order under which the House is now acting.

Mr. CANNON. Does the resolution include business on the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. It includes all business of any kind that may be presented by the Committee on the District.

Mr. CANNON. I should be glad to hear the order read—the resolution of the House which makes it in order to go to the Speaker's table out of order and take anything from it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state again that the resolution which was adopted under a suspension of the rules authorizes the Committee on the District of Columbia to call up for consideration any business relating to the District of Columbia.

Mr. ATKINS. Does that apply to any other committee?

The SPEAKER. It applies to the District of Columbia Committee alone. The Clerk will read the order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the second and fourth Mondays of each calendar month hereafter during the continuance of the Forty-seventh Congress, after the call of States and Territories for bills and joint resolutions, be, and the same are hereby, set apart for the consideration of such business as may be presented by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CANNON. My point of order is this: while the committee has the right to have business considered to-day, it must be under the rules of the House; that it is not in order at this time for the committee to go to the Speaker's table for business, except by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the uniform practice in this Congress and also in other Congresses, under such orders or resolutions, has been to allow the committee that has the control of the business to call up for consideration such business as it may see fit, whether from its own committee, from the calendars of the House, or from the Speaker's table, wherever it may be.

Mr. CANNON. And does it dispense with the consideration of business in Committee of the Whole, and allow its consideration in the House?

The SPEAKER. It allows the consideration of everything in the House, even though under other circumstances it might be subject to the point of order that its first consideration must be in the Committee of the Whole. That has been frequently decided, not only during this session of Congress but in former Congresses.

Mr. NEAL. We have been doing it all the time.

The SPEAKER. It vacates all rules.

Mr. McCOOK. Is it simply within the discretion of the Committee of the District of Columbia to call up any bill from the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. To call up such business as the committee may direct.

Mr. McCOOK. Suppose that they call up a bill for the retirement of General Grant?

Mr. NEAL. That has nothing to do with the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The business called up must relate to the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAMP. I make the point that the special order does not dispense with the rules of the House. I respectfully submit that all the special order does is to authorize the Committee on the District of Columbia to call up business in pursuance of the other rules which are prevailing.

The SPEAKER. By the terms of the order all the other rules are suspended. The Clerk will read the bill called up by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HOGE] in pursuance of the instructions of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (H. R. No. 1158) to authorize the supreme court of the District of Columbia to appoint two additional criers was then read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the supreme court of the District of Columbia be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to appoint two additional criers to attend the sessions of the said court in its different branches to which they may be severally assigned by the chief-justice thereof. The compensation of the said criers shall be each $4 per day during actual attendance upon the said court, payable as the other officers of the court are paid.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question was upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Upon that question I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes 16.

So (no further count being called for) the bill was passed.

Mr. HOGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUNISHMENT OF HOUSE-BREAKING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. URNER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 6007, a bill (H. R. No. 6676) to more effectually punish house-breaking in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That every person, his aiders, abettors, and counselors, who shall, either in the night or day, break into and enter, or who shall in the night time enter without breaking into any dwelling-house, bank, store, warehouse, shop, stable, or other building, or any vessel, canal-boat, or other water-craft, or any railroad car, in the District of Columbia, with the intent to commit any larceny or other felony or a misdemeanor therein, shall be imprisoned not less than one year nor more than ten years.

SEC. 2. That every person who shall enter any dwelling-house, bank, store, warehouse, shop, stable, or other building, or any vessel or canal-boat or other craft, or any railroad car, or any yard where lumber, coal, or any sort of goods and chattels are deposited and kept for the purpose of trade, in the District of Columbia, with the intent maliciously to injure or destroy any of the buildings, vessels, boats, or cars aforesaid, or any part thereof, or any property or effects deposited or kept in or upon any such yard, or with the intent to slay, kill, maim, or assault any person being in or upon any of the premises aforesaid, upon conviction thereof shall be imprisoned not less than one year nor more than fifteen years.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. URNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLAIMS AGAINST THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. NEAL. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to call up from the House Calendar for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. No. 4184) to amend the ninth section of the act entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of all outstanding claims against the District of Columbia, and conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear the same, and for other purposes," approved June 16, 1880.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the ninth section of the act entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of all outstanding claims against the District of Columbia, and conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear the same, and for other purposes," approved June 16, 1880, be, and is hereby, amended by striking out the last word thereof, "certificates," and inserting in lieu thereof the word "conversion." And the Treasurer of the United States is hereby directed to redeem all such outstanding certificates as provided for by law, and to pay to the holders of all such as he may have heretofore redeemed interest upon the same at the legal rate, after deducting therefrom such rate of interest as he may have already paid.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust there will be some explanation of this bill. I do not recollect the language which it is proposed to strike out of the existing law.

Mr. NEAL. I will explain it in a moment. In 1880, two years ago, there was passed a bill to redeem the outstanding certificates of the District of Columbia, called the board-of-audit certificates. The supreme court of the District of Columbia had decided, upon suits brought upon these board of audit certificates, that the holders were entitled to interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. That bill went to a committee of conference, and in preparing the report, by some means—we do not know how—the word "certificates" was put in the place of the word "conversion," by which the rate of interest might be considered at 7.65 per annum. When the matter came before the Comptroller of the Treasury he discovered the error, but paid the interest at the rate of 3.65 per annum, although the supreme court of the District had decided that the holders of the certificates were entitled to interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum.

The Senate Committee on the District of Columbia has reported a precisely similar bill. I have here a letter from General Hunton, who was a member of the committee of conference. I will read a sentence or two of this letter:

> I am clear in my recollection that the construction you maintain is that intended. * * * The parties holding certificates get 6 per cent. up to the date of the certificates and 3.65 afterward. This seems to be the fair construction of the language, but does not properly represent the intention of the framers of the bill according to my recollection. It was intended to give 6 per cent. up to the date of the conversion of the certificates; and this also strikes me as being the true measure of justice to these parties.

Now, this bill simply provides that these certificates may be funded as the courts of the District have decided they are entitled to be according to the law under which they were issued. It is a simple act of justice to some of the creditors of the District.

Mr. ATKINS. How much money is involved in this bill?

Mr. NEAL. I cannot tell the amount. There are some fifty or sixty holders of these board-of-audit certificates.

Mr. ATKINS. As I understand, the effect of this bill is to allow 6 per cent. interest to certain parties who have taken these certificates at 3.65.

Mr. NEAL. It is a proposition to change the law so as to conform to the intention of the framers of it.

Mr. ATKINS. And increases the interest of these parties from 3.65 per cent. to 6 per cent.

Mr. NEAL. It gives these parties just what the supreme court of the District has decided they are entitled to.

Mr. ATKINS. It will involve at least $100,000.

Mr. NEAL. No, it will not. These board-of-audit certificates do not amount to any such sum.

Mr. ATKINS. I hope the bill will be voted down.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is best to leave the law as it is.

Mr. NEAL. I have only this to say: the passage of this bill is a simple act of justice to the holders of these certificates. They have furnished material to the District; they have waited for years for their money. I know one firm in Ohio that furnished $50,000 worth of drain-pipes upon which they lost money. They expected to get their money at the time. They have been obliged to wait for their money, and under the law as it now stands have received only 3.65 per cent. interest, while the supreme court of the District, had suit been brought, would have allowed them 6 per cent.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is a very great hardship on the Federal Government to be obliged to pay interest at all on these certificates. The parties should be satisfied with interest at the rate of 3.65.

Mr. NEAL. If these parties sue upon the certificates they receive 6 per cent.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the law if amended will be made to conform to the original purpose. These certificates were never intended to draw more than 3.65 per cent. interest.

Mr. NEAL. They were intended to draw 6 per cent.

Mr. ATKINS. What justice is there in allowing these certificates to draw 6 per cent. when the bonds only draw 3.65 per cent.?

Mr. NEAL. The certificates were issued by the board of audit. They draw 6 per cent. under the provisions of law. The supreme court of the District in every case where suit has been brought has rendered judgment in favor of allowing interest at 6 per cent.

Mr. ATKINS. The gentleman is only reciting facts. I am asking his opinion as to the question of equity.

Mr. NEAL. I say it is right that these men should receive the legal rate of interest. They have waited for ten years for their money and have not yet received it.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is a hardship on the people of the country that they have to pay interest on these obligations of the District.

Mr. NEAL. I have nothing to say about that. If the gentleman from Indiana is not satisfied with the law as it now stands, it is his province to propose some other provision for the payment of the debts of the District of Columbia which in his opinion may be more equitable.

Mr. HOLMAN. At least I do not want to make the law worse than it is now.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Ohio. As a matter of fact, is it not true that a large number of the certificates have already been paid?

Mr. NEAL. That is true of a portion; I cannot tell how many. The parties who took them have protested against receiving interest at any lower rate than that which the supreme court of the District has allowed, and which they ought in justice and right to receive.

Mr. CANNON. I ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. NEAL. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I recollect that since I have been a member of this House—as early as the Forty-third Congress—from ten to twelve millions of dollars of indebtedness, which was incurred without any enabling act, in the teeth of the enabling act—was legalized by Congress upon a report of the District Committee. I recollect I had the honor at that time to oppose and vote against such legalization of void indebtedness. But it was legalized and interest was allowed at the rate of 3.65 per cent. In the State of Indiana, or any other State of the Union, such indebtedness never would have been legalized, because there is no plainer principle of law than that where a party makes a contract with a corporation, municipal or otherwise, which incurs indebtedness in the teeth of the enabling act, he does so at his peril.

Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. KETCHAM] informs me that these parties have settled these claims, and have accepted interest at the rate of 3.65 per cent. Now this bill will give them the additional interest between 3.65 and 6 per cent. If that be true, in the light of these facts, in my opinion this legislation ought not to be had.

Mr. NEAL. I wish to say one word in answer to the gentleman from Illinois. It is true that Congress passed a law providing for the funding of the indebtedness of the District of Columbia, but, as I have already stated, the supreme court of this District, when suits have been brought on these board-of-audit certificates, in two instances of William Ballantyne and Dickson & King, as well as in a number of others, have held that the District of Columbia was liable and have tendered judgment for the full amount at 6 per cent., and the Congress of the United States have appropriated money for the payment of those demands.

Mr. CANNON. My friend will allow me just one word. I put it to him if it was not made under legislation which gave life to ten or twelve millions of indebtedness which had no life before, and if that be true and these parties have settled their claims on an equitable stand-point, whether we are bound to give them this additional interest?

Mr. NEAL. All I have to say is whatever may be the legal rights of these parties—and I presume they have lost none of them, because I understand every settlement has been made, they supposing they would receive 6 per cent.—every settlement, I repeat, has been made by them under protest, and if the Congress of the United States does not see fit to pass this law, doing this simple measure of justice, the result will be these board-of-audit certificates which have not been funded will be sued on by the parties holding them, and the Supreme Court will render judgment and the Congress of the United States will appropriate money to pay for them. So far as those already paid are concerned there is no justice in dealing otherwise than fairly with those who have not yet been paid. In the discharge of our duty, believing it is a measure of justice to the creditors of this District, we have introduced this bill. If the House does not choose to admit it, we have nothing to say.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 42, noes 49.

So the House refused to order the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to lay the bill on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUPPRESSION OF GAMING IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. URNER. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to move that the House Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1294) more effectually to suppress gaming in the District of Columbia, and the same be put on its passage as amended by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read as proposed to be amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That every person who shall, in the District of Columbia, set up or keep any gaming table, or any house, vessel, or place on land or water for the purpose of gaming, or gambling device commonly called A. B. C., faro-bank, E. O., roulette, equality, keno, thimbles or "little joker," or any kind of gambling table or gambling device adapted, devised, and designed for the purpose of playing any game of chance for money or property, or who shall induce, entice, or permit any person to bet or play at or upon any such gaming table or gambling device, or on the side or against the keeper thereof, shall, on conviction, be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by imprisonment for a term not less than two nor more than five years.

SEC. 2. That every person who shall, in the District of Columbia, permit any gaming table, bank, or device to be set up or used, for the purpose of gaming, in any house, building, vessel, shed, booth, shelter, lot, or other premises to him belonging, or by him occupied, or of which he hath at the time possession or control, shall, on conviction, be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, and punished by imprisonment for not less than three months nor more than one year, and by fine not exceeding $500.

SEC. 3. That every person who shall, in the District of Columbia, deal, play, or practice, or be in any manner accessory to the dealing, playing, or practicing, of the confidence game or swindle known as three-card monte, or of any such game, play, or practice, or any other confidence game, play, or practice, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, and by imprisonment, at hard labor, in the jail of the District, not less than one nor more than five years.

SEC. 4. That all games, devices, or contrivances at which money or any other thing shall be bet or wagered shall be deemed a gaming table within the meaning of this act; and the courts shall construe the preceding sections liberally, so as to prevent the mischief intended to be guarded against.

SEC. 5. That this act shall take effect from the date of its passage; and all laws inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The amendments reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia were agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. URNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUSPENSION OF COLLECTION OF SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS.

Mr. GARRISON. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to move that the House Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 156) to provide for the suspension of collection of special assessments in the District of Columbia until the improvements which said assessments were made to pay for are fully completed, and the same be put on its passage at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the joint resolution is before the House for consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas under prior laws and ordinances governing the District of Columbia, assessments have been made for projected improvements upon certain real estate and property lying and being situate in said District, in advance of the making of said projected improvement, and which improvements have not yet been made, or are only partially completed, which is contrary to the letter and spirit of such laws and ordinances, and in violation of the just rights of the owners of said real estate: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all laws providing for or looking to the collection of said assessments are hereby suspended until said improvements are made and completed in accordance with the provisions of the laws providing for the same; and when completed said assessments may be paid, without penalties or interest to be charged thereon: Provided, That said payments are made within thirty days from the completion of such improvements.

Mr. CANNON. I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Virginia to explain the propriety or necessity for such legislation—out of what moneys will these improvements be paid for? Should not those who receive the benefit of improvements bear the burden, and should not the money be paid so it can be utilized?

Mr. GARRISON. I do not think the gentleman understands the purpose of this joint resolution.

Mr. CANNON. I rose for the purpose of asking some explanation.

Mr. GARRISON. I will explain the joint resolution. The custom has grown up in this city, whenever an improvement is made upon streets assessment is made upon property-holders.

Mr. NEAL. That was the law, but not now.

Mr. GARRISON. Yes; that was the law, and assessments have been made. These assessments have been made in many cases before improvements have been placed there, and improvements are not to this day placed upon the property. But notwithstanding this fact the parties have been assessed for the work and have been compelled to pay the amount of the assessment. Now, this resolution provides that in such cases where special assessments have been made the improvements shall be made before the property can be held for the expense of it.

Mr. CANNON. I think I did, then, understand the proposition very cleary, and was correct in assuming that this was a proposition to relieve property from these assessments. Now, if you do a certain piece of work, the expense of which under the law the property ought to bear, should not the property pay the money to do the work? Otherwise you will have no fund to carry it on, unless you appropriate the money directly out of the Treasury in advance of the work. Now I think the property ought to bear the burden of the improvements.

Mr. GARRISON. Let me interrupt the gentleman. In many instances in this city the property-owners have been assessed and have paid the money, and the improvements have not been made at all. That is the hardship under which they are laboring; and this legislation is designed to prevent the enforcement of such assessments until the work is done.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will my friend in charge of this bill permit me to ask him whether the parties to whom reference is made could not find some other remedy than by the adoption of the provision that these improvements shall be made and paid for before the people of the District or the property is liable for the tax? There may be a hardship as to these cases to which reference has been made here, but it seems to me that we are making the matter worse rather than better by a provision such as this, which would practically require Congress to appropriate the money and make the improvements before the property could be assessed or held liable to pay for it.

Mr. NEAL. Will my friend from Virginia permit me to answer the question?

Mr. GARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. NEAL. The facts are, Mr Speaker, that the whole question of special assessments has been one of considerable trouble and vexation to the people of this District. It was provided that the work should be done before the assessments were made; but the officers of the District made the assessments, issued certificates against the property, which certificates were placed in the market and sold, and are held as a lien against the property, although the improvements have never been made. The supreme court of the District has stepped in with an injunction in every case where application was made, restraining the collection of the certificates until the work is done; and in no case should these special assessments be compelled to be paid until the work is actually done. However, as I have said, lien certificates were issued before the work was done, and this provides simply that they shall not be collected until the work is accomplished. It only seems to be a question of right and justice.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask my friend a question in reference to this matter, for we can only obtain information as to business brought before the House in this manner by an explanation from some member of the committee having it in charge, or from the reading of the bill from the Clerk's desk, which is not always sufficiently heard by the House to be clearly understood. I desire to ask him whether the purport of this bill is simply to relieve a given number of cases, which are now subject to the hardships mentioned by the gentleman offering the resolution, or whether it really goes further, and is not a general provision to operate in future?

Mr. NEAL. Not at all; there is no law now whatever for special assessments.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then your opinion is that it cannot operate in future?

Mr. NEAL. It cannot.

Mr. BLOUNT. And it only relates to property on which these assessments have already been made and collected?

Mr. NEAL. Yes, sir; it relieves property-holders against whose property assessments have been made, while the money collected or certificates issued on account of these special assessments has never been applied to the improvement of the property at all. If, for instance, the gentleman from Georgia owned property here in the District, and a special assessment was made on it, he would certainly want to know, and have a right to know, before paying the assessment, that the money was to be employed for the purpose contemplated. This bill works no hardship. All the rights of parties remain as they are; but it simply provides that, until the work is done, the property shall not be compelled to pay the tax levied upon it.

I have never known of its being done anywhere else in my life, and certainly there should be no discrimination here against the property-holders, requiring them to pay onerous burdens for which their property will receive no benefit.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does not this act go beyond the cases which you now propose to relieve or where these assessments have been made and collected?

Mr. NEAL. No, sir; it does not. I will read the provision of the joint resolution; it provides that—

All laws providing for or looking to the collection of said assessments are hereby suspended until said improvements are made and completed in accordance with the provisions of the laws providing for the same; and when completed said assessments may be paid, without penalties or interest to be charged thereon: Provided, That said payments are made within thirty days from the completion of such improvements.

That is all that it does, and it cannot possibly go beyond the provisions of the law to which it refers.

Mr. BLOUNT. Why is it that these improvements have not been made?

Mr. NEAL. That is something that I cannot tell the gentleman. The authorities have not done the work; that is all I know about it.

Mr. BLOUNT. Well, it is quite important for us to know all of the facts in connection with this subject. Now, if parties have been assessed and compelled to pay for special improvements, and these improvements have not been made and are not contemplated to be made, we would like to know how it is, and the reason for it. Do I understand the gentleman to say that is the condition of some of the people in this District? If so, we should understand thoroughly all of the facts, and not have a mere general statement here.

Mr. NEAL. If the gentleman from Georgia will permit me, I will state to him that these assessments were made prior to the date when the board of public works was abolished, and perhaps the gentleman himself was in Congress at that time and remembers it. That board was abolished after they had made assessments upon property and sold the assessment certificates, which went into the hands of third parties. Although the assessments were made in this manner, the property has never been improved by the subsequent authorities. The board of public works might have done so had it remained in power; but they did not remain in power, and as a consequence the work was never done. Now, I appeal to the gentleman from Georgia, on this state of facts, if there is anything wrong in allowing the relief sought for here, and if it is not eminently right and proper that these improvements should be made before the property is compelled to pay? At any rate the supreme court of the District have decided that in every instance relief should be given by injunction.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman from Ohio will allow me, I will say I have first asked the gentleman from New York, [Mr. KETCHAM,] formerly one of the District commissioners, what the facts were about these certificates. He informs me that these are briefly the facts: there were $2,000,000 bearing 8 per cent. interest of these special assessment certificates issued; one million and a half of them in round numbers have been paid; and there are still half a million of these 8 per cent. special improvement certificates in round numbers still outstanding. And if Congress relieve the parties who have not paid their special assessments from their payment, necessarily we thereby pledge ourselves to march up and make the appropriations to protect these certificates.

The gentleman from Ohio says, as I understand him, that those assessments are made without authority of law. If that is found to be true upon examination, then of course it makes no lien upon the property. With all due respect to the gentleman and his committee—and I certainly have great respect for them, and hesitate to oppose a report without knowing more fully about it than I do about this—it does occur to me, if I have caught the facts correctly, as I have got them on the run, this matter should have a more full examination before we pass the bill.

Mr. NEAL. The Committee on the District have given this bill a very full examination. They had before them the parties interested time and again. And I say neither the gentleman from Illinois nor any other man on any principle of justice can justify or sanction the collection of a special assessment against property, made for the purpose of improving that property, when the improvements have never been made.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a remark right there? If it be inequitable to collect these assessments that have been made for the improvement of property, and the property is to be benefited, would it not also be equitable for us to make an appropriation to pay them the million and a half back that has already been paid into the Treasury, so that you might thereby cover the whole ground?

Mr. NEAL. The gentleman does not seem to understand the situation at all. The money that has been paid into the Treasury on these special assessments was paid in by parties whose property was improved.

Mr. CANNON. In all cases?

Mr. NEAL. In all cases, so far as I know. There has been no complaint to the contrary. This is only to authorize the suspension of the collection till the improvements are made. It does not destroy any lien or right, but is a measure of justice to parties whose property has been assessed and where the money has not been expended in improvements on account of which the assessment was made.

Mr. CANNON. In other words, if I have the gentleman's idea, it is that the Government of the United States should advance the money to make these improvements by which these parties are to be benefited, and then get it back the best way they can.

Mr. NEAL. The Government of the United States has not advanced any money, and has no disposition to do it. All that these parties ask is that they shall not be compelled to pay the money until the provisions of the law are complied with and the improvements made for which the assessments were intended.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would ask my friend from Ohio this question: whether those improvements are now contemplated; whether it is expected they are to be made?

Mr. NEAL. They may be made some time.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask my friend whether or not it is now expected those improvements will be made?

Mr. NEAL. I cannot tell you whether it is so expected or not.

Mr. BLOUNT. It is a very important thing for us to know. If the improvements are to be made this relief ought not to be had.

Mr. NEAL. Why not?

Mr. BLOUNT. Simply because the property of these people is chargeable for the improvement as much as that of others who have paid the assessment.

Mr. NEAL. Certainly; and their property is chargeable right along; and when the improvements are made they will be liable to pay the assessment under the provisions of this joint resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. May I ask the gentleman from Ohio a question?

Mr. NEAL. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. How is it possible for this work to be done on any reasonable terms, unless assessments are made from time to time to pay the contractors for doing their work?

Mr. NEAL. I suppose the State of Indiana has laws providing for special assessments, and if it has, the gentleman is no doubt familiar with their operation. And I question if he can find in any State of the Union any provision of law which authorizes special assessments for improvement until the improvements are made.

Mr. HOLMAN. The practice is quite uniform that the assessments are made from time to time during the progress of the work. Otherwise favorable contracts cannot be made. If contractors receive nothing till the entire work is done, the rate of charge is enormously high. The assessments, accordingly, are generally made so as to be collected from time to time, as the work progresses.

Mr. NEAL. This work for which the assessments are made has never been done. The committee has no interest in the matter, but presents this to the House as a sheer act of justice to the persons who have been partially ruined by the enormous assessments made upon their property.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to yield to me for a few moments. I desire to ask the gentleman what improvements there are that are affected by this joint resolution, and what is their extent?

Mr. NEAL. They are not of any large extent. As I understand, there are some improvements between Georgetown and Washington where the streets have been torn up and left in a desperate condition; and unless the improvements contemplated are made, the parties do not wish to be compelled to pay this special assessment, or to go to a court of justice and enjoin the authorities from collecting them. I went over the ground myself, and speak of what I know.

Mr. BLOUNT. It does seem to me that this resolution ought not to pass.

Mr. NEAL. And no justice ought to be done the people of this district by Congress?

Mr. BLOUNT. My friend from Ohio will allow me to proceed. He does not possess all the judgment of the House; there are others who differ with him and differ honestly.

The gentleman himself fails to tell us that there is any absence of a present purpose to complete these improvements. So far as this House knows these improvements are contemplated and will perhaps be made by the end of the year.

As already stated there was $2,000,000 of this indebtedness; one and a half millions has already been paid by property owners for these improvements, and there is one-half of a million still left unpaid. These people have been assessed, with the view of raising money in advance to make these improvements. That is nothing unusual; it is the course that would naturally occur to any mind.

I trust we shall not deviate from that course in this single instance, especially when the gentleman fails to tell us that these improvements may not be completed during the present year.

Mr. NEAL. These assessments were made eight years ago, and, so far as I know, there is no intention to complete the improvements.

Mr. BLOUNT. They may have been made eight years ago; but the gentleman does not tell us, in fact he tells us he does not know, that the improvements are not to be made at this time.

Mr. NEAL. I wish the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] would take a position on the Committee on the District of Columbia, and then he would understand how utterly impossible it is for any man to know what he wants us to know. If we were omniscient we would hardly know what he asks.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am not on the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. NEAL. I am sorry you are not.

Mr. BLOUNT. If I were I would endeavor to be a little more amiable with this House when I submitted a proposition for consideration which proposed to take money out of the Treasury. I would not take offense when a member on the floor asked for information.

I would not consider it my duty to rebuke or reprove every gentleman who did not see fit blindly to follow my leadership.

On the information already given us, I trust this House will not grant this relief. If these improvements are not to be made it is not to be supposed that these people will be compelled to pay for them. It is to be presumed that they are to be made, and that these assessments should stand. My friend does not understand the facts fully in reference to these improvements.

Mr. NEAL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLOUNT. In a moment, I will.

Mr. NEAL. Very well.

Mr. BLOUNT. If you will keep in a good humor about it. My friend does not himself know all the facts connected with these improvements. But he has told this House that there is one thing right sure, and that is that the courts here will uphold the rights of these people. Now if that be true, then we are on safe ground to let this matter go to the courts and be investigated there.

I suspect that if we take that course, in time these improvements will be made, and the money will go toward their payment. I trust that will be the direction the House will give the matter.

Mr. NEAL. Now, will you answer a question?

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly.

Mr. NEAL. Do you think it right that the property of a person should be assessed for improvements and the money collected eight years before the improvements are made? I ask you if you think that is right?

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. NEAL. Go on.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will, with your permission. I certainly should not think it right; but that is not the position here.

Mr. NEAL. Yes, it is.

Mr. BLOUNT. I know the gentleman seeks to formulate it in that way, but the facts do not support him in it. The gentleman himself says that there is this in addition, that it may be the purpose, so far as he knows, to complete these improvements during this year. He does not tell us that these improvements are not to be made at once. If they are, then this money will be needed, and ought to be on hand. Any bad legislation or bad administration of affairs in this District in the past does not change those simple facts.

Mr. NEAL. I want to say just one word in reply to the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT.] This thing is all in a nutshell. The proposition before the House is to relieve parties whose property has been assessed from the payment of those assessments until the work is done. It does not destroy the lien that is placed upon their property by law. It simply suspends the collection of the assessments until the improvements are made, until the work is done. These assessments were made some eight years ago.

Mr. BLOUNT. Who will pay for the work as it proceeds?

Mr. NEAL. It will be paid for by special assessments, so far as I understand the law; paid under the law as it now is.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. NEAL. Certainly.

Mr. STEELE. Is it not the fact that certificates have been sold to enable the parties to prosecute this work? And if we pass this law will it not leave the holders of those certificates to hold the bag until the District of Columbia or the managers of the improvements may see fit to complete the work?

Mr. NEAL. Very possibly that will be the case. But I ask the gentleman from Indiana whether he thinks it right that property should be assessed and the assessments paid while the money is not applied to the improvements which were contemplated when the assessments were made?

Mr. STEELE. I think that the innocent purchasers of these certificates have just as much right to protection as the property-holders; and it is our business to ascertain why the person in charge of these improvements has not completed the work. It is not for us to say that these innocent parties shall suffer because the work has not been done.

Mr. NEAL. I stated that the board of public works under which these improvements were inaugurated was abolished, and that the District authorities since that time have never seen fit to go on with the completion of the work.

Mr. STEELE. Then in all probability the fact is they never intend to prosecute and complete the work. If the legislation now proposed be adopted the holders of the certificates may come to Congress and say, "You have abolished a certain remedy which belonged to us under the law, and now you must pay us this money because of your action." This is the first step in that direction. If we suspend payment of the certificates the holders may come up and say, "By reason of your act we cannot recover our money, and you must make it good to us."

Mr. NEAL. Does the gentleman think it right that the property-holders should be compelled to pay these assessments when they have received no benefit from them, and when the law under which the improvements were to be made has not been complied with?

Mr. STEELE. I think the first step should be to cause this work to be prosecuted to completion——

Mr. NEAL. So do I.

Mr. STEELE. And if there has been any law passed conflicting with that, it should be repealed.

Mr. NEAL. The question is simply whether these property-holders shall be compelled to pay these assessments before the work is done, or to litigate the matter in court.

Mr. STEELE. Or whether the innocent holders of these certificates shall suffer.

Mr. NEAL. These certificates were not assignable. Everybody who took them knew what he was buying, and knew what the law was. The law provided that these certificates should not be issued until the work was done.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to ask my friend from Ohio whether the Senate of the United States did not in the last Congress pass a bill appropriating out of the Treasury half a million of dollars in round numbers to pay these 8 per cent. certificates, and whether there is not a bill pending there now to do the same thing?

Mr. NEAL. The Senate of the United States never did any such thing. The Senate passed a bill to fund the 8 percents, providing that a sinking fund should be created and the money paid.

Mr. CANNON. But that the Government should be pledged to the payment of those bonds.

Mr. NEAL. Does the gentleman think that these parties ought to be compelled to pay these assessments before the improvements contemplated have been made?

Mr. CANNON. I think the House is entitled to know, after these certificates to the amount of half a million of dollars have been sold, whether the money has been misappropriated, and whether it is proposed never to make these special improvements. If there has been any misappropriation, let us hold the parties who so misappropriated the money responsible. If not, then let these property-holders who receive special benefit on account of these special improvements under the special assessments pay their money, and let the improvements be made.

Mr. STEELE. We have a right to know what has been done with the money which innocent purchasers have paid in for these certificates.

Mr. CAMP. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] whether or not these certificates to the amount of half a million dollars have been sold, and if so, where the money realized from the sale is—why it has not been used for the purpose of completing this work? I ask this question for information, and not in any captious spirit.

Mr. NEAL. The act of the Legislative Assembly—I have it not before me—provided that the governor or the board of public works might issue certificates payable in five years with 8 per cent. interest. Those certificates were sold. Then there were lien certificates issued against the property, and those lien certificates were pledged to the payment of the 8 percents. Since that time Congress has authorized a reduction of those lien certificates, and the amount has been very considerably reduced.

Mr. STEELE. But where is the money that was paid in for these certificates?

Mr. NEAL. The money was expended by the board of public works, I do not know when or where, but it was expended exactly as the $20,000,000 funded a few years ago was expended. I cannot tell anything about that; nobody can tell.

Mr. STEELE. Then the total amount assessed has been expended, and only a portion of the work has been done. Now, somebody must pay for the balance of the work, or else these innocent holders of the certificates must suffer.

Mr. NEAL. I do not know how that is. These certificates were not assignable. Everybody who took them is presumed to have known what the law was.

The committee, however, has no feeling about this matter. If members of the House do not want to relieve these parties, let them say so; let them say it is right that these men should be taxed and receive no benefit from the taxation.

Mr. CANNON. I have no feeling about it, but stand with the gentleman from Ohio ready to see the right thing done. If in fact this money has been squandered and lost and we by this action are to become liable for these certificates, then I want it to be shown how it has been squandered, so we may cover the whole ground and pledge the Government to the payment of so much as has been lost. I do not want to do it by piecemeal, and I do not want to do it on suspicion.

Mr. NEAL. This is a plain proposition. It provides that these parties shall not be compelled to pay until the work has been done for which the assessments were made.

Mr. STEELE. We are to make the innocent holders of certificates or the property assessed responsible and allow the men who squandered this money to escape by making Congress come in and foot the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 40, noes 19.

So the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 45, noes 23.

So the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. GARRISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DANIEL CARROLL ESTATE.

Mr. GARRISON. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to move that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6405) to authorize the Court of Claims of the United States to ascertain the amount of damages sustained by Ann C. Carroll and Maria C. Fitzhugh by the regrading of the streets around square numbered 736 in the city of Washington, and that it be taken up for present consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That Ann C. Carroll and Maria C. Fitzhugh may prosecute a suit in the Court of Claims, according to the rules of practice and proceedings in said court, against the District of Columbia, to recover such damages as they have sustained by reason of the regrading of the streets around square numbered 736 in the city of Washington; and the said court is hereby authorized to hear and determine the said suit; and in ascertaining the damages sustained by the plaintiffs the court is directed to take into consideration the advantages, if any, to the said square numbered 736 resulting from the regrading aforesaid. It shall be the duty of the attorney for the District to defend the said suit.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to the said Ann C. Carroll and Maria C. Fitzhugh such sum as the Court of Claims may adjudge to be due them, one-half of which sum shall be chargeable to the revenue derived from taxation within the District of Columbia.

Mr. GARRISON. Since the bill was reported we have learned these parties hold this property as the legal representatives of Daniel Carroll, deceased, and that fact will require some verbal amendments, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the first section, after the word "Fitzhugh," in the third line, insert the words, "executrices of the estate of the late Daniel Carroll, deceased."

In the first section, line 6, strike out the words "they have" and insert the words "said estate has."

In the second section, after the word "Fitzhugh," insert the words "executrices aforesaid."

Amend the title by inserting after the word "Fitzhugh" the words "executrices of the estate of the late Daniel Carroll, deceased."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I would be glad to ask the gentleman a question if he would permit me.

Mr. GARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. Why were not these damages assessed under the general law as other damages in the cutting down of streets in the city of Washington?

Mr. GARRISON. The grading around these streets was done after the board for assessing the damages in like cases had been abolished by law. These parties have never had any tribunal before which they could bring their claim. I ask the Clerk to read the report.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest an amendment to the bill.

Mr. MAGINNIS. This relates to the Duddington property. The people have never had any chance to have their damages assessed, and this bill ought to pass. I can tell Mr. HOLMAN that there is no doubt about the damage.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to insert after the word "sustained" the words "if any."

Mr. ATKINS. If the gentleman from Indiana will only go down to the property he will be satisfied that it has been greatly damaged.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think the District of Columbia should be compelled to pay unless damage has been done to the property.

Mr. GARRISON. I have no objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana. If no damage has been done to the property the court will not render any judgment for damage.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARRISON. Let the report be read.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why is it necessary to pay this money out of the Federal Treasury?

Mr. GARRISON. It is paid like all other funds, one-half out of tax arising from the District of Columbia.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does my friend think it is right the Government of the United States should pay for these damages?

Mr. CANNON. Let the report be printed in the RECORD if it is not read.

Mr. STEELE. Let it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

There are many claimants in the city of Washington for damages alleged to have been sustained by reason of public improvements, such as the regrading the streets and opening new streets. The most of the claimants had an opportunity to present their accounts before the board of audit provided for by the act of June 20, 1872, and their claims were adjusted by said board.

In the case of the petitioners, ANN C. Carroll and Maria C. Fitzhugh, however, the streets were run and the new grading fixed around their property, square No. 736, after the said board of audit had expired by the limitation of the act creating it. The damages having been done after the expiration of the said board, the petitioners have had no tribunal before which to present their claim and have it adjusted.

While your committee is unwilling to reopen the cases which were adjusted by the said board of audit, or which could have been presented to said board for adjudication, but by negligence were not so presented, it is believed to be right and proper that the petitioners should have a hearing, and your committee report the accompanying bill, authorizing the Court of Claims to settle this case, with the recommendation that it be passed.

Mr. STEELE. I move to strike out lines 5 and 6, and insert the words "one-half of which sum shall be paid by the District of Columbia."

Mr. NEAL. That is provided for in the last part of section 2, "one-half of which sum shall be chargeable to the revenue derived from the taxation of the District of Columbia."

Mr. GARRISON. That is the phraseology always used.

Mr. NEAL. There is no trouble about that, that the District of Columbia will have to pay one-half.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why should the General Government be compelled to pay for any portion of it?

Mr. GARRISON. It conforms to the phraseology usual in such bills.

Mr. STEELE. If that be so I do not insist on my amendment.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GARRISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GIFT OF ORNAMENTAL DRINKING-FOUNTAIN.

Mr. GARRISON. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to move that the House Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 224) accepting the offer of Dr. H. D. Cogswell, of San Francisco, California, to donate to the Government of the United States an ornamental drinking-fountain, to be erected at his cost in the city of Washington, and that the same be put on its passage.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas Dr. H. D. Cogswell, of San Francisco, California, has offered to erect, at his own expense, an ornamental drinking-fountain in the city of Washington, and to donate the same to the Government of the United States: Therefore,

Resolved, &c., That the offer of the said H. D. Cogswell be, and the same is hereby, accepted, and authority is granted to erect the said drinking-fountain, under the supervision and direction of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, upon such part of the Government grounds in the city of Washington as the said commissioners may designate.

SEC. 2. That the said commissioners be, and they hereby are, authorized to provide and maintain such lanterns as may be necessary to light the said fountain at night, and also to use and supply the refrigerating apparatus connected with said fountain whenever they may think it proper to do so.

Mr. GARRISON. I think, Mr. Speaker, during the hot weather no one will object to the passage of that joint resolution, although the report accompanying it has not yet been printed.

The joint resolution was taken up, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GARRISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FREE PUBLIC HIGHWAY, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GARRISON. I desire, Mr. Speaker, by instructions from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to move to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6627) to authorize the establishment of a free public highway in the District of Columbia, and put the same upon its passage. I will say, however, that the report accompanying this bill, as I am informed, has not yet been printed, and therefore, if there be objection, I shall not insist upon considering it at this time.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read; it is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c. That the commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to locate, construct, and maintain a free public highway on and over that part of the turnpike road of the company incorporated by the name of "The President, Managers, and Company of the Washington Turnpike Company," which leads from the boundary of the city of Georgetown to the boundary of the District of Columbia, toward Rockville, Montgomery County, Maryland; said company being the same described in the act of Congress approved February 27, 1813, (volume 2 of the Statutes at Large, page 808,) authorizing said company to construct and maintain said turnpike road from the boundary of Georgetown to the boundary of the District of Columbia; and for the purpose aforesaid the said commissioners of the District of Columbia shall have power to purchase, at the price of $3,000, all real estate and franchises of said turnpike company necessary for the construction and maintenance of a free public highway.

SEC. 2. That the said purchase-money shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, upon the order of the commissioners of the District of Columbia; and such payment shall be in full of all the real estate, rights, and franchises of the said company within the District of Columbia, and shall operate as a surrender and release of said real estate, rights, and franchises to the Government of the United States: Provided, That the toll-house at Tennallytown is not to be included in said purchase, and the said company shall remove the same after reasonable notice: And provided further, That one-half of the said $3,000 shall be paid out of revenues derived from taxation in the District of Columbia.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move, Mr. Speaker, to amend the last section of this bill by striking out in the twelfth line of the second section the words "one half of the;" so that it will read: "and that said $3,000 shall be paid out of revenues derived from taxation in the District of Columbia."

My object is that the entire amount of this expenditure shall be borne by the District. It seems to be impossible for Congress ever to place itself in the attitude of requiring the District to pay for its own works, but seems bound to appropriate one-half of all expenditures of every kind in this District, even for the purchase of a public highway for the benefit of the people here. Now, I am unable to conceive upon what principle of justice the people of this country should be taxed one-half of the expense to keep up a public highway for the rural portion of the District of Columbia. The only theory upon which it could possibly be charged to the public is the theory which actuated Congress in framing the original law providing that one-half of the expenses should be borne by the Government and one-half by the District, namely, that the Government owned a large amount of property here and should therefore pay a due proportion of the expense of improvement. But this is an entirely different matter, and even that proposition applied strictly to the city of Washington as originally designed, and did not even extend to Georgetown.

Mr. NEAL. What! Does the gentleman say that it did not refer to Georgetown? It had reference to the entire District.

Mr. HOLMAN. I refer now to the grounds on which the original provision of the law was enacted, and that was, that because the Government owned a large amount of property here it should therefore bear a fair share of the expense. But that property of the Government was confined almost exclusively to the city of Washington, and therefore I say it did not even extend to Georgetown. It is now proposed, however, not only to extend it to the entire District of Columbia, but to the rural districts surrounding the District of Columbia. It has already outgrown the limits of Washington City and penetrated the rural districts; and I think it is now about time that a halt should be called in this system of spending the people's money. I have never, as I have already said, been able to understand why it is that the whole country should be taxed for many of the improvements that are done in this city. While admitting the manifest propriety of the Government bearing its due share of the expense of certain improvements, yet I think we have already exceeded the limits of propriety in that direction. You had just as well in all fairness cross the Potomac and go into Virginia, or leave the District on the other side and go into Maryland, as to make a grant of this kind, which this bill contemplates, and then levy a tax upon the whole country to pay for it. The only ground on which Congress has ever been able to excuse itself to the country was, as I have said, because the Government owned property here, and it was therefore proper that it should bear a part of the expense. But this property is beyond the city of Washington, beyond the region of the capital of the Federal Government, and is simply for the local convenience of people outside of the city. I do insist that such a bill as this should not be passed, and that a stop should be made in this unwarrantable system.

Mr. CASSIDY. This road, as I understand it, will reach the new Signal Service station or Observatory belonging to the Government of the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Signal Service stations are all over the country, as far as that is concerned, and there is no more propriety in extending a road at the expense of the people to this one, if that is the object of the bill, than there would be in extending it to any other such station.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia a question. Is it true the road is already constructed and that the object of this bill is to purchase it from the present stockholders for $3,000?

Mr. GARRISON. Yes, sir. In other words, at one time there were quite a number of these turnpike roads here. The present road was chartered by an act of the Legislature of Maryland, I think in 1803, and in 1813 by an act of Congress of the United States the corporators were allowed to build their road into the District and extend it from Maryland to Georgetown.

Now, all the turnpike roads except this one have heretofore, by just such acts as this, been made free; and, if I am properly informed, the lowest price paid for the franchise of any one of the other roads was $6,000. The committee have examined this particular turnpike very closely. Everybody that approaches the city from that direction, from Rockville or in the direction of Rockville, Maryland, through Tenallytown to reach this city, must pass on this road, and at Tenallytown they have to pay toll upon it; and so with persons leaving the city.

Now, the road has not been kept up by the company in as good condition as it should have been, and for that reason the committee think it ought to be under the control of the District commissioners, and that it should be kept up as a good road. We have succeeded in bidding these people down from $6,000 to $3,000, which we propose to pay for their franchise and rights, and also the real estate and road-bed.

Mr. NEAL. And the right of way.

Mr. GARRISON. Yes, the right of way of course, and everything belonging to it but the toll-house at Tenallytown, which we do not want. The construction of this road, if I am correctly informed, cost the company over $30,000; and it is in fair condition now, but will not cost the District a large amount of money to keep it in its present condition; in fact it will cost but a very small amount of money to make it a very good road. It runs right by the place selected for the new Observatory, where I suppose the Government will have magnificent grounds. Now, so far as the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana is concerned, I will say, as perhaps an original proposition, I might have agreed with him in some respects; but this has been done in all such cases, and it would seem to be only justice to pay for this road as the others were paid for. It belongs to the Government after this purchase, becomes its property, just as the streets and alleys of the city belong to the Government; and as the Government has paid one-half in all other cases I do not see why it should not be done here. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will not attempt, on a little bill of this character, to begin such a change of policy as his amendment contemplates.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is my friend from Virginia certain the Government of the United States have paid for setting free the other roads one-half the expenses?

Mr. GARRISON. I am so informed. I have not examined the laws.

Mr. HOLMAN. In my own experience, up to the time I left Congress—to the end of the Forty-fourth Congress—no measure of this kind had ever been even proposed. Indeed, the proposition that the Government was to meet half the expenses of this District beyond the expenses of the police and the fire departments was never suggested, I think, prior to the Forty-fifth Congress. The amount involved here is a bagatelle; but, unhappily, those bagatelles mount up to many millions. I think the public sentiment of this country has not seen this matter just as Congress has seen it. But if the Government is to be charged with one-half the expenses I insist that that shall be confined to the city of Washington, where the Government has property, and shall not extend to all the improvements made everywhere else throughout the District.

Mr. NEAL. I am informed by my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. URNER,] that in purchasing the other turnpikes the Government paid the whole purchase-money.

Mr. HOLMAN. If there is any instance of that kind it may be deemed conclusive, but I have never myself known of any such instance.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "one-half of;" so that it will read, "that the said $3,000 shall be paid out of revenues derived from taxation of the District of Columbia."

The question being taken, there were—ayes 13, noes 33.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GARRISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHANGING OF ALLEY-WAYS.

Mr. CASSIDY. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to move that the bill (H. R. No. 6225) to authorize the changing of alley-ways in the city of Washington be taken from the House Calendar, and that it be now passed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That whenever all the owners of an entire square, or all the owners of a part of a square bounded on all sides by public streets, in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, shall present to the commissioners of the District of Columbia a petition asking that any alley or alleys within said square or part of square may be closed wholly or partially, and shall in said petition offer to dedicate for public use, and shall so dedicate if in the opinion of the commissioners of said District such dedication is necessary, as alley-ways, ground owned by the petitioners in amount equal at least in area to that of the alley-way sought to be closed, and shall also present to said commissioners with said petition a correct plot of such square or part of square, signed by all of the owners thereof, upon which shall be accurately delineated the positions and dimensions of the existing alley way or ways, and a subdivision of the entire area of the alley or alleys sought to be closed into parcels according to an agreement of all said owners for the future ownership of the same, the name of the agreed future owner of each parcel being marked thereon, and showing also the position and dimensions of the new alley way or ways proposed to be substituted therefor, it shall be the duty of said commissioners, upon being satisfied of the truth of the facts stated in the petition as to ownership and of the correctness of the plot, and also that the proposed change will not be detrimental to the public convenience, to make an order declaring the existing alley way or ways closed as prayed for, and opening the new alley way or ways proposed to be substituted therefor.

SEC. 2. That the commissioners shall cause a certified copy of the order to be attached to the plot and delivered to the petitioners, who may file the same for record with the recorder of deeds of the District, who shall record the same as other instruments affecting real estate; and thereafter the right of the public to use the alley way or ways declared closed, and the proprietary interest of the United States therein shall forever cease and determine, and the title to the same shall be vested according to the agreement of the owners as shown in the aforesaid plot, each person being thenceforward the owner in fee-simple of the parcel or parcels upon which his name shall be marked as provided in section 1. The new alley way or ways described in said order and delineated on said plot shall thereafter be and remain dedicated to public use as alley-ways, and, like other alleys of said city, shall be under the care and control of the city authorities.

Mr. CASSIDY. This is a very simple little proposition. The bill simply provides that if all the people in a block desire to change the alley-way they may have the right to do so. The bill also vacates in cases of this kind the title of the Government in the old alley-way, and fixes it in the new alley-way that may be designated. That is all there is of it. The bill does not appropriate any money.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CASSIDY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

USE OF THE CAPITOL GROUNDS.

Mr. DEZENDORF. I call up for present consideration the bill (S. No. 789) to regulate the use of the Capitol grounds. I move that the bill be taken from the Speaker's table and that it be put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas the Capitol grounds have been formed to subserve the quiet and dignity of the Capitol of the United States, and to prevent the occurrence near it of such disturbances as are incident to the ordinary use of public streets and places: Therefore the following statute for the regulation of the public use of said grounds is hereby enacted:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That public travel in and occupancy of the Capitol grounds shall be restricted to the roads, walks, and places prepared for the purpose by flagging, paving, or otherwise.

SEC. 2. That it is forbidden to occupy the roads in such manner as to obstruct or hinder their proper use, to drive violently upon them, or with animals not under perfect control, or to use them for the conveyance of goods or merchandise, except to or from the Capitol on Government service.

SEC. 3. That it is forbidden to offer or expose any article for sale; to display any sign, placard, or other form of advertisement, to solicit fares, alms, subscriptions, or contributions.

SEC. 4. That it is forbidden to step or climb upon, remove, or in any way injure any statue, seat, wall, or other erection, or any tree, shrub, plant, or turf.

SEC. 5. That it is forbidden to discharge any fire-arm, fire-work, or explosive, set fire to any combustible, make any harangue or oration, or utter loud, threatening, or abusive language.

SEC. 6. That it is forbidden to parade, stand, or move in processions or assemblages, or display any flag, banner, or device designed or adapted to bring into public notice any party, organization, or movement.

SEC. 7. That offenses against this act shall be triable before the police court of the District of Columbia, and shall be punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both, at the discretion of the judge of said court; the fine not to exceed $100, the imprisonment not to exceed sixty days. But in the case of heinous offenses by reason of which public property shall have suffered damage to an amount exceeding $100 in value, said judge of the police court may commit or hold to bail the offender for trial before the supreme court of the District of Columbia, when the offense shall be punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary for a period of not less than six months nor more than five years.

SEC. 8. That it shall be the duty of all policemen and watchmen having authority to make arrests in the District of Columbia to be watchful for offenses against this act, and to arrest and bring before the proper tribunal those who shall offend against it under their observation, or of whose offenses they shall be advised by witnesses.

SEC. 9. That it shall be the duty of all persons employed in the service of the Government in the Capitol or on its grounds to prevent, as far as may be in their power, offenses against this act, and to aid the police, by information or otherwise, in securing the arrest and conviction of offenders.

SEC. 10. That in order to admit of the due observance within the Capitol grounds of occasions of national interest becoming the cognizance and entertainment of Congress, the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, acting concurrently, are hereby authorized to suspend for such proper occasions so much of the above prohibitions as would prevent the use of the roads and walks of the said grounds by processions or assemblages, and the use upon them of suitable decorations, music, addresses, and ceremonies: Provided, That responsible officers shall have been appointed, and arrangements determined, adequate, in the judgment of said President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives, for the maintenance of suitable order and decorum in the proceedings, and for guarding the Capitol and its grounds from injury.

SEC. 11. That in the absence from Washington of either of the officers designated in the last section, the authority therein given to suspend certain prohibitions of this act shall devolve upon the other, and in the absence from Washington of both it shall devolve upon the Capitol police commission.

The bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed.

Mr. DEZENDORF moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAYMENT OF WORKMEN.

Mr. NEAL. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to move that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 5058) to amend and extend the provisions of a certain clause in the act of Congress approved June 20, 1878, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government, and to provide for the payment of workmen under the late board of public works in the District of Columbia, and that the same as proposed to be amended by the committee be passed. I call the attention of the House particularly to this bill.

The bill as proposed to be amended by the committee was read, as follows:

Whereas by the act of Congress approved June 20, 1878, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government, it was, among other things, provided "that a sum not exceeding $75,000 be appropriated to pay the workingmen employed in the public improvements under the late board of public works of the District of Columbia, or the contractors of the same, whose claims for work and labor are due and unpaid from contractors whose accounts against the government of the District of Columbia had been paid prior to the passage of the act of June 24, 1874, entitled 'An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes:' Provided, That such claims shall be severally audited and paid by the proper accounting and disbursing officers of the Treasury, and that the amount found to be due to each workman shall only be paid to him in person, if living, or, in case of non-residents of the District of Columbia, by draft on the Treasury of the United States to his or their order, or to his legal representatives if dead: And provided further, That if said sum of $75,000 shall not be sufficient to pay all such claims filed prior to the 1st day of December next, in full, then there shall be made the required pro rata deduction on each claim, and the amount to be paid on each claim shall be paid and received in full discharge of the claim of such workman: Provided further, That no such claims shall be received or audited by the accounting officers of the Treasury subsequent to the 1st day of December, 1878; and that one-half the whole amount paid under this paragraph shall be paid by the United States and one-half shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia other than that portion which is derived from the United States;" and

Whereas certain workmen were employed by and worked under contractors for the public improvements under the late board of public works of the District of Columbia, referred to in the aforesaid act, in cases where the contractors were not paid in full, and which workmen have received nothing under the provisions of said act: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the provisions of said act be, and they hereby are, extended to all cases in which said contractors were paid in full or in part, and that the claims of such workmen, or their legal representatives and assigns, shall be received and audited by the First Comptroller of the Treasury and be paid by the proper disbursing officers as other workmen under the provisions of said act have heretofore been paid.

SEC. 2. That said accounting officer, in the ascertainment of the validity and amount of said claims, and the true ownership thereof, may compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of books and papers, if necessary, by process of subpœna, to be issued by said officer and served by the marshal of the District of Columbia; all fees to be paid by each respective claimant. He may, in his discretion, examine the claimants and other witnesses, after having duly sworn them to testify the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth touching such matters as they may be interrogated upon.

SEC. 3. That any person who while so being examined shall willfully state a falsehood in a material matter shall be guilty of perjury, and on conviction thereof shall be subject to the pains and penalties now prescribed for perjury in the District of Columbia; and said accounting officer shall reject any claim concerning which the owner has sworn falsely, or suborned any other person to commit perjury.

SEC. 4. That said accounting officer shall ascertain in every case under what contractor the claimant worked, and why the claimant was not paid by said contractor, and if he shall find it was because of a want of due dilligence upon the part of said claimant he shall reject the same. When he allows any claim he shall at once notify the Treasurer of the United States of said allowance, the name of the workman, under what contractor he worked, and the amount; and it is hereby made the duty of the said Treasurer to withhold said amount out of any moneys he may hereafter lawfully pay said contractor. Said accounting officer shall also notify the Attorney-General of the United States and the commissioners of the District of Columbia of such particulars, who may set up the same as a counter-claim or set-off against any suit said contractor may have against the District of Columbia in the Court of Claims, or in any other court of said District.

SEC. 5. That before any claim shall be considered by said accounting officer he must be satisfied that the person presenting the same has duly notified the contractor of his purpose to present said claim, if said contractor is a resident of the District of Columbia.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the report accompanying the bill be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred House bill No. 5058, report the same back with sundry amendments. They are of opinion that the matters presented in the bill, as amended, deserve the careful consideration of the House.

Mr. NEAL. I want to state for the information of the House, as it is set forth in these whereases, that in 1878 the Congress of the United States appropriated $75,000 to pay the workingmen employed in the public improvements under the late board of public works of the District of Columbia, where the contractors had not paid them. Under the provisions of the act making that appropriation the Comptroller of the Treasury made a statement of accounts and allowed about $25,000. But there were a large number of workingmen who were not paid because the law was not broad enough. This act provides:

That the provisions of said act be, and they hereby are, extended to all cases in which said contractors were paid in full or in part, and that the claims of such workmen, or their legal representatives and assigns, shall be received and audited by the First Comptroller of the Treasury, and be paid by the proper disbursing officers as other workmen under the provisions of said act have heretofore been paid.

The remainder of the bill is simply the machinery provided for ascertaining what claims are due and the amount.

The committee have no recommendation to make in regard to the bill. They submit it to the House, with the expectation that the House in its wisdom will do what it believes to be right.

Mr. CANNON. Is my friend for the bill?

Mr. NEAL. I decline to answer.

Mr. RANDALL. It seems to me that there should be some limitation of the amount. If there was appropriated originally $75,000 and $25,000 of that sum has been paid, there ought certainly to be a limitation of $50,000 beyond which they should not go.

Mr. NEAL. Do not the "whereases" cover that? It simply extends the provisions of and refers to the act which appropriated $75,000.

Mr. RANDALL. It would be more plain if you inserted "not in excess of $50,000."

Mr. NEAL. Or not to be in excess altogether of $75,000. If the gentleman desires to move an amendment I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. RANDALL. The preamble is no part of the law. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] sought the floor a moment ago.

Mr. CANNON. I sought the floor to ask the gentleman at the head of the Committee on the District of Columbia whether he was for the bill, and I received in answer a declination to answer.

Mr. NEAL. I am afraid if I was to say that I was for the bill the gentleman from Illinois would oppose it; therefore I decline to answer.

Mr. CANNON. No; I do not mean that necessarily.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] cannot escape from the House in that way, although he may escape from the gentleman from Illinois. It is due to the House that the chairman of the committee should say whether the report made by the committee was intended to be favorable or unfavorable.

Mr. NEAL. I will say very frankly that I consider this legislation of very doubtful character.

Mr. CAMP. Then I move to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. NEAL. Wait till I yield the floor. Three years ago Congress enacted legislation of this character, under which $25,000 was paid to workmen. Other men equally meritorious now ask that the law be extended so as to cover their cases.

Mr. CAMP. I move to lay the bill on the table.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 28, noes 18.

So (no further count being called for) the bill was laid on the table.

Mr. CAMP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT ASSESSMENTS UNDER MAYOR EMERY.

Mr. NEAL. I am authorized by the Committee on the District of Columbia to ask that House bill No. 6405, to refund the assessments made under the administration of M. J. Emery while mayor of Washington, and for other purposes, now on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole, be taken up and considered at this time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas special assessments were made for certain public improvements upon real estate situate in the District of Columbia under the administration of M. G. Emery, mayor of the city of Washington; and

Whereas the entire cost of said special improvements was assessed against the property abutting upon the streets and avenues so improved; and

Whereas it has since been determined by the attorney of the District that it was illegal to assess more than one-third the cost of said improvements upon the property abutting upon the streets and avenues so improved, and in consequence thereof all said assessments have been revised and reduced to one-third the original amounts thereof, so that such property-holders as had refused to pay the same are now only required to pay the revised assessments, while others who promptly paid said assessments have paid the entire amount of said original assessments which, being declared illegal, was unjust to them, and ought to be refunded so far as illegal: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That the commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby directed to issue drawback certificates to all such property-holders as have paid said assessments in full, for two-thirds the respective amounts paid by them, which certificates shall be received for special and general taxes in arrears on the 1st day of July, 1879.

Mr. BLOUNT. If there is a report, I would be glad to have it read.

Mr. NEAL. Here is the report.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2339) to refund the M. G. Emery assessments, submit the following report:

That they have had said bill under consideration, and have arrived at the conclusion that the substitute herewith reported should become a law. The facts are, that M. G. Emery was elected mayor of Washington prior to February 21, 1871, and had a municipal council to manage the affairs of the city of Washington. That in pursuance of authority conferred by law, said municipal authorities ordered the improvements of certain avenues and streets, and made an assessment upon the property abutting upon said streets and avenues for the payment of the same; these assessments were made subsequent to February 21, 1871, the day of the approval of the act entitled "An act to provide for a government for the District of Columbia."

The Emery government resisted the establishment of the government in said act provided, and continued to exercise the functions of authority as aforesaid until it was judicially determined that the act was legal and constitutional, when they ceased longer to exercise said functions. The board of public works, created by said act, upon entering upon the discharge of their duties, established a different grade for the streets and avenues improved under the Emery government, tore up the pavements which had been laid, and reassessed the property for said improvements, by which said property was made liable to a double assessment, a very great hardship and a gross injustice to the persons unfortunate enough to own property thus doubly assessed.

Your committee are of opinion that but one of these assessments should be paid, and therefore report a substitute for the bill, providing for the redemption of said assessment certificates.

Mr. NEAL. I desire to state that the report which has been read was drawn for a prior bill, and the facts are not exactly as stated in the report, but they appear in the preamble of this bill.

M. G. Emery was mayor of the city of Washington for a period ending in February, 1871. While mayor he made assessments upon certain property for street improvements. A portion of the property-owners paid those assessments in full; the remainder did not.

It was afterward determined by the legal authorities of the District that the assessments for the full amount of the improvements were illegal; that only 33 per cent. could be collected, as was afterward the law of the District.

Mr. BLOUNT. When was that opinion reached by the District authorities?

Mr. NEAL. After a portion of these assessments had been paid.

Mr. BLOUNT. In what year?

Mr. NEAL. I cannot give the year.

Mr. HOLMAN. About 1869 or 1870.

Mr. NEAL. I have the papers in my desk in my committee-room up-stairs; but I cannot now give the year.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] says that it was in 1869 or 1870.

Mr. NEAL. Yes, when the assessments were made.

Mr. BLOUNT. No, when the opinion was reached by the District authorities.

Mr. NEAL. No, the opinion had not been reached by that time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I referred to the time when the assessments were made.

Mr. NEAL. I will state to the House that the District Attorney decided that only 33 per cent. of the amount of the improvements could be collected. And anybody who will examine the subject will come to the conclusion that that is a fair construction. Since that time all that has been collected is 33 per cent. The persons who have paid the full assessments do not ask that the money shall be refunded to them, but they ask that drawback certificates may be given them to be used in the payment of arrears of taxes.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the amount involved?

Mr. NEAL. Some thousands of dollars. Suppose that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and myself owned adjoining lots, upon which assessments were made for street improvements. The gentleman from Indiana paid his assessment promptly; I did not. By not paying mine promptly I got off with paying 33 per cent. while the gentleman paid in full.

Mr. HOLMAN. When did this occur?

Mr. NEAL. Prior to 1871. Then the Emery government went out of existence, because of the establishment of a government for the District of Columbia, consisting of a governor, legislative assembly, and board of public works.

Mr. RANDALL. The original act was intended to include assessments under the board of public works; but the construction given to the law was to review as well assessments under the Emery government. Is that it?

Mr. NEAL. I do not speak about the revision but about the construction which was given to the law under which the assessments were made. It was held by the attorney of the District, whose opinion has been acquiesced in by the District authorities, and I apprehend is good law, that it is illegal to assess more than 33 per cent. of the cost of the improvement upon the property abutting the same. A few persons paid the assessment in full; a majority of the property-holders did not. The latter have paid only 33 per cent. Now those who paid in full come and ask Congress to give them drawbacks for the difference. I think the proposition is perfectly just and equitable.

Mr. RANDALL. Does this bill give relief in regard to assessments under the Emery government, and also under the board of public works?

Mr. NEAL. Of the assessments made by the board of public works I understand only 33 per cent. was ever collected.

Mr. BRIGGS. Has the assessment in his case ever been adjudicated by any judicial tribunal?

Mr. NEAL. As I understand, it has not, because the authorities of the District were so well satisfied of the correctness of the opinion of the attorney of the District that they acquiesced in it. I think the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. BRIGGS,] who is an eminent lawyer, would, if he looked into the matter, be satisfied that the opinion of the attorney of the District was entirely correct.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NEAL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries; who also announced that the President had approved and signed a bill of the following title:

An act (H. R. No. 797) for the government and control of the harbor of refuge at Sand Beach, Lake Huron, Michigan.

WASHINGTON AND ATLANTIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. PEIRCE. I call up from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. No. 6625) to authorize the Washington and Atlantic Railroad Company to extend a railroad into and within the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas it is represented to this present Congress that the Washington and Atlantic Railroad Company, organized on the 21st day of December, 1881, under the provisions of the act of the General Assembly of the State of Maryland passed at the January session, 1876, chapter 242, embraced in the Revised Code of the State of Maryland, 1878, article 41, desire to extend their railroad into and within the District of Columbia: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Washington and Atlantic Railroad Company shall be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to extend their railroad into and within the District of Columbia as hereinafter provided; and the said Washington and Atlantic Railroad Company are hereby authorized to exercise the same rights and powers and privileges and be subject to the same restrictions in the extension and construction of their railroad into and within the said District as now provided by law for the incorporation of railroad companies in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That before the Washington and Atlantic Railroad Company aforesaid shall proceed to construct any railroad which they may lay out or locate on, through, or over any land or improvements, or to use or take for use any earth, stone, or other material necessary for the construction of said road, or any land within the said District, they shall first obtain the assent of the owner of said land, improvements, or materials; or if said owner shall be absent from said District, or shall refuse to give such assent on such terms as the said company shall approve, or because of infancy, coverture, insanity, or any other cause shall be legally incapable of giving such assent, then it shall be lawful for said company to apply as now provided by law for the incorporation of railroad companies in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 3. That whenever the said company, in the construction of their railroad within the said District as authorized by this act, shall find it necessary to cross or intersect any established road, street, or other way, it shall be the duty of said company to so construct said railroad across such established road, street, or other way, as not to impede the passage of persons or property along the same; and where it shall be necessary to pass said railroad through the land of any individual within the said District, it shall be the duty of said company to provide for such individual wagon-ways across the said railroad as may be necessary and proper from one part of his land to another.

SEC. 4. That the Washington and Atlantic Railroad Company may construct their railroad within the limits of the District of Columbia by the following route: Beginning at a point on the northeastern boundary line of the District of Columbia; thence to a point near the mouth of Piney Branch of Rock Creek, by a route north of and avoiding the Soldiers' Home and any property of the United States; thence by way of Rock Creek, with the necessary tunnels, to the Potomac River; thence by way of Water street in Georgetown to a point near the northeastern terminus of the Aqueduct bridge; and also to construct a branch railroad from a point on said railroad near the mouth of said Rock Creek to the foot of New Hampshire avenue by a route along or south of the right bank of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal: Provided, That said Washington and Atlantic Railroad Company shall construct that part of said railroad along Rock Creek in the valley thereof, or with proper tunnels, and shall pass west of the P street bridge by means of a tunnel west of said P street bridge; and all road-crossings and said tunnel shall be constructed in accordance with plans and specifications to be first approved, in writing, by the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 5. That the said Washington and Atlantic Railroad Company may construct such wharves, piers, and ferry-slips as may be necessary or proper to the transaction of their business, at some convenient points west of Rock Creek, on the Potomac River, such structures to be first approved by the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 6. That the said Washington and Atlantic Railroad Company may charge and receive for tolls and transportation on all the part of said railroad within the District of Columbia a rate not to exceed five cents per ton per mile; and the said company may charge and receive for taking up and setting down any passenger within said District a sum not exceeding twenty cents; and Congress reserves the right to further regulate the cost of transportation of persons and freight over said road within said District.

SEC. 7. That nothing in this act shall be construed to exempt said Washington City and Point Lookout Railroad Company from liability to all damages that may accrue to property along the line of its road within the District of Columbia.

SEC. 8. That unless the said company shall commence the construction of said road within one year from the passage of this act, and complete the same, with at least one set of tracks, to the Potomac River within two years from the passage of this act, then this act and all the privileges hereby granted shall cease and determine.

SEC. 9. That Congress shall have power to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

An amendment, reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia, was read, as follows:

In section 7, line 2, strike out the words "City and Point Lookout," and insert "and Atlantic," so as to read "Washington and Atlantic Railroad Company."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PEIRCE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WASHINGTON CITY AND POINT LOOKOUT RAILROAD.

Mr. PEIRCE. I call up from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. No. 6626) to authorize the Washington City and Point Lookout Railroad Company to extend a railroad into and within the District of Columbia.

The bill was read as follows:

Whereas it is represented to this present Congress that the Washington City and Point Lookout Railroad Company, organized on the 24th day of February, 1872, under the provisions of an act of the General Assembly of the State of Maryland entitled "An act to provide for the creation and regulation of incorporated companies in the State of Maryland," approved April 4, 1870, desires to extend its railroad into and within the District of Columbia: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That the Washington City and Point Lookout Railroad Company shall be, and it is hereby, authorized and empowered to extend its railroad into and within the District of Columbia to a point on the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River known as Poplar Point; thence across said Eastern Branch, with a suitable draw-bridge acceptable to the Secretary of the Navy, to, at, or near where the canal empties into the said Eastern Branch; thence along said canal and its former bed to its intersection with B street southwest. The said Washington City and Point Lookout Railroad Company is hereby authorized to exercise the same powers, rights, and privileges, and be subject to the same restrictions in the extension and construction of its said railroad into and within the said District as may be now exercised by railroad companies organized under the general laws now in force for the incorporation of railroad companies in the District of Columbia; and the Washington City and Point Lookout Railroad Company shall have power to construct a railroad within the said District only along the route and to the terminal point hereinbefore indicated: Provided, That in the condemnation of the route along the line of the canal the amount of damages awarded shall not be less than the actual cost of filling up so much of the old canal as may be condemned and taken by said company; and the amount realized from the condemnation of said route shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That whenever the said company, in the construction of its railroad within the said District as authorized by this act, shall find it necessary to cross or intersect the track of any other railroad, it shall be the duty of said company so to construct the said railroad across such other railroad as to cross above or below the grade of said road; but nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to authorize the said company to enter upon and take any lot or square, or part thereof, owned by the United States or the District of Columbia, within the limits of the District of Columbia, for the purpose of locating or constructing the said railroad, or for the purpose of excavating the same or taking therefrom any materials, or for any other purposes and uses whatsoever, and the said Washington City and Point Lookout Railroad Company may connect within said District with any railroad or canal company chartered or hereafter to be chartered, by such route or routes within said District as have been or as may be hereafter determined by Congress, and upon such terms as may be agreed upon by the said companies respectively, or as may be prescribed by act of Congress.

SEC. 3. That the said Washington City and Point Lookout Railroad Company may charge and receive for tolls and transportation of freights on the part of said railroad within the District of Columbia the same rate that it shall charge and receive therefor on the part of said road without the said District; and the same rate of passenger fare may be established for distances along said road within the said District as shall be established for like distances along said road without the said District; but the right is hereby reserved to regulate the rates of transportation of freight and passengers upon said road by action of Congress.

SEC. 4. That unless the said company shall commence the construction of said railroad within one year, and shall complete the same, with at least one track, within two years from the passage of this act, then this act and all rights and privileges hereby granted shall cease and determine.

SEC. 5. That said railroad company shall not take possession of and occupy the route described in the first section of this act until the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia shall examine said route and ascertain whether the sewer constructed under the said route will be in any way injured or endangered thereby; and if, in his opinion, the construction of a railroad will injure or endanger said sewer, then the grant of said route in said first section contained is hereby annulled. And in case said route is approved, before said railroad company shall proceed to construct its said road within the limits of the District of Columbia it shall have constructed at least fifty miles of its railroad within the State of Maryland.

SEC. 6. That said Washington City and Point Lookout Railroad Company shall, whenever Congress shall provide for the establishment of a union depot in the city of Washington, join with the other railroad companies, upon such terms as Congress may prescribe, for the erection and occupancy of such union depot, and shall lay its tracks in such way and over such streets, highways, and avenues in said District of Columbia as may be required by law.

SEC. 7. That the said Washington City and Point Lookout Railroad Company shall be liable for all damages that may accrue to property along the line of its road within the District of Columbia; and nothing in this act shall be construed to exempt said Washington City and Point Lookout Railroad Company from liability to all damages which may accrue to private property by reason of the location of its said road upon the route set out in this act or elsewhere in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 8. That the rights herein granted and the powers hereby conferred shall not be sold, assigned, granted, or in any wise conveyed to any other corporation or to any person or association of persons without consent of Congress; and any attempt to do so upon the part of said Washington City and Point Lookout Railroad Company shall operate as a forfeiture of all the rights and powers upon said railroad company hereby conferred.

SEC. 9. That Congress may at any time alter, amend, or repeal this act.

Mr. HOBLITZELL. I hold in my hand a communication from the District commissioners, which I desire to have read, and after the reading I propose to put a question to the gentleman in charge of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, March 16, 1882.

SIR: In reply to the letter of the committee dated March 9, transmitting House resolution No. 4760, "to authorize the Washington City and Point Lookout Railroad Company to extend a railroad into and within the District of Columbia," the commissioners have the honor to report that they have heretofore recommended the granting of a charter to the Southern Maryland Railroad to enter the district and to connect with the Metropolitan branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad.

The Southern Maryland Road is already partly constructed and is now being operated. The present bill proposes to grant a charter over practically the same line, the part within the city excepted, to a company which has no completed road and in regard to whose standing and responsibility the commissioners are not informed.

The commissioners are of the opinion that the charter should not be granted.

The bill is herewith returned.

By order of the board.

Very respectfully,

J. DENT, President.

Official copy:

WILLIAM TINDALL, Secretary.

Hon. H. S. NEAL,
Chairman Committee for the District Columbia,
House of Representatives, United States.

Mr. HOBLITZELL. Mr. Speaker, as the passage of this bill practically locates a new line upon a route already laid out by the Southern Maryland Railroad Company, and as the District commissioners in the letter written by them in response to inquiries of the chairman of the committee state their opposition to this bill, I desire to ask what special reasons there are for its passage?

Mr. PEIRCE. There were pending before the District Committee this bill and the bill to incorporate the Southern Maryland Railroad Company. The two roads do not, as stated in the letter of the commissioners, go over substantially the same line; they will be, however, when completed competing roads. The committee thought that as these two companies wish to build roads between the designated points it would be perfectly fair and proper to give them both the chance to do so. For that reason the committee has reported favorably both bills. That with reference to the Southern Maryland Railroad passed the House some time ago. This other bill now comes up for passage.

Mr. HOBLITZELL. But the gentleman could have informed himself of the fact (if he did not know it) that the Southern Maryland Railroad is partially constructed and in operation; and in regard to this other road the commissioners, as they declare in their communication, have no information as to what it has done or proposes to do. This looks to me very much like a competing line put upon paper for some purpose which we can only imagine until we see the effects of the measure.

Mr. PEIRCE. The commissioners say that they have no information in regard to this road; but as a matter of fact some forty or fifty miles of the road are now ready for the iron, and were so at the time the commissioners sent in this communication.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to authorizing the construction of railroads wherever capitalists, other than the Government, can be induced to build them. But I notice that in this bill one of the points fixed on this side of the Anacostia is where the canal emptied into the river; and it is provided that the road shall follow the line of the canal. The canal has been filled up or nearly so, and if this railroad is to occupy that line it seems to me only equity it should reimburse to the Government of the United States the expense which it has been at to fill up the canal.

Mr. NEAL. That is what the bill does.

Mr. RANDALL. I could not tell from the reading of it that such provision was made.

Mr. KENNA. It is precisely that.

Mr. NEAL. I wish to say in reply to the gentleman from Maryland, that these rights do not accrue until they have constructed fifty miles of road. Moreover, the Southern Maryland comes in on one side of the city, connecting with the Metropolitan branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, while this railroad comes in on the other side. It seems to me nothing more than just we should give to one the same advantage we accord to the other.

Mr. KENNA. There is a provision in the bill that the damage to be assessed shall not be less in any instance than the cost to the Government of filling the canal.

Mr. RANDALL. I am glad to know the bill contains just such a provision.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PEIRCE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF DISTRICT LAWS.

Mr. URNER. I have been directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to move that the House Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6236) to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia, and to move that it be put on its passage.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 534 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia be, and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 534. Such society or congregation may assume a name, and any number of trustees, not exceeding ten, who shall be styled trustees of such society or congregation by the name so assumed, may be elected or appointed according to the rules or discipline governing the church or denomination to which said society or congregation may belong."

That section 536 be, and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 536. The trustees shall hold office during the period stated in their certificates, and vacancies in the office of trustee may be filled by election or appointment as provided in section 534; and rules and regulations may be adopted in relation to the management of the estate and the duties of trustees, or for their removal from office, in accordance with the rules or discipline governing the church or denomination to which such society or congregation may belong, not inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States and the laws in force in the District."

That section 537 be, and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 537. At the expiration of the term of service of any of the trustees, one or more successors may be elected or appointed as provided in section 534, and a certificate of their appointment or election shall be made, verified, filed, and recorded as provided in section 535."

That section 541 be, and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 541. The trustees shall have power, under the direction of the society or congregation or the authority by whom they were elected or appointed, to sell and execute deeds and conveyances of the property authorized to be held by the society or congregation; and such deeds or conveyances shall have the same effect as like deeds or conveyances made by natural persons; but no deed or conveyance shall be made so as to defeat or destroy the interest or effect of any grant, donation, or bequest, and all grants, donations, and bequests shall be appropriated and used as directed by the person making the same."

That section 542 be, and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 542. The trustees shall have power, under the direction of the society or congregation, or the authority by whom they were elected or appointed, to execute mortgages, or deeds of trust in the nature of mortgages, upon the estate and property which any society or congregation are authorized to hold, or to lease the same for a term not exceeding ten years. And such mortgages, deeds, and conveyances shall have the same effect and be enforced by the same remedies and proceedings as like mortgages, deeds, leases, and conveyances made by natural persons."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read a third time, and passed.

Mr. URNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KELLEY. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees for reports.

Mr. NEAL. The time has passed when we agreed to yield the floor to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman wish to call up any further business of the District of Columbia?

Mr. NEAL. I do not.

Mr. KELLEY. And I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees for reports.

The motion was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION.

Mr. KELLEY. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to resume the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. CAMP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation.

The pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. WILLIS,] is as follows:

Add to section 2 the following:

"Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury, from and after the 1st of January, 1883, shall grant permission to any firm, individual or corporation to withdraw from bond alcohol or any spirits containing alcohol and subject to internal-revenue tax, in specific quantities of not less than 350 proof-gallons, without the payment of the internal-revenue tax on the same or on the spirits from which it may have been distilled, for the sole purpose of use in industrial pursuits, under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury."

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose against that amendment the point of order was raised that it affected the general system of collection of revenue, internal and from customs.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. When the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] left the House he stated that he was going to Fortress Monroe to attend a sick child. He asked me to attend to this point of order. I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania to make the point of order that it affects the general system of collection of revenue, internal and from customs. Of course any amendment to this bill which affects the internal revenue is in order.

Now, so far as it incidentally affects the revenue from customs, it is merely because there is a duty on foreign alcohol imported through the custom-house. I cannot see, therefore, that it is subject to the point of order in that respect.

Again, as to its being the substance of a bill pending in the House, which would make it amenable to the point of order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has kindly given me the number of the bill to which he referred, that is, House bill No. 5082, "to authorize the withdrawal from distillery warehouse, without tax, of alcohol and other spirits to be used in industrial pursuits," which I understand to be a bill he thinks covers this case. Now, that bill on an examination will be found to provide for the withdrawal from bond of methylated spirits. That is absolutely a different preparation of alcohol, used in the manufactures in that form, from that covered by the pending amendment. It is therefore a substantially different bill. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania holds that because alcohol forms a part of methylated spirits it makes the amendment subject to the point of order, then every article in which alcohol enters as an ingredient might be objected to in any provision regulating the internal revenues. Until the gentleman, therefore, shows some more adequate ground for his objection, or more intimate communication than I am able to perceive between this bill and the pending amendment, I do not think his point of order is well taken and will not be sustained by the Chair.

Mr. KELLEY. I submit to the consideration of the Chair, without argument, the bill (H. R. No. 5082) to which the gentleman from New York has referred, in support of my point of order, with simply this suggestion: that alcohol may be taken out of bond under that provision, whether it be in bond in the custom-house or in bonded warehouses under the internal-revenue laws.

Mr. CARLISLE. Before the Chair passes upon the question I desire to submit one or two suggestions to him, but am willing that the Chair shall examine the bill before I proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already examined the bill referred to.

Mr. CARLISLE. My colleague is unable to be present for the reasons already stated by the gentleman from New York; but I received a request from him that I would give some consideration to this amendment. I desire therefore to call the attention of the Chair and the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the fact that he is entirely mistaken in supposing the amendment now pending would affect in any manner whatever imported alcohol or spirits. The amendment provides that the Secretary of the Treasury—

From and after the 1st of January, 1883, shall grant permission to any firm, individual, or corporation to withdraw from bond alcohol, or any spirits containing alcohol, and subject to internal-revenue taxes on the same, in specific quantities of not less than 350 proof-gallons without the payment of the internal-revenue tax, &c.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Will the gentleman now state the substance of the Willis bill?

Mr. CARLISLE. In a moment. It will be observed, Mr. Chairman, therefore, that it is confined exclusively to alcohol and spirits containing alcohol in bond and subject to internal-revenue tax. The customs duty upon imported alcohol and spirits distilled from grain or other material is $2 per gallon, and was intended to be, of course, sufficiently large to cover the amount of the internal-revenue tax imposed upon the domestic product. But that spirit pays no internal-revenue tax.

The other ground upon which the gentleman from Pennsylvania bases his point of order is that this amendment is in substance the same as the provisions contained in House bill No. 5082. The Chair having already announced that he has examined the bill and the amendment, it will not be necessary of course to hear it again. The bill contains several provisions not contained in the amendment. For instance, it provides that before any such spirits shall be withdrawn, if used, without payment of tax, they shall have been first mixed with one-ninth of their bulk in methyl or wood alcohol, of equal proof strength, and so forth. And then it proceeds to provide for imposing various penalties upon persons who shall offend against the law, whereas the amendment pending is a simple proposition to confer authority upon the Secretary of the Treasury, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to permit the withdrawal from bond of alcohol or spirits containing alcohol to be used in the arts and manufactures.

It seems to me, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that upon neither ground is the point of order well taken.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Chairman, upon the subject as to the point whether the amendment is the substance of a pending bill, I think we might find great light from the remarks which have been made in that connection by the gentleman from Kentucky himself on one occasion when he was in the chair, and which were to the effect that if the amendment to which the point of order was made was of such a character that it accomplished practically the purposes of the bill, so that the original introducer of the bill would find that by virtue of the adoption of the amendment he had no further cause to press or urge his bill, that it then became an amendment containing the substance of another bill, and as such was amenable to the point of order. Now, I submit that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky takes the whole heart or pith and necessity out of any such provision pending before the Ways and Means Committee as the Willis bill, and proposes simply to incorporate it here as an amendment. I claim, therefore, that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I would like to add one word in reply to the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. HASKELL.] The gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, on Saturday called the attention of the House to the fact that alcohol which had not been methylated was in use in a great variety of arts for which methylated alcohol was not used. Therefore, substantially, this must be a different bill from the original bill, which was restricted to methylated spirits; and because the present amendment covers a broader ground than a bill in relation to methylated spirits could have done, it is not substantially the same bill, but is in effect another proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. As regards the first point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that the amendment does not relate to the same subject as the bill, the Chair is compelled to place upon the amendment the same construction as is placed upon it by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. CARLISLE,] namely, that it only refers to internal-revenue taxation. That being so, it seems to the Chair that it does relate to the same subject as the bill.

In reference to the other point of order, that the amendment is in substance the same as the bill which has been produced, the bill No. 5082, the Chair finds that it differs in various respects from that bill. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (S. R. No. 73) providing for the publication at the Government Printing Office of certain information in aid of the Society of the Red Cross.

The message also announced that the Senate further insisted on its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. No. 1723) to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes, agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HARRIS, Mr. INGALLS, and Mr. GORMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4222) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to oppose the amendment on its merits. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] who submits this amendment appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means on more than one occasion on this bill. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue was also heard at length and has furnished us with a statement, which I shall have printed with my remarks,* of the amount of alcohol used in the arts and manufactures during the year ended April

* The following is the statement referred to with the accompanying letter of the Secretary of the Treasury:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, June 22, 1882.

SIR: At the request of the honorable Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives I caused the collectors of internal revenue to make inquiry in their respective districts of manufacturers and others supposed to use alcohol for mechanical, chemical, and scientific purposes as to the quantity of alcohol used in the arts and manufactures during the year ended April 1, 1882; also an estimate of the quantity which would have been used during the year if the tax had been at the rate of 50 cents per gallon, and an estimate of the quantity that would have been so used if there had been no tax on such alcohol.

I now have the honor of transmitting that information, to be forwarded to said committee.

The quantity actually reported by collectors, as shown by the accompanying tabular statement, is as follows:

	Gallons.
At 90 cents per gallon, (actual)	4,269,978
At 50 cents per gallon, would be, (estimate)	5,397,224
Free of tax, would be, (estimate)	7,367,594

From these reports an estimate has been made for the districts not heard from, making the quantity used in the arts and manufactures in the United States for the year ended April 1, 1882, as follows:

	Gallons.
At 90 cents per gallon, (actual)	4,675,301
At 50 cents per gallon, would be, (estimate)	5,910,051
Free of tax, would be, (estimate)	8,088,252

Where the collector has furnished a statement of the kinds of manufactures, &c., in which the alcohol has been used a brief summary of such statement has been entered in an appropriate column in the accompanying statement.

Respectfully,

GREEN B. RAUM, Commissioner.

Hon. CHARLES J. FOLGER, Secretary of the Treasury.

Statement by districts, and in proof-gallons, of the quantity of alcohol used in the arts and manufactures during the year ended April 1, 1882; also the quantity estimated which would have been used in case the tax were 50 cents per gallon, and in case there were no tax.

When the mover of the amendment prepared the bills on which discussion was had in the committee he saw as clearly as did the Commissioner that to pass such a law without peculiar guards and restraints and penalties would be to open the door to much fraud upon the revenue and fraud upon honest dealers who had adhered to the provisions of the law. Accordingly, in his bill of March 13, he provided:

That any person who shall sell, use, or willfully permit the use of spirits withdrawn under this act for any other purpose than that specified herein shall, for each offense, be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and be imprisoned for not less than six months nor more than two years.

And he provided further:

That any violation of the rules and regulations made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, in conformity with this act, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $100 for each offense.

In his other bill the provisions of restraint and punishment were enlarged and were more serious. It prescribed the circumstances under which and the form in which applications should be made, and required the party making such application to—

File a bond for double the amount of the tax on the alcohol or spirits to be withdrawn, with two good and sufficient sureties, to be approved by the collector, &c.

Now, sir, the Commissioner was afraid that, with all these restraints, with all these punitive provisions, the passage of such a provision would open a wide door to fraud, both upon the revenues and upon honest dealers. The gentleman, as I say, recognized this himself, and sought to provide for it in the bill. Yet now the provision has to be put into this bill without any guards or restraints other than that it shall be done under regulations to be provided by the Secretary of the Treasury. There is no provision for punishing the violations of those rules such as was embodied in the gentleman's bill; there is no penalty for other violations; no penalty for using the spirits thus withdrawn for purposes other than those for which they were nominally withdrawn. It would be opening the door to a flood of fraud; and I ask the gentleman, if such a provision is to be put into our internal-revenue laws, it shall be put in with deliberation and with proper restraints and penal provisions, such as the gentleman himself indorsed when he prepared these bills containing them.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, rose.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is a question which perhaps my colleague [Mr. HEWITT] can answer. I desire to inquire what the effect of this amendment if adopted would be upon the revenue; how much it would reduce the revenue?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. About three and a half millions, as near as can be estimated.

Mr. KELLEY. I would like to say, before the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] proceeds, that the best posted men who appeared before our committee failed utterly to give any estimate of what effect such a provision as this would have; not one of them was willing to stake his reputation on any estimate.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would like to inquire whether any one could give the maximum limit?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. No one has estimated that it would decrease the revenue more than three and a half millions. But the larger the amount of revenue repealed by this provision the more important it is that the provision should be adopted, because it would go to show the extent to which alcohol is used and required in the arts.

According to my observation there is no one article embraced within the tariff or internal-revenue system which is of such universal application in the arts as alcohol. My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] very properly said that it was nature's great solvent. Solvent of what? Solvent of the materials which enter into the great chemical industries of this country. And if those industries are to thrive, if they are to be able to enter into competition with similar foreign industries, this barrier must be removed.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania is my witness that there is no one article entering into American manufactures for which relief is so much demanded as the article of alcohol as used in the arts. He has told us that in 1868 he began the attempt to remove this duty. I have read a very able speech of his on the subject in 1872. And in reply to some remarks which I made upon the tariff he again, at great length, advocated the importance of relieving this article from internal-revenue taxation in order that the arts into which it entered might flourish. The gentleman now says that proper safeguards have not been provided by this amendment. I propose to offer an amendment to the amendment, which I will send to the Clerk's desk to be read, which will provide those safeguards. I desire to call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that already in two instances in the legislation of this country it is made possible to withdraw from bond alcohol free; first, where it enters into the preparation of cosmetics and other perfumery articles for exportation; and second, for the use of scientific institutions that may have occasion to use alcohol in their chemical experiments.

Now, if this withdrawal of alcohol from bond free of duty can be carried on, and is carried on now on a small scale, without danger to the revenue, surely the great Treasury Department, which has been adequate to collecting hundreds of millions of revenue and of funding thousands of millions of dollars, and is able to protect itself in the most remote corners of the country, can make such regulations as will relieve this needed article from the imposition which now interferes with many of the largest and most important industries of the country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to ask a single question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] has expired.

Mr. HISCOCK. I notice in the amendment that it provides for withdrawing from bond "alcohol or any spirits containing alcohol." What is meant by "any spirits containing alcohol?"

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I suppose it means only distilled spirits.

Mr. CARLISLE. That is what is meant.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I do not suppose it can have any other construction.

Mr. CARLISLE. Wines do not go into bonded warehouses.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I ask that my amendment be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And provided further, That any person who shall sell, use, or willfully permit the use of spirits withdrawn under this act for any other purpose than that specified therein shall for each offense be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and be imprisoned for not less than six months nor more than two years: And provided further, That any violation of the rules and regulations made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, in conformity with this act, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $100 for each offense.

Mr. HASKELL rose.

Mr. VALENTINE. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. VALENTINE. I understand that this is the rest of the bill, which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] failed to offer at first.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. On the contrary, it is a penalty attached to a provision which has been ruled to be in order. I can offer a penalty to any provision whatever which is in order. The subject-matter of the amendment is still different from that of the bill referred to by the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair still thinks that this is not in substance the same as the bill referred to, although it is an additional portion of that bill.

Mr. HASKELL. This whole subject was up before the Committee on Ways and Means and was discussed exhaustively and thoroughly. For a wonder it was a proposition against which there was not a single objection made by any member of the committee that I now remember; that is, the principle of the proposition. The general idea of taking off the internal-revenue tax from alcohol to the extent that alcohol is used in the arts and sciences was not combated by a single member of the committee. Every member of the committee desired that it should be done.

But when we came to consider the bill, which is only imperfectly represented by the amendment of the gentleman from New York, a majority of the committee upon consultation with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, feared that the bill was not sufficiently guarded, was not drawn with sufficient care; nor were the committee prepared to draft a provision which in their judgment could be adopted by the House with safety. It is easy enough to say, Mr. Chairman, that this alcohol shall be withdrawn under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe. But the Secretary of the Treasury cannot make law; he cannot prescribe rules which shall go to the apprehension of men who violate the law. The rules which the Secretary of the Treasury might make under the provisions of this amendment would be lame and impotent. This amendment cannot give to the Secretary of the Treasury plenary authority to legislate on the subject of free alcohol, so as to impose restrictions and penalties to be effective in the form of law.

One word in regard to the proposition to allow alcohol to be used in the arts without the payment of tax, after it has been methylated; that is, after it has been mixed with wood alcohol to such an extent as to be utterly useless except in the arts. This process has been known in England for twenty years, but only a year or two ago there was discovered a process by which the methylated alcohol could be purified. This being the fact, the committee were afraid to report a provision sanctioning the free use of methylated alcohol.

I hope that the Committee of the Whole will not adopt as an amendment to this bill a proposition which embodies a very valuable idea, but which, clothed in the phraseology of the gentleman from New York, fails utterly to protect the Treasury against imposition and fraud. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I am in hearty sympathy with the objects of this amendment, and, as the chairman of the committee knows, urged the committee to report in favor of the bill of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. WILLIS.] That measure provided suitable safeguards to protect the revenue. This amendment does not do so.

I do not agree with my friend from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] that there is any danger from the use of methylated alcohol in the arts and industrial pursuits. I deny that wood alcohol can be separated from the grain alcohol so as to use the latter in the compounding of beverages.

Within ten days experiments have been made at the Smithsonian Institution, upon my suggestion, in compounding wood alcohol (which is known as the skunk of chemistry) with grain alcohol. I have the result of the experiments at my room, together with bottles containing the preparations. The chemist who has made these experiments reports that it is practically impossible to make the separation so as to use the grain alcohol for compounding beverages, because, although the separation can be made, the process is a tedious one, and the grain alcohol, after being separated, has still the scent of the skunk alcohol, together with such a trace of the taste that even a toper would turn up his unæsthetic nose at the smell or taste of it.

I wish to say to my friend from New York that his amendment does not properly provide against frauds; and while I am as much in favor of the object sought as he can be, I am not in favor of adopting an amendment which opens the door to fraud, as this does. If the bill of the gentleman from Kentucky were before us I should favor it most earnestly; but I submit that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue cannot prescribe penalties, cannot make law, or send men to the penitentiary for violating the regulations he may adopt.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Would it not be possible under this amendment for the Secretary of the Treasury to require all the alcohol taken out for this purpose to be methylated?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I think it would. It is a question, however, how far you could punish men for violating a regulation prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Apart from that, there is abundant opportunity to accomplish this object in a legitimate and proper way; and heartily as I am in favor of the purpose which the amendment seeks, I am not willing to seek that purpose in a manner which the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the Secretary of the Treasury believe will open the door to fraud. In view of the full examination they have given to this question, I would prefer to rely on their judgment rather than trust to the off-hand judgment of one who has not given the measure the full and careful consideration which it ought to receive.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HEWITT, of New York, to the amendment of Mr. WILLIS, it was not agreed to; there being—ayes 47, noes 89.

The question recurring on the amendment of Mr. WILLIS, there were—ayes 58, noes 89.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, called for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HERBERT. I move to amend by inserting as a new section the provision which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. —. That hereafter the special tax of a dealer in manufactured tobacco shall not be required from any farmer, planter, or lumberman who furnishes such tobacco only as rations or supplies to his laborers or employés in the same manner as other supplies are furnished by him to them: Provided, That the aggregate of the supplies of tobacco so by him furnished shall not exceed in quantity one hundred pounds in any one special tax year; that is, from the 1st day of May in any year until the 30th day of April in the next year: And provided further, That such farmer, planter, or lumberman shall not be, at the time he is furnishing such supplies, engaged in the general business of selling dry goods, groceries, or other similar supplies in the manner of a merchant or store-keeper to others than his own employés or laborers.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, if I can get the attention of the House for the few moments allotted me, I think I shall be able to show that this amendment ought to pass. It will work no material change in the amount of revenue received. Its simple purpose is to correct the law in a feature now deemed to be harsh and oppressive. This amendment was prepared at my instance by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and I have here a letter from him, in which he says:

The subject-matter of this amendment has been many times considered by this office. I am of the opinion that its passage would be judicious.

Its purpose simply is to declare that a farmer or a lumberman who buys tobacco as rations for his hands, just as he buys sugar or coffee or flour, shall not be compelled to take out a license as a dealer in manufactured tobacco, and it provides he shall sell it to no one else except his own employés, and then to an extent of not greater than one hundred pounds a year.

A few years ago Mr. Justice Woods, now upon the Supreme Bench, having to pass sentence on a defendant convicted under this law, deprecated the duty he had to perform and said the law was a harsh law. And such is the opinion, as I have shown you, of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

There is no reason why persons who live at a distance from stores, as is frequently the case in the South and as must be the case in sparsely-settled portions of the West, should not be allowed to furnish rations of tobacco as well as other things for the convenience of their laborers or employés.

A laborer ten miles away from a store cannot afford to go there every time he wants a plug of tobacco. The law now compels him to do it, or compels his employer, if he desires to buy a box of tobacco to furnish to his laborers, to take out a license and pay a tax as a special dealer. That tax of course must be reimbursed to the employer, and he can only reimburse himself by collecting it out of the laborers. If he buys but $20 worth of tobacco he must pay $5, or under this bill $2.40 which he must collect, ratably from the few laborers for whose convenience that tobacco is bought.

Mr. Chairman, that tobacco has already paid tax three or four times. The dealer at Lynchburgh or Richmond who first sells must take out his license. The seller in the distributing city of each State takes out a license, and he pays a tax. He sells to a dealer in a country town, who also pays a tax. This law compels the lumberman or farmer, who buys tobacco as I have said by the box, to pay a tax on tobacco which has already paid tax three or four times.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HERBERT. One word in addition, if the House will indulge me. A great many indictments have been found under this law against persons who did not suppose they were dealers, and had no conception that they ought to take out license as dealers. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that this is one of the harsh provisions of the internal-revenue law. It is like that which prevents selling leaf tobacco except it is to a licensed dealer in leaf tobacco. It is an inherent part of a system. If we are to collect taxes these restraints are unavoidable, and therefore it is I am anxious to get these laws repealed, to get the tobacco tax repealed at the earliest practicable day through a formal bill, and to put spirits in such shape that the arts can have them, the importance of which cannot be exaggerated.

Mr. HERBERT. The Commissioner who is administering this law does not think it is a necessary part of the law, but that it ought to be remedied.

Mr. KELLEY. I have told my friend I sympathize with him, and if I were acting individually I would be glad to settle it. While it would be convenient to many lumbermen in the wilds and others, it would open a door that could be resorted to by others by which one class of persons while paying no tax would undersell those who met the requirements of the law.

Mr. HERBERT. Let me say the amendment prohibits them from competing with anybody else, as it allows them only to sell to their employés.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I desire to offer the following amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the first paragraph add the following:

"Or to sell to any person not exceeding in any one year the aggregate sum of $100.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama will afford no relief to the tobacco growers of my State.

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman does not seem to understand it. It is not for the purpose of affording relief to tobacco growers, but simply to dealers in manufactured tobacco.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I wish relief for the farmers of Illinois as well as for the farmers of Alabama, and I wish it amended so as to relieve at the same time the farmers of Illinois.

And I am unable to see how any member can, consciously or consistently, vote against my amendment. We put no restriction upon the right of the farmer to sell any of the products of his soil or of his labor, except his tobacco. I simply ask in this amendment that the farmer shall be permitted to sell at least $100 worth of leaf tobacco without being compelled to hunt up a licensed dealer to find a market. If gentlemen can give a monopoly to licensed dealers for the purchase of the tobacco crops of the country, why may they not go a little further and give a monopoly for the purchase of grain, of the wheat, or corn, or any other product of the soil? And where is the fairness or justice of the law which deprives the farmer, to the extent of $100 at least, of selling to his neighbors or to anybody else tobacco of his own soil or culture?

Mr. HASKELL. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question, and if he will answer it categorically and satisfactorily I will vote for his amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I do not propose to allow my five minutes to be consumed by allowing the gentleman to take it up in asking questions.

Mr. HASKELL. I will only ask a single question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I decline to yield for a question. I have no time. It is just as plain as that two and two make four that this is but a simple act of justice to allow the farmer who raises tobacco by his own toil, and by the sweat of his brow, the liberty of selling the small quantity to his neighbor which I have incorporated in this amendment.

I live, Mr. Chairman, in a locality where there are few licensed tobacco dealers, and farmers of my district who raise tobacco must go sometimes many miles before he can find a licensed dealer. It is a great injustice to require such a thing. It is a hardship that, when the attention of the House is called to it, it ought to be willing to remedy, and I sincerely hope this committee will extend that small privilege to the producers of tobacco. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alabama would be of advantage only to the people of the Southern States. I ask the adoption of this amendment as an act of justice to the people of my section of the country as well.

Mr. HERBERT. My amendment would be of equal advantage to the people of the West as well as the Southern people.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I ask this simply, I say, as a matter of right and justice.

Mr. HASKELL. Now, will the gentleman from Illinois answer me a question in my own time, and if he will answer it satisfactorily I will vote for his amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Very well.

Mr. HASKELL. I wish to ask how by that amendment of the honorable gentleman from Illinois the internal-revenue collector is to know whether a man has sold $100 worth of tobacco or $10 worth or $90 worth more than the law allows him to sell?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I will answer in a word.

Mr. HASKELL. Do it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If the internal-revenue officials can now ascertain that he has not sold a pound of tobacco they can just as easily ascertain whether he has sold over $100 worth or not. Under the present law the farmer cannot sell a dime's worth of tobacco except to a licensed dealer. Now, if the internal-revenue officials can determine that he has not sold a dime's worth, then they can just as easily determine whether he has sold $100 worth or not.

Mr. HASKELL. In other words, if you legislate with an "if"——

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It is equally plain and just as readily determined.

Mr. HASKELL. In other words, if we legislate with an "if" and an "if" and an "if" then you may be able to get at the facts. But we are not legislating in that way.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. They can ascertain if they sell tobacco to anybody who is not a licensed dealer.

Mr. HASKELL. Not if the gentleman's amendment is adopted.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment to the amendment already pending. The question is on the amendment to the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Illinois.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 35, noes 86.

So the amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says that the principle of this bill is right, and that he greatly sympathizes with the farmers of the South in the hardships under which they labor owing to the operations of the internal-revenue-tax system upon their industries. The sympathy of the gentleman is very creditable to him, but it is not worth one cent to the farmers of the South. He says this thing ought to be done to relieve them, and he would be willing to have it done in a formal bill, but not here. I introduced in this House a bill on the 20th day of last February and had it referred to the committee of which the gentleman is chairman, embracing all of the provisions of this bill so far as relief is concerned, but not going quite so far, to the extent that it did not embrace lumbermen, and which I concede is not perhaps so well guarded as this amendment is. But no action has been taken upon it. The committee present this state of facts: they say we want to do right, but it ought to be done under a formal bill; and yet we have had a bill from the 20th of last February until now which we have not acted upon. They refused to report that bill, and yet when it comes to a vote here they think this ought to be voted down, though right in itself, because it is not in proper form. I hope the committee will adopt the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Alabama; it is right and proper and gives very necessary relief.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I desire to offer an amendment which I think will be satisfactory.

Mr. KELLEY. Upon the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama I repeat that the internal tax system——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will suspend. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BUTTERWORTH.]

Mr. KELLEY. I am replying on the amendment now pending. The gentleman from Ohio desires to propose another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will proceed.

Mr. KELLEY. I reiterate that the internal-tax system involves hardships of the most annoying character, hardships inconsistent with our institutions, hardships that destroy the freedom of trade between American citizens. They are unhappily inherent in the internal-tax system. I have resisted the reporting of all bills which would relieve one class of tax-payers at the cost not only of the revenue but of other classes who pay their taxes, and would be in competition with the class which may have found relief.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk, which I think will be satisfactory to my friend from Alabama; not, however, that I would vote for his amendment even with this proviso.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment the following:

"Provided, That the farmer, planter, or lumberman shall not charge for the tobacco so sold by him under the provisions hereof more than the cost of the same with cost of carriage added."

Mr. HERBERT. I will accept the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio if he will assist me in adding my amendment to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama accept the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. HERBERT. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] as modified by his accepting the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BUTTERWORTH.]

Mr. HERBERT. I accept it in good faith.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I have no doubt you do.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment as modified, there were—ayes 65, noes 77.

Mr. HERBERT. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. RUSSELL and Mr. HERBERT were appointed.

The committee again divided. Before the vote reported by the tellers was announced,

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair votes in the negative.

Mr. CASSIDY then passed between the tellers, voting in the affirmative.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote stands 90 to 90, and the amendment is lost.

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] has just passed between the tellers, making one more vote in the affirmative.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote had been announced. The vote of the gentleman from Georgia is too late.

Mr. RANDALL. There is one more vote; the gentleman from Georgia has voted in the affirmative.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia had not passed between the tellers when the Chair announced the vote.

Mr. RANDALL. The Chair by announcing the vote checked him when he was going through.

Mr. BLOUNT. I was here and was trying to pass between the tellers when the vote was announced. Whether the Chair saw me or not, I was in the act of passing between the tellers when the vote was announced.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask for a recount.

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, no; the amendment is carried. I say the Chair has no right to cut off a vote by making an announcement when a gentleman is in the act of passing between the tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hopes, as there was some confusion, that there will be a recount. The Chair, when it made the announcement of the vote, understood that all gentlemen desiring to vote had done so.

Mr. RANDALL. I stated to the Chair there was another vote coming.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair waited for some time to see if any other gentleman wanted to pass between the tellers, and then announced the result. But as the gentleman states that he desired to vote, and was about passing between the tellers when the result of the vote was announced, the Chair requests the tellers to make a recount, and the Chair desires to repeat what it stated the other day, that, in the first place, gentlemen who desire to vote in the affirmative will pass through between the tellers when requested to do so, and not until requested; then those in the negative, but not till those desiring to vote in the negative are requested to pass through. The Chair will then again request that any other gentlemen desiring to vote in the affirmative shall pass through; and the Chair will then further request that the negative vote shall pass through.

Mr. RANDALL. Gentlemen, whether they come or not when requested, have the right to pass between the tellers until the vote is announced.

The CHAIRMAN. Undoubtedly; but the announcement by the Chair had been made before the last vote, that of the gentleman from Georgia, was announced by the tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 94, noes 98.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

Here the committee informally rose, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 5559) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. DIBRELL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as a new section the following:

"SEC. —. That from and after the passage of this act, farmers and others producing leaf tobacco, or persons receiving leaf tobacco for rent, may sell and dispose of such leaf tobacco to consumers and others upon the premises where raised or where received for rent to the value of $120 without the payment of any tax whatever; and all laws or parts of laws in conflict with this section are hereby repealed."

Mr. KELLEY. I make the point of order on the amendment that that matter has been disposed of already.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order that the amendment is in substance the same as an amendment already voted on.

Mr. DIBRELL. On the point of order I desire to say that no such amendment has been offered. This requires farmers to sell on the premises and allows them to sell $120 worth. There has been no such amendment offered. It is for the benefit of sections of the country where there is no licensed dealer. In large sections of the country there are no licensed dealers and the farmers who raise such large crops of tobacco are prohibited at present from selling it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. This is not at all the substance of the amendment offered by myself, if the gentleman alludes to that.

Mr. KELLEY. There were other amendments offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is very similar to some amendments which have been read.

Mr. McMILLIN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. HATCH?]

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. McMILLIN. That amendment in some respects resembles this, but differs from it in this respect: the producer under the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri might sell his tobacco even in a different county. But the amendment of my colleague [Mr. DIBRELL] requires the tobacco to be sold on the premises, and in that it is very materially different from the other.

Mr. DIBRELL. And it is different in regard to the amount to be sold.

The CHAIRMAN. With the permission of the committee the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DIBRELL] will be allowed to speak upon the merits of his amendment, while the Chair is examining the point of order.

Mr. REAGAN. One word on the point of order. The same amendment is not to be received twice; but the substance of an amendment once acted upon, if enlarged or diminished, is receivable under the rules of the House.

Mr. DIBRELL. The object of my amendment is for the benefit of producers of tobacco in the interior where there is no licensed dealer. For instance, in the county where I live there is no licensed dealer in tobacco, while there are probably one hundred producers of tobacco in the county. Yet under the law as it now stands producers of tobacco are not allowed to sell to any one except a licensed dealer, and consequently they are practically prohibited from selling their tobacco. I hope the House will adopt this amendment for the benefit of the farmers.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Any producer of tobacco shall be authorized to sell in open market tobacco produced by him without paying any special tax thereon: Provided, The amount so produced and sold by him in one year does not exceed 500 pounds: And provided further, That such tobacco so sold shall be subject in the hands of the purchaser to the tax now imposed by law: And provided further, That before making such sale he shall report the amount he proposes to sell to the collector of the district in which he resides, who shall thereupon give a written permission to make such sale.

Mr. WILSON. I would like to have the attention of gentlemen who have been opposing amendments somewhat similar to mine, while I say a word for the purpose of pointing out the difference between the amendment I have offered and other amendments which have been offered.

My amendment hedges about and throws safeguards around provisions by which it is sought to benefit the farmers. It proposes to allow producers the privilege of selling their tobacco in open market without paying special tax, the tobacco when in the hands of the purchaser to be subject to the tax now imposed by law, and the amount to be sold to be limited to 500 pounds.

Now, to meet the objection urged by the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. HASKELL,] I propose by my amendment that before the producer shall sell his tobacco he shall report to the collector of the district what he proposes to sell, and also the amount that he proposes to sell; and that the collector shall thereupon give to him a written permission to make such sale. He may even be required to make his report under oath.

As the law now stands it amounts to almost a prohibition against the producers of tobacco in the best tobacco regions of the country from making any sales of the product of their labor. Take my section of the country, where we have that magnificent soil of limestone and loam, best adapted for the production of tobacco. Poor men in that region who purchase cheap forest lands, partially on credit, are not able to clear their land, support their families, and lay aside money enough to pay off the vendor's lien which hangs over them. Hence, when they have a few acres cleared, they engage in the production of tobacco, which yields the largest profit of any of our crops.

Some of them reside many miles from any tobacco dealer, and as the law now stands they are not allowed to sell to any one else. In the winter time especially the roads in that region are in bad condition and transportation is difficult. Hence it is that many of them have to hold their crops over and sell at reduced prices. The Committee on Commerce, influenced by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. HOBR.] objected to making an appropriation for the improvement of the Little Kanawha River, which would have given increased facilities for transportation to some of my constituents.

Now, if you adopt this amendment of mine, you will allow the producer of tobacco to sell 100, 200, 300, or even 500 pounds of tobacco to a merchant without paying any special tax thereon. Of course the purchaser will deduct from the amount paid the producer whatever tax he may be obliged himself to pay under the law. But the producer would very much rather pay several times the amount of that tax than to be denied the privilege of selling his tobacco at all except to a dealer.

If you do not give relief in that regard to the farmers of the country, with what propriety can we look our constituents in the face when we return to them? You have proposed to give relief to the manufacturers of proprietary medicines, to the manufacturers of matches, to all those parties who use stamps. Now, here is a great industrial interest of the country for which we ask a poor boon, hedged in with all the safeguards that the gentleman from Kansas has demanded. Why can you not extend some little relief to the farmer as well as to the moneyed men of the country?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I would ask the gentleman if his amendment provides that after the tobacco is sold the seller shall report the amount so sold?

Mr. WILSON. He has to report the amount he proposes to sell.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Should he not be required to report the amount sold and the name of the purchaser?

Mr. WILSON. I am willing to adopt that suggestion. I want to have the provisions so fixed that no imposition can be practiced, that the revenue laws shall not be evaded, that the Government shall not lose a dime or a dollar. But I do ask that the farmers shall have some benefit from your legislation here. [Here the hammer fell.] For the present, Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw my amendment to the amendment, and offer it hereafter as an original proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection the amendment will be regarded as withdrawn.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to one fact involved in all these amendments which have been suggested. The price of tobacco is fixed in the market by the cost of production with the tax added. Now, if you grant to a class of producers the right to sell tobacco without any one paying the tax, you practically give to that class a bounty of 16 cents a pound, because in such cases the producer obtains the producer's price of the tobacco with the tax added.

Mr. WILSON. The producer of the tobacco, in consideration of the fact that he has to pay no tax, will gladly make a concession in price to the purchaser.

Mr. DINGLEY. But the producer will of course obtain the market price, in which the tax is included, and the practical result will be to give a bounty of 16 cents per pound to all persons of the classes whom these amendments propose to favor.

Now, it seems to me the fair and square proceeding with reference to the tax on tobacco and the tax on whisky is either to retain the tax as it is, and tax all alike, or else exempt all; we should not give to one class a privilege not enjoyed by others.

Mr. DIBRELL. How can a producer sell his tobacco under the present law if there is no licensed dealer in his section of the country?

Mr. DINGLEY. Practically there is no difficulty on that point.

Mr. DIBRELL. Oh, yes; there is.

Mr. DINGLEY. All these amendments are intended simply to favor a particular class, at the expense of other classes. They are designed to create monopolies in the hands of the persons who are thus favored—a thing contrary to the spirit of our institutions.

Mr. Chairman, I have opposed the several amendments coming from the Democratic side to repeal or reduce the tax on whisky, fermented liquors, and tobacco, for the reason that these are taxes on luxuries. No principle of just and wise taxation is better settled than that taxes should be imposed so far as possible on luxuries, and as light as possible on necessaries when this taxation increases their cost. Luxuries may be dispensed with, and in case of liquors and tobacco with positive advantage, and therefore no one pays the tax imposed upon them unless he does so voluntarily. But in the case of necessaries of life any tax that increases their cost is one from which no one, however poor, can escape.

The Federal Government is supported by indirect taxation. About two hundred millions are derived from duties on imports; and one hundred and forty from internal taxes, of which all but seventeen millions comes from liquors and tobacco. The bill under consideration proposes to remove these seventeen millions. I concur in this proposition so far as the stamp tax on friction matches, checks, and medicines are concerned, amounting to about eight millions, but I should prefer not to remove the nine millions collected on deposits of banks and bankers; at least until the tariff shall be revised, and we shall ascertain how much can be taken off in directions where it will reduce the cost of necessaries of life.

If I could have my way I would at once reduce the duty on sugar and molasses to the extent of the 25 per cent. added in 1875 to supply a deficiency in the revenue. I would eventually reduce it more, but this should come off at once in order to place the duty on sugar in the relative position which it occupied from 1861 to 1875. The average duty on sugar and molasses up to 1875 was 44 per cent.; since that time it has stood at the enormous figure of 55 per cent., yielding the present year more than $53,000,000 of revenue, or $1 to every man, woman, and child in the country.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] and other gentlemen on the Democratic side have asked why the duty on sugar should be selected for a reduction in preference to common sheetings, on which he told us there is a duty of 40 per cent. levied. I will tell him. The duty on cotton goods does not increase the cost of common sheetings, for the reason that all we need are and can be produced in this country, and hence the price is determined by the lowest possible cost of production here, under the influence of competition. I have myself tested the fact that the common sheetings which the laborer uses can be bought as low in this country as in England. It is only the finer cotton goods which the well-to-do classes use, and into which our higher cost labor largely enters, that cost more than in Europe.

It is asked why impose duties on imported cotton goods if we can make them as cheaply here as in Europe? It is only the common goods, in which labor is a very small element, with whose production we can compete. We might take the duty from them if it were not for the fact that the moment we did so the English manufacturers would glut our markets at temporary reduced prices, to break down our mills.

So when gentlemen say that we impose a duty of 40 per cent. on cotton goods they willfully ignore the fact that this duty does not increase the cost of the common sheetings which families of small means use. It only increases the cost of the fine goods used as luxuries by well-to-do families, and even in their cases very rarely to the extent of the duty. The same is substantially true of woolen goods. Coarse woolens are not more than 15 per cent. higher in this country than in England. It is the fine woolens used by the wealthy and fashionable that are 40 and 50 per cent. higher.

Now, take sugar and molasses, which are used as necessaries by the poor to the same extent as the rich. The invoice value of the sugar and molasses imported into this country last year was about $90,000,000, on which there was paid a duty of a little less than $50,000,000. About $6,000,000 more came in under the Hawaiian reciprocity treaty free of duty, but of course with the duty added when it was sold. Only about $6,000,000 worth of sugar and molasses was produced in this country. If we could have produced all these articles in this country home competition would have determined the price, but as we did not produce one-twentieth of our consumption, the duty of 55 per cent. was added to the cost of every pound of sugar used in this country last year; and every family of ten, however poor, paid a tax of over $10 to the Government for the sugar and molasses which they used. But the same family did not pay a tax of a single cent on the cotton cloth which they used.

The principle by which indirect taxation is distributed is this: taxes on home products, as for example the tax on whisky and tobacco, are added to the price of the article and are paid, not by the grower of leaf-tobacco or of corn, not by the manufacturer, but by the consumer. The assertion that the farmer who grows corn or leaf tobacco is in any way affected by the tax on whisky and tobacco, except so far as either is a consumer, has no foundation.

A duty levied on imports is also added to the price of the article where the home production is not and cannot promptly be made equal to the consumption. Where an article is made, or can be promptly made at home in sufficient quantity to supply the home consumption, then the price of the article is determined by the cost of home production under the influence of competition, and the duty can rarely ever be charged to the consumer.

There is general agreement in the conviction that the time has arrived when we may begin to make another systematic reduction of the taxation rendered necessary to preserve the life of the nation. Five times before, since the war closed, has the Republican party reduced taxation—the annual reductions reaching more than $280,000,000. This has been done, too, in face of the fact that we have paid not only the interest on the war debt, and reduced the annual interest from $150,000,000 to $55,000,000, but also have paid more than $1,000,000,000 of the principal, $500,000,000 in pensions, and over $250,000,000 of claims arising from the war.

But in making further reductions of taxation Congress should be guided by the single purpose of aiding the masses and the industries of the country as far as possible, and in all indirect taxation should make the burdens fall on the luxuries rather than the necessaries of life.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. DIBRELL, there were—ayes 67, noes 95.

Mr. DIBRELL. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. DIBRELL and Mr. RUSSELL were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 89, noes 99.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I move to amend by adding to the second section the proviso which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That any producer of leaf tobacco shall be authorized to sell in open market tobacco produced by him without paying any special tax thereon, provided the amount so produced and sold by him in one year does not exceed five hundred pounds: And provided, That such tobacco so sold shall be subject, in the hands of the purchaser, to the tax now imposed by law: And provided further, That before making such sale he shall report the amount he proposes to sell to the collector of the district in which he resides and who shall thereon give a written permission to make such sale; and after such sale the producer shall report to the collector the amount sold, and the names and residence of the person to whom sold, and the place of residence of each, and any person selling leaf tobacco in violation of this act shall, upon conviction, be fined in any sum not exceeding $500.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I hope that my Republican friends will hear me for a moment. Here is a proposition to allow the farmer to sell not more than five hundred pounds of leaf tobacco in a year, which may be all he raises. In order to do this he must first apply to the collector of the district and obtain written permission; and he is also required to report to the collector the amount sold, together with the name and residence of the person to whom it is sold.

Mr. VALENTINE. How soon must he make report?

Mr. WILSON. I hope the gentleman will let me state my amendment. The producer selling tobacco in this way is required to give the names of the parties to whom he sells and their places of residence; and any person failing to comply with these requirements is liable upon conviction to a fine not exceeding $500.

I respectfully submit that the provisions of this amendment protect the interests of the Government as clearly and completely as any provision now upon our statute-books.

The gallant mountain people whom I represent come here and say: "We are willing to relieve you bank men from your tax on deposits. This relief will be mutual, as the borrowers of money have to pay all the necessary bank expenses. We desire to borrow your money. We desire to improve our lands, to sell our timber, to bridge our streams, and to clear up our farms. We are willing to aid you in taking off the tax upon deposits and on bank checks, as the necessary means of securing to us cheap money. At the same time we ask the poor boon of being allowed to sell the small amount of tobacco that we produce so as to get a fair price for it." With those people, hemmed in behind those mountain ridges, it costs almost as much to get small amounts of tobacco to market under the present law as the tobacco will bring. Gentlemen who are to receive these boons, these favors in the way of remission of taxes, should not deny to the farmer this privilege. If you refuse this you practically prohibit, in many portions of the country, the production of the most valuable article which the farmer can raise. Poor men buy their land for farming purposes, paying a small percentage in cash and giving notes or mortgages for the balance. After a while it is necessary for them to apply to the banks to raise money to pay off the mortgage. Men in such circumstances desire the privilege of raising and selling the most valuable product that they can raise to pay off their farm debts at the earliest practicable day. Mr Chairman, I desire also to add—— [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HORR. Mr. Chairman, I do hope this House will not listen with any degree of credence to this talk about helping the farmer in that country on this tobacco bill. I have lived among them, and I say to you all the whole of this scheme is to dodge the tax and not pay it at all.

Mr. WILSON. So far as my amendment is concerned that is not true in whole or in part.

Mr. HORR. It will be true in this very instance, and it cannot help it. It is for the purpose of getting a way out and cheating the Government out of revenue.

Mr. WILSON. So far as my amendment is concerned that statement is utterly untrue.

Mr. HORR. I do not mean to say my friend here means to do that, but I say the machinery he puts in here is put in simply for the purpose of opening the door for fraud and letting the people through that door. [Laughter.] That is what I say. [Laughter.] Either repeal this tax on tobacco, or let it stand, one of the two; and so long as it does stand let us have it so it can be collected in a sensible business way. There is no trouble down there about men selling their tobacco if they raise it. And my friend knows it.

Mr. WILSON. I know there is trouble about selling it—trouble about getting it to market.

Mr. HORR. Of course there is risk if he tries to cheat the Government. There is risk if you violate the law, and none if you do not. To the man who keeps the law there is no risk. This whole fol-de-rol is to get up some method by which they can dodge the tax entirely, and I am opposed to it.

Mr. WHITE. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. HORR. I cannot.

Mr. WILSON. If the gentleman from Michigan can get enough salt to save his bacon, he thinks it is all well with everybody else. [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Oh, they think it is right to protect the salt monopoly.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Chairman, it will be apparent to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] that so far as his amendment is concerned it does not anywhere provide when the seller shall report the sale, whether the next day, the next week, or whether at any time before the Second Advent. [Laughter.]

Mr. KENNA. Then, why do you not move to amend it in that regard?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I will move to amend by striking out and inserting the following:

And provided further, That such sales and reports shall be made in conformity to such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe. And any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section, or the regulations made in pursuance hereof, shall be deemed to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $500, and imprisonment not more than one year.

I shall not vote for the amendment, but what I offer is intended to perfect it. The provision suggested by my honorable friend from West Virginia looks to tearing down all the safeguards thrown around the collection of the internal revenue of the country. I am in favor of repealing the entire tax at an early day.

Mr. WILSON. Then why in thunder don't you do it. [Great Laughter.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Simply this: I want it done understandingly and with reference to the needs of the country. It will not escape observation that upon the Democratic side of the House you are not charged with nor do you feel any responsibility at all so far as the legislation of this session is concerned.

Mr. FLOWER. But you are.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. You have introduced amendments to this bill which, if adopted and the bill should become a law, would leave the Government in default for the payment of the interest on the national debt or the pensions due to your soldiers, and you voted for every one of them.

Mr. RANDALL. And you have expended money enough on that side to ruin the Government.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. So far as you are concerned, my friend, [addressing Mr. RANDALL,] you seek to destroy the internal-revenue system because you are bound to the wheel of the iron chariot of Pennsylvania. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. RANDALL. There is not a word of truth in that.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I submit to the country whether my statement is correct or not.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Ohio has no right to say what he has in reference to me.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I am sorry I touched the gentleman on the raw. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. RANDALL. When the gentleman tells an untruth about me he always does that.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. You will have your time. You gentlemen on that side expect to catch the political "coon a-going or a-coming" next fall. [Laughter.] A part of you assail the internal revenue throughout its length and breadth, and the rest of you sit by and assail the whole tariff system; while one of you bows to his constituents and exhorts them to be faithful because he has stood by the tariff, another bows to his constituents and demands their support because of his attempt to break it down. [Laughter and applause.]

I have said you are not charged with the responsibility of the legislation of this session, and realizing that fact as you do, you feel free to vote for any and every amendment offered without regard to its fitness or propriety, or its effect upon the public revenue. And having offered and voted for every conceivable amendment, you return to your admiring constituents, and bending over a pine plank six or eight inches wide, you explain to them how each one of the amendments proposed by you would, if adopted, have brought about that perfect perennial prosperity for which a long-suffering people are sighing. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RANDALL. I have not here voted for a single amendment to the pending bill except in perfect good faith, and because I believed that if this Government was honestly and economically administered every dollar of the revenue now raised by internal taxation could be dispensed with.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I have not charged the gentleman with having shown bad faith, but simply urged his good faith to the iron interest of Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Ohio says that I was chained to the iron car of the tariff so far as Pennsylvania was concerned.

Mr. HASKELL. Well, is it not so?

Mr. RANDALL. I am here as a representative of the people of my State, and when I fail to represent my people and my district I hope they will leave me at home. But in defending the interests of Pennsylvania, I defend all of those great interests which my State and my city have in common with all of this country. Sir, the American industries are common throughout the length and breadth of this land. And what do you want with the tariff in that connection? Only that incidental protection which comes from the raising of about two hundred millions of revenue. That you cannot deny us. That we will have; and I say to-day to this committee and to the American people that the Government of the United States can be administered, including every expense that is legitimate and proper, on a basis of two hundred and fifty millions of money; and yet you stand here on that side and insist upon raising four hundred millions, taking from the industries of the country one hundred and fifty millions of dollars, that there is no more warrant for demanding than there would be right in the gentleman to put his hand in my pocket and take my money out of it. It is a plunder of the industries of the country. It is a plunder upon the people of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I believe that the people of this country will see it in that light when they come to see, as they will see at the end of this Congress, that you have, outside of pensions, increased the expenditures of this Government, as shown by the appropriations, thirty millions of money.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Debts that you left behind for us to pay.

Mr. RANDALL. I deny the fact. The gentleman from Wisconsin cannot show that I have ever left any debts of the United States unpaid, so far as I am concerned, or ever objected to the payment of an honest debt due by the Government; but I have insisted upon economy in the expenditures of the Government. I am willing to stand on that.

Mr. HUMPHREY. You left in 1876 a deficiency of millions that had afterward to be supplied by additional appropriations.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not so.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted. The question is on the amendment to the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CARLISLE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether he thinks——

The CHAIRMAN, (rapping with his gavel.) Debate is exhausted.

Mr. CARLISLE. I move to strike out the last word of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment to the amendment already pending. No other amendment can now be entertained.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. CARLISLE. This vote which has just been taken, as I understand it, is on the amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio?

The CHAIRMAN. It was. Does the gentleman from Kentucky desire to be heard now?

Mr. CARLISLE. No; I have nothing more to say since the amendment has been voted down.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I do not think the committee understood precisely what amendment was being voted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order. The question now recurs upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from West Virginia.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 67, noes 99.

Mr. WILSON. I am constrained to ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia demands tellers. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

Mr. WILSON. In deference to the wishes of the committee I will withdraw the demand for tellers.

So (no further count being demanded) the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. SCALES. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk as an additional section.

The Clerk read as follows:

That from and after the 1st day of July, 1883, the tax upon manufactured tobacco shall be reduced to ten cents per pound, and on distilled spirits to fifty cents per proof-gallon.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina desire to be heard upon the amendment?

Mr. SCALES. Let us have a vote upon the amendment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words of section 2. It has been repeatedly asserted in the progress of this debate that this is a measure solely in the interest of the banks, of capital, and of monopolies throughout the country. The gentlemen urge upon us that we should begin at the other end to relieve the labor of this country from the burdens that at present bear with overpowering weight upon it. Now, sir, it is because I consider that this bill does something toward relieving the laborer of this country and removes some of his burdens that I propose to support it. Sir, if there is anything of wisdom in all the science of political economy it must be considered as established beyond question that in their ultimate effects taxes fall eventually upon labor. The state draws its revenue from wealth. Wealth is the production and creation of labor, and therefore under these circumstances it is apparent that taxes must be paid and can be paid by labor alone.

Does the wealth invested in bank capital and in bank deposits or represented by these things offer any exception to this rule? Mr. Chairman, what are banks? They are great reservoirs into which pour continually a myriad of tiny rivulets, for the most part the savings of the frugal, industrious laborer, mechanic, and retail tradesman. These rivulets are collected in these banks, the reservoirs, in order that they may be thence directed in sufficient quantity into the fructifying channels of commerce.

In these banks is contained the greater portion of the circulating capital of the country; and from circulating capital are paid the wages of labor. If the national coffers absorb from this great reservoir the circulating capital, $16,000,000 or $20,000,000, or any other amount, is it not apparent that just so much is subtracted from the wage-fund from which the laborer draws the necessities of his existence? Is it not apparent that by just so much labor is burdened, either by diminished employment or diminished wages, by this form of taxation as by every other?

Sir, the process is this: it is true that the bank pays the taxes in the first instance; but be sure the bank does not fail to charge it on the borrower. The borrower seeks the loan for the purpose of investing it in his business, either by maintaining the labor he already employs, or by bringing in additional labor to extend his business. And when the bank charges him with the tax, it just to that extent diminishes his borrowing capacity. It is a tax on credits, and it diminishes his borrowing capacity and his wage-paying capacity. And just so far it diminishes the necessities of life to the laborer who depends for employment on that wage-paying capacity.

It has also been repeatedly iterated upon this floor that this is a measure in favor of monopolies. It is an open secret, Mr. Chairman, that two of the most gigantic monopolies of this country and age of monopolies—the match monopoly, which, like death, spares in its exactions neither the palace of the rich nor the hovel of the poor, and the stamp-printing monopoly, which draws its profits alike from enthusiastic youth enthralled in the glamour of a first check-book, and from the wearied old age, whose physical infirmities find their only solace in a patent medicine—through their agents, are prowling about these lobbies, the most active and strenuous opponents of this bill. I do not blame them for it. They have got a good thing, and with the assistance of this Congress they mean to hold on to it. But for one, believing that this measure does relieve labor from some of its burdens, I will take what I can get, if I cannot get all I want.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri withdraw his pro forma amendment?

Mr. FROST. Yes, sir.

Mr. CABELL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the section the following:

"Provided, That on and after the 1st day of January, 1883, the tax upon whisky shall be reduced to 50 cents per gallon, and that upon spirits distilled from fruits to 25 cents per gallon."

Mr. CABELL. I have only to say if that amendment is adopted it will be in the interest of the people, and will at the same time yield to the Government as large a revenue as it gets now, if not more.

The question being taken on Mr. CABELL's amendment, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the third and last section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 3. That on cigars of all description, made of tobacco or any substitute therefor, which shall be sold or removed for consumption or sale, there shall be paid by the manufacturer $5 per thousand; on cigarettes weighing more than three pounds to the thousand, $5 per thousand.

Mr. KELLEY rose.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to offer a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Pennsylvania on the left, [Mr. KELLEY.]

Mr. KELLEY. I submit the amendment of the Committee on Ways and Means, which is a substitute, in the language of the existing law, covering the tax on cigars and cigarettes, the changes being only in the figures.

Mr. RANDALL. The amendment I offer comes in ahead of the third section.

The CHAIRMAN. The second section has been passed, and the third section has been read.

Mr. RANDALL. What I submit is to come in as a new section. It comes in properly next to the special-tax section.

Mr. CALKINS. The order does not make any material difference. Let it come in as a fourth section.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania on the left [Mr. KELLEY] will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the third section and insert the following:

"That on cigars which shall be manufactured and sold, or removed for consumption or use, there shall be assessed and collected the following taxes, to be paid by the manufacturer thereof:

"On cigars of all descriptions made of tobacco or any substitute therefor, $5 per thousand; on cigarettes weighing not more than three pounds per thousand, $1.75 per thousand; on cigarettes weighing more than three pounds per thousand, $5 per thousand."

Mr. CARLISLE. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. The amendment I submit relates to special taxes. It should come up ahead of this.

Mr. KELLEY. Let us dispose of the amendment which I have offered, and then the other can come in and get its place.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. CARLISLE.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out, wherever they occur, the words "five dollars" and inserting "four dollars," and by striking out "one dollar and seventy-five cents" and inserting "seventy-five cents."

Mr. CARLISLE. It is not my purpose to make an argument in support of this amendment, but simply to state a few facts from which I think the committee will see at once its justice and propriety.

Prior to the year 1879 manufactured tobacco was subject to a tax of 24 cents per pound, and cigars and cigarettes weighing not more than twenty-five pounds to the thousand were subject to a tax of $6 per thousand, which was exactly 24 cents per pound, including, however, in the weight of the cigars and cigarettes the stems in the tobacco used.

In 1879 the tax on manufactured tobacco was reduced from 24 cents to 16 cents per pound, but no reduction whatever was made in the tax on cigars and cigarettes. Therefore to-day the tax on cigars and cigarettes of the class just mentioned is $6 per thousand, which, as just stated, is 24 cents per pound upon the whole quantity of tobacco used in making a thousand cigars, including the stems in that weight.

The Committee on Ways and Means now propose to reduce the rate on cigars to $5 per thousand, which will still leave the tax at 20 cents per pound upon the whole quantity of tobacco used in the manufacture of a thousand cigars, including the stems in that weight.

My amendment proposes to reduce the tax on cigars to $4 per thousand, which will make it exactly 16 cents per pound upon the whole quantity of tobacco used in the manufacture of a thousand cigars, thereby equalizing the tax on cigars with the tax on manufactured tobacco, with this difference, however, that the tobacco is taxed 16 cents per pound after the stems are taken out, while the cigars will be taxed 16 cents per pound with the stems in.

The proposition of the committee, if adopted, will reduce the amount of tax collected on cigars, according to the collections made last year, $2,666,000. If my amendment shall be adopted the amount of the tax to be collected on cigars will be reduced $5,332,000.

Now, as to cigarettes weighing less than three pounds to the thousand. The present tax is $1.75 per thousand, which is 58¼ cents per pound for the tobacco actually used in the manufacture of those cigarettes, while the tax on smoking tobacco of the same quality is but 16 cents per pound.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I would inquire of the gentleman if his amendment does not effect what the committee attempted to do, put all on the same plane?

Mr. CARLISLE. I am not prepared to say that the committee has attempted to do that; but my object is to equalize the tax on cigars and cigarettes with the tax on manufactured and smoking tobacco. If my amendment as to the small cigarettes shall be adopted, and the tax be put at 75 cents per thousand, it will still be a tax at the rate of more than 16 cents a pound on the tobacco used in the manufacture of a thousand cigarettes. I have named 75 cents per thousand, however, for the reason that this article of manufacture is generally put up in packages containing ten or twenty cigarettes; and it is important, therefore, to so arrange the tax that the stamps can be prepared to represent an even number of cents, or some convenient fraction of a cent.

If the tax is put at not exceeding 50 cents per thousand, the rate of tax would about correspond with the amount imposed upon manufactured and smoking tobacco, but it would be less than is proposed to be put upon cigars. If put at 75 cents per thousand, as my amendment proposes, then the tax on a package containing ten cigarettes would be ¾ of a cent, and on a package containing twenty cigarettes the tax would be 1½ cents; and the stamps could be so arranged as to suit the size of the packages.

With this simple statement of facts, and without attempting to argue the question, I desire to say that while we are reducing taxes upon some articles and some classes of business, we ought at least to equalize them as far as possible upon those articles already subject to tax and which are not to be relieved by this bill. I therefore hope that the amendment will be adopted.

I ought to say further that the adoption of the amendment proposed by me with regard to cigarettes weighing less than three pounds per thousand will reduce the revenue from that source, according to the collections of last year, $567,387.

During the last fiscal year the amount collected from cigarettes under the tax of $1.75 per thousand was $992,927.22, and the amount collected from cigars and the large-sized cigarettes at $6 per thousand was $16,095,778.78. Only $54 of this latter sum is credited to cigarettes in the Commissioner's report for the reason that the large cigarettes are generally classed as cigars in the returns of the manufacturers and subordinate revenue officials. The revenue derived from cigars during the last fiscal year was $1,888,905.29 greater than it was the year before, while that derived from the small cigarettes was $277,711.83 greater than during the preceding year. The receipts from both sources have largely increased during the current year, now nearly closed, but I am not now able to state the exact amount of the increase. If the amendment shall be adopted and the bill passed, the total apparent reduction of taxes on those articles will be $5,899,387; but to a certain extend this is apparent only because the natural increase of consumption, stimulated largely by the reduction itself, will compensate for a very considerable part of it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to ask the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] one moment. His proposition, as I understand it, is a substitute for section 3 of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. It is an amendment to that section.

Mr. SPRINGER. I know that, but an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] to submit his proposition as an amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then, if the committee shall adopt his amendment, would it be in order to move a substitute for the section as amended?

Mr. KELLEY. That will be a matter for the Chair to decide.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the gentleman will raise no point of order of that kind, then I desire to move a substitute for the section as it may be amended.

Mr. WHITE. I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to withhold his substitute until I have spoken to the amendment under consideration. I understand the gentleman from Illinois desires to offer a substitute for the section.

The CHAIRMAN. Perhaps the gentleman from Illinois had better submit his substitute now.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will offer it and let it be read now and considered as pending, the other amendments to be first voted on. I offer it as a substitute for all pending propositions.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to the Chair that the proposition offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] is in the nature of a substitute for the section, because it proposes to strike out and insert, and an amendment has been moved by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] to that substitute. The Chair would suggest, therefore, to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] that it would be better for him to withhold his amendment until the other amendments have been voted upon.

Mr. SPRINGER. If it will then be in order, I will do so. I will ask, however, that it be now read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That from and after the 31st day of December, 1883, all laws and parts of laws imposing internal-revenue taxes upon tobacco, including cigars and all other manufactures of tobacco, and all special taxes imposed upon dealers in tobacco, or in any manufactures thereof, shall be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and on all original and unbroken packages of tobacco, or any articles manufactured therefrom, held by manufacturers or dealers on the 31st day of December, 1883, upon which the tax has been paid, there shall be allowed a rebate and drawback of the full amount of the tax. And all officials especially engaged in carrying into effect the provisions of the laws repealed by this section shall be discharged from the public service from and after the taking effect of the repeals herein provided. It shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to adopt such rules and regulations and to prescribe and furnish such blanks and forms as may be necessary to carry this act into effect.

Mr. HASKELL. I make a point of order upon that.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the point be stated.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas will state his point of order.

Mr. HASKELL. The amendment is not germane to the section under consideration.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is a substitute for the section. The section itself reduces the taxes on cigars and cigarettes. This takes off the tax on tobacco entirely, and does a little more, after a certain time.

Mr. KASSON. The question comes first upon the proposition to perfect the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. Of course; it is first in order to perfect the text before the vote is taken on the substitute; but I desire this to be considered as pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas made a point of order which the Chair desires to hear stated.

Mr. HASKELL. I made first the point that the amendment was not germane to the section. I make the further point that it is not in order at this time even if germane, because an amendment to an amendment is pending and because the text of the section must first be perfected before a question can be taken on striking it out.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. We desire that no point of order shall be considered as waived by the reading of this proposed substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. It was read simply for the information of the Chair; the Chair requested it.

Mr. HASKELL. I ask that the substitue be laid aside until the amendment and the amendment to the amendment have been voted on and the section perfected.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no objection to that.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. All points of order being reserved on the substitute.

Mr. SPRINGER. As the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania was in the nature of a substitute for the section, I wanted to reserve the question whether that substitute, if adopted, would be open for amendment. For that reason I desired to give notice of my substitute at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asks the Clerk to read a paragraph from the Manual.

The Clerk read as follows:

Although it is not in order to strike out by itself what has been inserted, it may be moved to strike out a portion of the original paragraph, comprehending what has been inserted, provided the coherence to be struck out be so substantial as to make this effectively a different proposition.—Manual, page 78.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. But there is another statement in the Manual bearing upon the question—a statement to the effect, though I do not remember its exact language—that if a substantial proposition be struck out and another entire proposition be inserted, it is not in order to strike out the latter proposition and insert something else.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desired to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to the paragraph just read.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then, as I understand the Chair, in order to get a vote on this proposition I must move it as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so thinks.

Mr. SPRINGER. I offer it then as a substitute for the pending amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HASKELL. The vote will first be taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. Undoubtedly; the original text must be first perfected before the question is taken on the adoption of the substitute. The first question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY.]

Mr. WHITE. I desire to call attention to the fact that the discrimination which has been alluded to is simply between dealers themselves—not between the producers. This phrase "dealer in leaf tobacco" is misleading. It does not mean that any man who wishes to buy leaf tobacco can do so by paying a license of $12. The House might just as well understand first as last that this is not the meaning. My friend from Michigan [Mr. HORR] in his remarks a while ago showed that he totally misapprehended the meaning of the language in this bill. Now, my colleague gets up and says that the difference between his amendment and that of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means is simply a question of about two million and a half of dollars. The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means proposes to reduce the tax on tobacco to the extent of $2,500,000. My colleague offers an amendment proposing a reduction of $5,200,000.

The point to which I wish to call the attention of the committee is that this is simply a question of adjusting tax between the dealers, and never reaches to the producer, for the simple reason that clause 7 of section 3244 stands between the manufacturer and the producer. The provision of that section is:

Retail dealers in leaf tobacco shall each pay $500, and if their annual sales exceed $1,000, shall each pay, in addition thereto, fifty cents for every dollar in excess of $1,000 of their sales. Every person shall be regarded as a retail dealer in leaf tobacco whose business it is to sell leaf tobacco in quantities less than an original hogshead, case, or bale; or who sells directly to consumers, or to persons other than dealers in leaf tobacco who have paid a special tax; or to manufacturers of tobacco, snuff, or cigars, who have paid a special tax; or to persons who purchase in original packages for export.

When this bill says that dealers in leaf tobacco shall pay $12, it is simply an adjustment of the differences between the manufacturers and the dealers.

Now, my friend from Pennsylvania reminds me of this fact, that this is in reference to cigars. Well, the same argument holds good with all. The law we propose to amend is simply to adjust differences between manufacturers of cigars and between dealers of cigars, but it never reaches back to the former because of the provision which requires the farmer before he gets a market to sell to that man who has paid this tax of $500.

[Mr. WISE, of Virginia, addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. KELLEY. I wish to submit an amendment from the committee to the substitute for the third section I offered, providing for rebate of tax paid on matches, cigars, cheroots, and so on in unbroken packages in the hands of dealers or manufacturers, under regulations provided by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with the sanction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state there is an amendment to the amendment already pending.

Mr. CARLISLE. I suggest to my friend from Pennsylvania, as soon as the amendment I have offered is voted on his amendment will be in order.

Mr. KELLEY. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. CARLISLE. I want a division on that amendment.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 59, noes 74.

Mr. HATCH. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. RUSSELL and Mr. CARLISLE were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 80, noes not counted.

No further count being demanded the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. KELLEY. I have an amendment to offer to that amendment which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That on all original unbroken packages of matches, cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes, held by manufacturers or dealers on the passage of this act, upon which the tax has been paid, there shall be a rebate or drawback of the full amount of the reduction.

It shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to adopt such rules and regulations, and to prescribe and furnish such blanks and forms as may be necessary to carry this act into effect.

Mr. RUSSELL. I move to amend by including stamps on checks.

Mr. KELLEY. I will accept that, and ask to have the word "check" inserted before the word "matches."

The CHAIRMAN. The question then is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania as modified.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask that it be again read.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would like to inquire if the amendment offered by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means includes perfumery and medicinal preparations?

Mr. HAZELTON. Such as pills and salves, and things of that kind? [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLEY. It was intended to do so.

Mr. McCOOK. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means whether in previous reductions it has been customary to incorporate a proviso such as that he has suggested?

Mr. KELLEY. Always.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute for section 3 of the bill: "That from and after the 31st day of December, 1883, all laws and parts of laws imposing internal taxes upon tobacco, including cigars and all other manufactures of tobacco, and all special taxes imposed upon dealers in tobacco or in any manufactures thereof shall be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and on all original unbroken packages of tobacco or any articles manufactured therefrom held by manufacturers or dealers on the 31st day of December, 1883, upon which the tax has been paid, there shall be allowed a rebate or drawback of the full amount of the tax. And all officials especially engaged in carrying into effect the provisions of the laws repealed by this section shall be discharged from the public service from and after the taking effect of the repeals herein provided. It shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to adopt such rules and regulations and to prescribe and furnish such blanks and forms as may be necessary to carry this act into effect."

Mr. KASSON. I make the point of order upon that.

Mr. KELLEY. I make the point of order that the proposed substitute is not pertinent to the bill or section under consideration. It proposes to regulate the business of the Internal Revenue Bureau. It designates certain officials for dismissal and names the time after which they shall cease to be employed. If the Chair desires to hear further argument upon the point of order, I will ask recognition.

Mr. KASSON. I make the further point of order that the motion is to strike out what the committee has just voted to complete, which is against the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania was three times amended and was not a motion to strike out and insert, but after being amended was before the committee for adoption when the gentleman from Illinois offered the proposed substitute.

Mr. KASSON. I understood that this was a substitute for the third section, which has just been perfected.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the point of order is withdrawn I am ready to take a vote upon the substitute. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania insist upon the point of order?

Mr. KELLEY. I withdraw the point of order for the purpose of getting a vote upon the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER.]

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 63, noes 97.

Mr. SPRINGER demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. RUSSELL and Mr. SPRINGER were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 91, noes 99.

So the substitute was not agreed to.

Mr. COX, of New York. I propose what I send to the desk as an additional section.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposition of the gentleman from New York will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all the provisions of existing laws which save the arrears of the taxes on legacies and successions provided for in section 17 of the act of July 14, 1870, be and the same are hereby repealed, notwithstanding section 5597 of the Revised Statutes, and all reservations of rights accrued or accruing thereunder or under any other existing law, it being the intent and meaning hereof to repeal all laws for the collection of all taxes upon legacies and successions.

Mr. KASSON. I reserve the point of order upon the proposed section.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Will the gentleman from New York yield to me; if so, I will move that the committee do now rise?

Mr. COX, of New York. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. KASSON. I saved the point of order by way of precaution, for the reason that the proposed section refers to various statutes which seem to me might embrace subjects not contemplated by the bill. These should be read, of course, in that connection, and until they are read, or some full explanation is given of the matter, I think the committee will not understand the effect of this section.

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I almost wish the committee would rise and the House adjourn in order to give me an opportunity to have printed some statements of Judge Folger and Mr. Commissioner Raum in reference to the repeal of these sections covering this legacy tax.

Mr. KASSON. If the gentleman from New York will permit me, I think if that is all this amendment relates to, that I may submit without argument the point of order I made, as he must perceive that it does not cover what is contemplated by the pending bill; in other words, it is not germane.

Mr. COX, of New York. It refers to the tax upon these legacies, and refers to nothing else than the subject-matter of the pending bill.

Mr. KASSON. It is not a reduction of taxation, but simply a remission of dues to the Government.

Mr. COX, of New York. It is, in a certain sense, a remission of dues to the Government. Under prior laws which have been in existence for many years, but which are not always properly complied with, taxes of this kind have been unjustly levied through the agency of informers, who have had access to the probate offices; and there is no other method that I can now perceive by which to bring in an amendment which will correct the wrongs that have grown up under this system than by the present amendment.

I only wish, Mr. Chairman, the House would adjourn that I might publish, which I ask leave to do, the communications from the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, that this matter may be rightly understood.

Mr. KASSON rose.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has not been recognized to make that motion.

Mr. KASSON. If the gentleman from New York has finished——

Mr. COX, of New York. I have not finished. I beg to say there have been repeals, of course the gentleman from Iowa knows it, of various laws as to taxation. Since 1870, $11,470,040 of the various arrears of taxes have been collected in all. Of this sum there has been collected $299,000 of arrears in the last year. A large part of it came from the legacy and succession tax. My proposition here is to wipe out this tax or this remnant of a tax, because it acts unequally in different sections, because it hangs as a cloud over property and real estate, and because from my own experience——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has been recognized.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I understand that a motion that the committee rise is always in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion would be in order if the gentleman making it was recognized for that purpose. But the Chair has recognized the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON.] The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois to make that motion as soon as the gentleman from Iowa has been heard.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I understand this is always a privileged motion.

The CHAIRMAN. It is, of course.

Mr. COX, of New York. I ask the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] before he proceeds, to allow me one-half minute more. I was concluding by saying that the necessity of this amendment became apparent to me, from my own experience, years ago in Ohio, when I was endeavoring to settle my grandfather's estate. After years of quiet settlement, and after I went to New York to live, I was summoned to pay this legacy tax. I know it was a delinquency; but I had no notice of it as executor. I could not collect it of the heirs. The money was gone. I found out mine was not a singular case of hardship growing out of this law, for Judge Folger says in this communication——

Mr. KASSON. Your half-minute is running.

Mr. COX, of New York. I will not trespass further on the time of the gentleman.

The following are the communications referred to in the remarks of Mr. COX, of New York:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, June 21, 1882.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 18th instant, respecting the internal-revenue taxes on legacies, I inclose herewith a copy of a letter addressed by me to the Secretary of the Treasury under date of the 20th instant, and also a copy of its inclosure.

Respectfully,

GREEN B. RAUM,
Commissioner.

Hon. S. S. COX, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, June 20, 1882.

SIR: I have received a letter addressed to Hon. JOHN SHERMAN, under date of the 16th ultimo, by John A. Hardenburgh, of New York City, and by Mr. SHERMAN referred to me with an indorsement as follows:

"Respectfully referred to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

"Please enable me to answer this letter, and state what succession tax on legacies still remains unrepealed. Is there any objection to the repeal of the remaining portions of the tax?"

The taxes now collectible on successions and legacies are such as accrued prior to October 1, 1870, i. e., those which became payable prior to the repeal of the law by which they were imposed. The right and authority to collect them was reserved and saved by section 17 of the act of July 14, 1870, (16 Statutes, 261,) and section 5597 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Under date of April 30, 1880, I made a report to Mr. SHERMAN, then Secretary of the Treasury, upon what was then House bill No. 2975.

I inclose a copy of that report. Upon page 16 of the report appear the results of the effort to collect such taxes down to June 30, 1879.

The amount assessed during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1880, is $135,532.80; the amount assessed during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1861, is $63,859.39. All, or nearly all, the taxes so assessed have been collected.

It is proper to state that the collection of taxes due under repealed laws requires special knowledge of those laws; that the present officers are not generally familiar with them, and that such collections are not regarded by the officers as part of their current work.

The facts relied upon to show liability to the taxes are usually obtained and furnished by persons seeking a reward for their information. These facts are then verified by the officers and form the basis for collections.

I fully recognize the fact that cases of hardship have arisen, and are likely to continue to arise, in the collection of legacy taxes where there has been a distribution of the property by the executor, administrator, or trustee, who, in ignorance of his liability under the law, failed to withhold the taxes from the distributees, and these taxes are afterward collected from the executor or trustee without prospect of reimbursement.

It is a familiar rule of law that a statute of limitations does not bind the United States, unless specially named.

It has been the policy of the Government ever since its foundation to allow no limitation to its right to sue for and recover moneys legally due it, and I should feel great hesitation in recommending a departure from this rule.

I think, however, it is a question deserving the grave consideration of Congress, whether it would not be judicious and wise to provide a statute of limitation in respect to the institution of suits by the United States for the recovery of unassessed taxes.

I send this to you for transmission to Mr. SHERMAN in accordance with the circular of February 12, 1880.

Respectfully,

GREEN B. RAUM,
Commissioner.

HON. CHAS. J. FOLGER,
Secretary of the Treasury.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, April 30, 1880.

SIR: I have received a letter from Hon. JOHN S. RICHARDSON, chairman of a subcommittee of the House Committee on the Revision of the Laws, inclosing a copy of House bill No. 2975, which bill is as follows:

"A bill to repeal section 17 of the act of June [July] 14, 1870, and chapter 10, title 35, of the Revised Statutes of 1878, and to remit taxes and penalties thereunder.

"Be it enacted, &c., That section 17 of the act of July 14, 1870, and chapter 10, title 35, of the Revised Statutes of 1878, be, and the same are hereby, repealed. And all taxes now unpaid collectible under said statutes are hereby remitted."

Mr. RICHARDSON asks that the committee be informed what amount of taxes would be remitted by the repeal of the law provided for in the bill, and whether in my opinion the time has come when it would be wise to remit the taxes remaining uncollected, and he asks for any other information in my possession that would enable the committee to act understandingly upon the matter submitted to them.

The bill in question was introduced by Mr. MCCOID, December 15, 1879, and referred to the Committee on Manufactures. On the 20th of February 1880, Mr. MCCOID, from that committee, presented a report (No. 344) entitled "Legacy and succession tax," and which related entirely to that subject. It would seem, therefore, from this report, presented by the same member who introduced the bill, that the bill was designed simply to remit the uncollected portion of the taxes on legacies and successions. If it had referred only to chapter 10, and not to section 17 of the act of July 14, 1870, such would have been its effect. Chapter 10 referred to relates solely to taxes on legacies and successions. Not so, however, said section 17 of the act of 1870, which it is proposed by this bill to repeal, and to remit all the unpaid taxes thereby saved. That section so far as it relates to accrued taxes is as follows: "And all acts and parts of acts relating to the tax as herein repealed, and that all the provisions of said acts shall continue in full force for levying and collecting all taxes properly assessed or liable to be assessed or accruing under the provisions of former acts or drawbacks, the right to which has already accrued, or which may hereafter accrue under said acts, and for maintaining and continuing liens, fines, penalties, and forfeitures incurred under and by virtue thereof. And this act shall not be construed to affect any act done, right accrued, or penalty incurred under former acts, but every such right is hereby saved."

It will be seen from reading the above that the section in effect saved all the accrued and unpaid taxes of the several classes repealed, and all rights accrued or penalties incurred under former acts. Among the accrued taxes thus saved are not only the taxes on legacies and successions, but also those on the gross receipts of railroads, canals, &c., express companies, insurance companies, telegraph companies, theaters, operas &c., the special taxes on occupations other than those relating to liquors, tobacco, and cigars; the taxes on sales of certain manufactures and products, and also several other taxes of minor importance, among which was the annual tax on carriages, gold watches, billiard tables, and gold and silver plate, comprised in the schedule then known as Schedule A. But this was not all. The saving provisions of said section 17 were so broad as to cover not only the accrued taxes of the classes expressly repealed as above enumerated but also the income taxes, and the taxes on dividends, &c., which had accrued under the act specified in said section 17, but which were superseded by the new income and dividend taxes imposed by sections 6 to 16 of said act of July 14, 1870.

It would seem from the report of the Committee on Manufactures, and the foregoing enumeration of the large and important classes of taxes, the arrears of which were covered by the saving provisions of said section 17, that the unqualified repeal of said section by the bill now in question was probably not intended.

But if it were the purpose to repeal the provisions of existing laws which now save all the arrears of taxes provided for in said section 17, it is respectfully suggested that the passage of the bill in its present form would not accomplish the purpose, because that section is no longer law. It was repealed by section 5596 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. But section 5597 of the Revised Statutes expressly reserves all rights accruing or accrued, and provides that "all rights and liabilities under said (repealed) acts shall continue, and may be enforced in the same manner as if said repeal had not been made." Strictly, therefore, said section 5597 is the provision of law which now saves all accrued rights and liabilities not only under the act of July 14, 1870, but under every other act repealed by section 5596, among which are all the internal-revenue acts existing December 1, 1873.

In view of the possibility that it may have been intended by the bill now in question to remit all the arrears of taxes that had been saved by section 17 aforesaid and continued to be saved by section 5597 of the Revised Statutes, I would state that of accrued taxes under repealed and expired laws there was collected from October 1, 1870, to June 30, 1879, $11,479,640.40, of which $299,094 was collected in the last fiscal year, the greater portion of which latter sum, as will be seen hereafter, was from legacy and succession taxes.

Much the larger portion of the above sum of nearly eleven and one-half millions of dollars collected consisted of taxes saved by the aforesaid section 17 and section 5597 Revised Statutes. The amount that would be lost by remitting the uncollected arrears of the taxes thus saved, it is, in the nature of things, impossible to specify, or even estimate approximately; but I have little doubt that it would be probably many hundreds of thousands if not some millions of dollars. Collections from the same sources are being made constantly, and I have no doubt that if not interfered with by repeal large amounts will continue to be added to the public revenue therefrom for several years to come. Such revenue will be paid, too, by persons who in the great majority of cases have for ten years past or longer had the use free of interest of these moneys belonging to the Government, while the Government itself has been thereby obliged to continue during all those years the payment of interest on a corresponding amount of the public debt. It would seem that such persons have no reasonable claim to such especial favor as would be extended to them by remitting the amounts they justly owe and have so long withheld.

Investigations as to these withheld taxes are continually being carried on by internal-revenue officers and agents; and the reward offered by circular No. 93 of December 1, 1875, to persons other than internal-revenue officers or employés, a copy of which is appended to the report on this bill made by the Committee on Manufactures, has brought information to the knowledge of this office from others than officers of internal revenue which has led to the collection of large amounts of taxes. It is proper here to state that no internal-revenue officer, agent, or employée can receive or is entitled to any reward whatever for his services in connection with the collection of these taxes other than his regular salary. I have no hesitation in saying that I do not think it would be wise or just to now remit to the delinquents the hundreds of thousands, if not millions, of dollars that may be due from them for these arrears of taxes which are being from time to time discovered and collected, with good present prospects of largely increased collections from the efforts which are now being put forth. Indeed it seems probable that it is the efficiency of these efforts which has given rise to this remission movement by some of those who fear that they will be obliged to pay what they owe to the Government on legacy or succession taxes, or other taxes, unless they can induce Congress to remit their liabilities.

It is submitted whether such remission to persons who have thus far successfully evaded their just portion of the public burden would not involve great injustice to the vast body of citizens who honestly and promptly bore their part of the burden in paying their portion of these taxes. The result would seem to be unequal taxation, unjust to every citizen who paid taxes, that these delinquents are excused from paying.

Assuming, however, for the reasons hereinbefore stated, that the whole purpose of the bill now in question is to remit the arrears of legacy and succession taxes only, and that the bill will be amended by striking out all reference to section 17 of the act of July 14, 1870, I nevertheless cannot think that it would be just to the Government, representing the whole people, nor to the large portion of the people who promptly and honestly paid their legacy and succession taxes, to now remit the similar taxes due by delinquents who purposely evaded or ignorantly omitted to pay them.

The amount of legacy and succession taxes remaining yet unpaid it is impossible even to estimate, considering that it depends upon the questions, what amount in value of property, real and personal, has passed to heirs at law, devisees, legatees, or donees, by will or laws of descent, or distribution or conveyances without valuable consideration, throughout the whole of the United States from the time the taxes were first imposed (1862 as to legacies, 1864 as to successions) until October 1, 1870; and what were the respective interests of all the heirs, devisees, and legatees in the properties referred to, and the relations of such parties to the predecessors from whom the properties descended. I think, however, I may very safely say that the amount of such taxes remaining due, and that may yet be collected, will probably reach to many thousands, probably hundreds of thousands of dollars. On this point the following facts are suggestive: The amount of taxes on legacies and successions collected prior to the taking effect of the repeal of the tax, to wit:

October 1, 1870, was		$13,039,835 39
Collected from October 1, 1870, to June 30, 1871	$1,765,812 51
Collected during fiscal year ending June 30, 1872	956,688 16
Collected during fiscal year ending June 30, 1873	469,515 70
Assessed during fiscal year ending June 30, 1874	103,025 55
Assessed during fiscal year ending June 30, 1875	161,145 38
Assessed during fiscal year ending June 30, 1876	110,927 52
Assessed during fiscal year ending June 30, 1877	49,747 61
Assessed during fiscal year ending June 30, 1878	127,189 94
Assessed during fiscal year ending June 30, 1879	182,036 71
		3,926,089 08
Total		16,965,924 47

From the foregoing it appears that of the nearly $17,000,000 collected from taxes on legacies and successions since those taxes were imposed nearly $4,000,000 have been collected since the repeal of the act. Of this latter amount, the sum of $182,000 was assessed in the last fiscal year. It will be observed that the statistics here given do not include the present fiscal year. With reference to this year, I would remark, that in one case alone, in January last, there was received for arrears of succession tax $48,930.06. And I may here repeat, as was before stated with reference to collections on account of repealed taxes generally, that through the investigations now being carried on by internal-revenue officers and others, there is a very encouraging prospect of a largely increased collection of these delinquent taxes on legacies and successions.

The lien for succession taxes was limited by its terms to five years, and has long since expired. Consequently, innocent purchasers of real estate cannot be troubled because of any such taxes due by a former owner thereof.

There are doubtless some few exceptional cases of hardship in the collection of legacy taxes, mostly confined to cases of executors and administrators, who have ignorantly made distribution of the personal estates without deducting the legacy tax due. (The succession tax was not payable by them, but by the successors themselves.) It is submitted, however, that the existence of a few such cases is not good reason for a general remission of the whole large arrearage of legacy and succession taxes. In the great majority of cases, such remission would be simply an undeserved gratuity from the Government to delinquents of taxes which they should have paid years ago, and which they can yet be made to pay.

It is to be remembered also that the legacy and succession taxes were of a kind most easily borne. Unlike taxes on products or manufactures, they were upon estates, real and personal, generally, of considerable and often of large amount, all of which came to the legatees and successors gratuitously. The failure of such parties to pay the comparatively small taxes upon what they had thus gratuitously received would seem to be inexcusable.

Your attention is called to the fact that no penalties are collected in making collections of these taxes nor even interest in any case of voluntary payment. That policy was adopted by this office as far back as March 27, 1874, over six years ago, when a circular letter of that date was issued, giving such instructions to collectors as to all taxes, the time for the assessment of which had expired, and where the tax-payers would waive the limitation, such limitation being a bar only to assessment, but not to a suit for the recovery of the taxes.

Under all the circumstances hereinbefore stated it is respectfully submitted whether it would be wise to remit the taxes proposed to be remitted by the bill now in question even if the remission is confined to taxes due on legacies and successions.

Pursuant to your circular of February 12, 1880, I inclose to you Mr. RICHARDSON's letter with the foregoing information asked for therein for transmission to him for the use of his committee.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, yours,

GREEN B. RAUM,
Commissioner.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. KASSON. As soon as the gentleman mentioned the subject of his amendment and said nothing else was embraced in it, the committee and the Chair were relieved of all doubt as to what disposition to make of it.

It will be observed this amendment is not part of a proposition to reduce existing taxation. There are a few parties—the Committee on Ways and Means knows of but very few, I do not know but the list could be numbered by the fingers of one hand—who owe unpaid taxes of this sort. It is simply a proposition to remit to the persons who have not hitherto paid them, the taxes they were required by law to pay; that is to make a free gift to them of what remains unpaid of old taxes.

Mr. HASKELL. They are private claims now.

Mr. KASSON. Yes, sir; they are in the nature of a private claim. There is no reason to ask it back because it is due as much as the taxes assessed to-day.

Mr. COX, of New York. You are repealing the internal-revenue taxes by this bill.

Mr. KASSON. Yes; it is proposed to repeal the tax from this time forward on certain things. But if the parties do not pay up what is due up to the date of the repeal we will not let them come in afterward and claim a remission of the taxes they ought to have paid like other people. The whole point made by the gentleman from New York is that this is old and that it is inconvenient to pay. If a separate bill came up for this purpose I might as soon give this away as have the trouble of hunting it up. But my point is that this is not germane to this bill, and that it is not legitimate legislation to take up one class of taxes and remit them, although they have been long due.

Mr. COX, of New York. On the point of order I desire to reply to my friend from Iowa. I know this is simply in the nature of a claim for the remission of a tax. But when I reflect that the claim is on the Government for a tax and that the law creating it has been repealed, it will be seen that this causes a great hardship on the people in the settlement of estates to have this tax hanging over them year after year. In the year before last——

Mr. KASSON. I would suggest to the gentleman from New York that we have both spoken on the point of order.

Mr. COX, of New York. I wish only to say that the amount assessed during the year before last was $135,000. During the year ended June 30, 1881, the amount assessed was $63,000. So that there is in one sense a reduction of taxation. Therefore my amendment properly lies outside the point of order made by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. KASSON. That is, this is a proposition to remit to those who have not paid taxes an amount of about $63,000.

Mr. COX, of New York. The gentleman uses the word "remit" in a peculiar sense. I say it reduces the taxes.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I ask the Chair whether my motion that the committee rise is now in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is in order if the gentleman will insist on it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I do insist on it.

The question being taken on the motion that the committee rise, there were—ayes 61, noes 91.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under clause 7 of Rule XVI, "no motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment." This bill provides for reducing taxes upon certain specified articles. Among those articles are not those named in the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.] The Chair therefore thinks the amendment is not in order, and sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON.]

Mr. FLOWER. I desire to move a substitute for the entire bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will withhold his substitute until the committee shall have acted upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] as an additional section, which amendment will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. —. Apothecaries who sell liquor only for medicinal purposes, and according to the restrictions hereinafter specified, shall pay a special tax of $5 annually. When any apothecary who proposes to sell liquors shall, at the proper time for making application for the special-tax stamp of a liquor dealer, make and file with the collector of his district an oath or affirmation in writing, in a form to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, that he is carrying on the business of preparing and compounding medicines according to prescriptions of physicians; that he does not intend to, and will not sell, or offer for sale, or permit to be sold or offered for sale at his place of business, any distilled spirits, wines or malt liquors, excepting only for medicinal purposes, and not to be drank on the premises, and in quantities of less than one pint at any one time, such apothecary shall, on payment of the special tax, receive from the collector an appropriate special-tax stamp, prepared and furnished by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and to be subject to all the provisions of law relating to special-tax stamps.

Mr. RANDALL. I have introduced that amendment at the instance of many apothecaries who do not desire to be classed as liquor sellers, although they take out a license. They ask that they may be relieved from this retail liquor license, and that when they take out their license they will take an oath that they will not sell liquor or allow it to be drank in their place of business, but will only use it for the purpose of compounding medicines.

Mr. KASSON. That will leave a loop-hole for apothecaries to make important mixtures of medicines, the principal article in it being spirits.

Mr. RANDALL. No, it will not.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would ask the gentleman in what respect his amendment proposes to change the existing statute? The statute now exempts apothecaries from paying taxes as special dealers in wines and spirituous liquors which they use exclusively in making up their medicines.

Mr. RANDALL. They have to take out a retail dealer's license and pay $12, while this amendment allows them to take out a license for $5. And I desire to add to my amendment a provision that they shall not be required to exhibit their license, for many of them do not want to be regarded as liquor sellers.

Mr. HORR. But to sell liquor all the same.

Mr. RANDALL. Not at all.

The amendment of Mr. RANDALL was not agreed to.

Mr. WISE, of Virginia. I move as an additional section that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the following provision of section 3385 of the Revised Statutes be stricken out, after the word "stamp," in the fifteenth line, in the words following, to-wit: "And to be charged to them and accounted for in the same manner, and for the expense attending the providing and affixing of such stamps 10 cents shall be paid to the collector on making the entry of such transportation."

And also that the words, "the amount of tax," in the twenty-third line, after the word "pounds," be stricken out.

Mr. HASKELL. Is not that liable to a point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make a point of order upon it?

Mr. HASKELL. I understood it to refer to some section of the Revised Statutes.

The CHAIRMAN. It does. The gentleman can reserve his point of order until the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE] is heard upon his amendment.

Mr. WISE, of Virginia. I ask the House to hear me for a moment in reference to this amendment. Under the Constitution of the United States no tax or duty can be laid upon exports from any State. Under the section of the Revised Statutes to which my amendment refers a stamp is required to be placed on all packages of tobacco exported from the country. Now, to the extent that this charge of 10 cents per package is in excess of the cost of the stamp, it is in violation of the Constitution. That is a clear case.

I have a letter here from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in which he informs the House that ninety-nine one-hundredths of this tax is in excess of the cost of the stamp. The small revenue of $7,000 per annum is all that is derived from this source. It is a tax which falls almost exclusively upon the cities of Richmond and Petersburgh, in my State. The whole amount of revenue collected from this source is $7,000 annually, and those two cities pay more than $6,000 of that sum. I ask that this amendment to the bill may be accepted. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue recommends it, and it is recommended by all the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. HASKELL. This amendment is a provision concerning the exportation of tobacco. It is a matter that relates to the tariff and impost duties as much as to the internal revenue. It has no place on this bill. It is a custom-house regulation. The stamp is put on the package in order to identify the tobacco which is sent out of the country for exportation.

Mr. KELLEY. There is a bill now before the House for this purpose, and I think the gentleman has copied it for his amendment.

Mr. WISE, of Virginia. Not the bill before the House.

Mr. KELLEY. There is also a bill relating to the exportation of tobacco by rail to Canada, Mexico, and elsewhere.

Mr. WISE, of Virginia. I would like to say to the House that the exporters of tobacco from my State, in addition to this tax of 10 cents, are also charged 12 cents for inspection. I do think that this reduction ought to be made in their behalf.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, after a very casual inspection of this section of the statutes, thinks that it does relate entirely to customs duties and not to internal-revenue taxation. If the Chair is right about that, it does not relate to the subject of the bill.

Mr. TUCKER. The export tax, as this is now held to be, has nothing to do with customs duties, because no customs duties can be laid upon articles exported, as is admitted. This is a charge upon tobacco exported from the country, which the Supreme Court of the United States held would be unconstitutional if it appeared that it was more than was necessary to pay for the cost of the stamps, for then it would be a tax on exports, which is prohibited by the Constitution.

The Committee on Ways and Means found, by inquiry of the internal-revenue collector, that the fee amounted to more than was necessary to pay the cost of the stamps, and therefore it was an export duty.

The only question is, whether this provision, which substantially has been reported from the Committee on Ways and Means, should not be ingrafted on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to understand from the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] whether this amendment is substantially the same as another bill.

Mr. TUCKER. I think it is substantially.

The CHAIRMAN. If it is, the Chair must rule it out of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CALKINS. I send to the desk a substitute for the bill.

Mr. KELLEY. I reserve all points of order.

Mr. FLOWER. I believe I have a substitute pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not so understand.

Mr. FLOWER. I was recognized to offer a substitute when the Chair requested me to wait until the then pending section was voted upon. My substitute is at the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair now remembers having recognized the gentleman. His substitute will be reported.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to know whether it is not in order to vote on additional sections before any substitute for the bill is voted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the original text of the bill should be perfected before a substitute is voted upon.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Then I desire to move to amend by adding to the bill some new sections.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will submit his amendment.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I send to the desk the additional sections which I offer to the bill. They are printed in the RECORD of the 22d instant.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that these additional sections are very lengthy, and also that they relate to the income tax.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair supposes that the same point of order will be made upon this amendment as has been made on other amendments of this character.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I have heard no point of order made which is pertinent to my amendment.

Mr. KASSON. I wish it understood that there is a point of order raised against this amendment and all others of the same character.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thought that, as the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky has reference to the income tax, time might be saved by allowing the point of order to be passed upon without reading the various sections in full. Does the gentleman from Kentucky desire to have these sections reported?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Yes, sir. I do not see how the House or the Chair can understand them unless they are reported.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the right of the gentleman to have them read if he insists upon it. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the following, proposed by Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, to be added to the bill as new sections:

That there shall be levied and collected, as hereinafter provided, for the year 1883, and annually thereafter, upon the gains, profits, and income of every person residing in the United States, and of every citizen of the United States temporarily residing abroad, derived from any source whatever, whether within or without the United States, except as hereafter provided, and the gains, profits, and income derived from any business, trade, or profession carried on in the United States by any person residing without the United States, and not a citizen thereof, or from rents of real estate within the United States owned by any person residing without the United States, and not a citizen thereof, the following tax, to wit: 2½ per cent. on the amount of all such gains, profits, and income in excess of $4,000 up to the sum of $10,000; and 5 per cent. of the amount thereof over $10,000 and up to the sum of $20,000; and 10 per cent. on the amount thereof above the sum of $20,000.

SEC. 2. In estimating the gains, profits, and income of any person, there shall be included all income derived from any kind of property, rents, interest received or accrued upon all notes, bonds, and mortgages, or other forms of indebtedness bearing interest, whether paid or not, if good or collectible, interest upon notes, bonds, or other securities of the United States; and the amount of all premium on gold and coupons; the gains, profits, and income of any business, profession, trade, employment, office, or vocation, including any amount received as salary or pay for services in the civil, military, naval, or other services of the United States, or as Senator, Representative, or Delegate in Congress; the share of any person of the gains and profits, whether divided or not, of all companies or partnerships; profits above costs and expenses actually received or realized in cash or cash value within the year from sales of real estate purchased within two years previous to the year for which income is estimated; the amount of sales of live-stock, sugar, wool, butter, cheese, pork, beef, mutton, or other meats, hay and grain, fruits, vegetables, or other productions being the growth or produce of the estate of such person, but not including any part thereof consumed directly by the family; and all other gains, profits, and income drawn from any source whatever, but not including the rental value of the homestead owned and used or occupied by any person, or by his family: Provided, That no gift, devise, or property acquired by inheritance, distribution, or succession shall be accounted as gains, profits, or income under this section.

SEC. 3. Military or naval pensions allowed to any person under the laws of the United States, and the sum of $4,000 of the gains, profits, and income of any person shall be exempt from said income tax, in the manner hereinafter provided. Only one deduction of $4,000 shall be made from the aggregate income of all the members of any family composed of one or both parents and one or more minor children, or of husband and wife; but when a wife has by law a separate income, beyond the control of her husband, and is living separate and apart from him, such deduction shall then be made from her income, gains, and profits; and guardians and trustees shall be allowed to make the deduction in favor of each ward or beneficiary, except that in case of two or more wards or beneficiaries comprised in one family, having joint property interest, only one deduction shall be made in their favor. For the purpose of allowing said deduction from the income of any religious or social community holding all their property and the income therefrom jointly and in common, each five of the persons composing such society, and any remaining fractional number of such persons less than five over such groups of five, shall be held to constitute a family, and a deduction of $4,000 shall be allowed for each of said families.

In addition to the exemptions provided, above specified, there shall be deducted from the gains, profits, and income of any person, all premiums on insurance of life or property, and all national, State, county, and municipal taxes paid by him within the year, whether such person be owner, tenant, or mortgager; all his losses actually sustained during the year arising from fires, floods, shipwrecks, or incurred in trade, and debts ascertained to be worthless, but excluding all estimated depreciation of values; the amount of interest paid during the year, and the amount paid for rent or labor to cultivate land, or to conduct any other business from which income is derived; the amount paid for the rent of the house or premises occupied as a residence for himself or his family, and the amount paid out for usual and ordinary repairs. No deduction shall be made for any amount paid out for new buildings, permanent improvements, or betterments made to increase the value of any property or estate.

The salaries of all officers, executive, judicial, and legislative, of any State of the Union shall also be deducted from their gains, profits, and income, and be exempted from said tax; and consuls of foreign governments who are not citizens of the United States shall be exempt from any income tax imposed by this act which may be derived from their official emoluments, or from property in foreign countries.

SEC. 4. That the tax hereinbefore provided shall be assessed upon the gains, profits, and income for the year ending the 31st day of December, 1882, and for each succeeding year, as herein provided, and shall, after assessment, be due and payable upon notice and demand made as provided by section 3184 of the Revised Statutes. When said tax shall have been assessed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and said lists shall have been returned to the collector, he shall at once proceed to collect the tax assessed in the same manner as all other assessed taxes are required by law to be collected; and in case of default in the payment of the tax as required, or any part thereof, the penalty of 5 per cent. and interest at the rate of 1 per cent. per month shall also be collected in the manner prescribed by law in the case of other assessed taxes. If any person liable to pay the said tax neglects or refuses to pay the same for ten days after demand, the amount shall be a lien in favor of the United States from the time it was due until paid, with, except in case of deceased, insane, or insolvent persons, the interest, penalties, and costs that may accrue in addition thereto, upon all the real and personal property of the person assessed within the collection district.

SEC. 5. That it shall be the duty of every person of lawful age having a taxable income during the preceding year to make and render a return on or before the 10th day of January, or within twenty days thereafter, to the collector of internal revenue of the district in which he resides of the gross amount of his income, gains, and profits as aforesaid; but not including the wages of minor children not received; and every guardian and trustee, executor or administrator, and any person acting in any other fiduciary capacity, or as a resident agent for, or copartner of, any citizen or non-resident alien, deriving incomes, gains and profits from any business, trade, or profession carried on in the United States, or from rents of real estate situated therein, shall make and render a return as aforesaid to the collector of the district in which he resides of the amount of income, gains, and profits of any minor or person for whom he acts.

And it shall be the duty of every collector to notify, in writing, by mail or otherwise, all such persons in his district as he shall have reason to believe had a taxable income for the preceding year to make and render a like return thereof. And such notice may be delivered to the person, or left at his dwelling or usual place of business or may be sent by mail.

Every such return shall be verified by the oath of the party rendering it, and shall be made in duplicate to the collector, who will immediately transmit one copy to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and the returns shall be made in such forms and manner as may be prescribed by general rules and regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in order to ascertain the amount of his income, gains, and profits legally liable to said tax; and where the party liable to the tax shall not be a resident of the United States, the collector may in like manner require a like return of any agent of such non-resident in order to ascertain his taxable income.

SEC. 6. And it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to prepare and forward to the collectors of internal revenue the needful schedules, blanks, and instructions, with such questions as he may deem necessary in order to elicit from each person a full, fair, and unequivocal account of his income, gains, and profits liable to said tax.

If any person having a taxable income shall fail or refuse, after being notified as aforesaid, to make such return, or shall make a false return, it shall be the duty of the collector, after reasonable notice to such person of the time and place of doing so, to proceed to make such return upon such evidence as he shall be able to obtain by the examination of such person under oath, or from any other source, and shall add, as a penalty to the amount of the tax due thereon, 100 per cent. in all cases of willful neglect or refusal to make and render a return, and in all cases of a false or fraudulent return having been rendered, the tax and the addition thereto as penalty shall be assessed and collected in the manner provided for in other cases of willful neglect or refusal to render a return, or of rendering a false or fraudulent return.

Any person may appeal from the decision of the collector in such cases to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The form, time, and manner of proceedings shall be subject to regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

And in all such proceedings any person, in his own behalf, or as such fiduciary agent, shall be permitted to declare, under oath, or otherwise show that he, or his ward, beneficiary, or principal, was not possessed of an income liable to be assessed according to the provisions of this act, or may declare that an income tax has been assessed and paid elsewhere in the same year, under authority of the United States, upon his income, gains, and profits, or those of his ward, beneficiary, or principal, as required by law, and if the collector shall be satisfied of the truth of the declaration, such person shall thereupon be exempt from income tax in the said district.

SEC. 7. It shall be the duty of each collector, on or before the 15th day of February, in the year 1879, and of every succeeding year, to make triplicate lists of all the returns within his district, giving the name, residence, gross income, exemptions, deductions, and any other facts which, under the regulations to be made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, may be required. The collector shall, immediately thereafter, transmit to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue one of each of the returns made to the collector, with the original and duplicate lists aforesaid, retaining one set of returns and the triplicate list in his office. Upon the receipt of said lists and returns the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall, as soon as practicable, assess the tax due by each person, and shall thereupon transmit the original lists, with said assessments, to the collector, who shall give receipts therefor as in other cases: Provided, however, That no collector shall permit to be published in any manner such income returns, or any part thereof, except such general statistics, not specifying the names of individuals or firms, as he may make public, under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe.

That if any person signing and making the return above prescribed in regard to said tax shall intentionally and fraudulently sign and make a false return, he may be indicted and convicted in any court of the United States having local jurisdiction, and shall, upon conviction, be subject to a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $50,000, or be imprisoned not less than one nor more than ten years, or both, at the discretion of the court.

SEC. 8. The taxes collected under this act shall be paid over and accounted for in the same manner that other internal-revenue taxes are required to be paid by law, and the collectors of internal revenue, before proceeding to execute this act, shall renew their bonds as such, or give a separate bond, with sufficient sureties, as now provided in like cases, conditioned to discharge their duties under it, and to account for all moneys received under its provisions.

The provisions of chapter 2, title 35, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relative to assessments and collections of internal-revenue taxes, are, when not inconsistent with any of the provisions of this act, hereby made applicable to the assessment and collection of the taxes imposed by this act.

Mr. HASKELL, (before the reading was concluded.) I make the point that this amendment is entirely out of order. Enough has been read to demonstrate that it proposes the imposition of an income tax.

Mr. ATKINS. Unless we can have some understanding, I prefer that the amendment should be read in full. If the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means intends to keep us here all night, let us know it.

Mr. HASKELL. The amendment is simply and clearly the imposition of an income tax, nothing else.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has read the amendment in the RECORD; and already enough has been disclosed upon the reading by the Clerk to show that the amendment relates to a subject entirely different from that embraced in the bill. The Chair is therefore very clearly of the opinion that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. RANDALL. I submit that a gentleman offering an amendment has the right to have it read before it is ruled upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so holds.

Mr. HASKELL. He has not that right if, before the reading is concluded, it is manifest that the proposition is out of order.

Mr. RANDALL. The Chair has no right to decide the point of order before the amendment has been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has stated that the amendment must be read if it is insisted upon.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I insist on its being read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will continue the reading.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] raises the point of order that this amendment embraces a subject different from any contained in the bill. The Chair is prepared to rule on the point of order. He sustains the point and excludes the amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. I move that the committee rise——

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] is recognized.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I rise to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair. I was not allowed to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. ATKINS. The Chair has not made a decision.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, yes!

Mr. ATKINS. Oh, no. The Chair said he was prepared to rule upon the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated that he was prepared to rule, and he did rule upon it, sustaining the point of order. The question now is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. Does the Chair refuse to hear any argument on the question of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee? Those in favor will say "ay;" those opposed will say "no." The ayes have it, and the decision of the Chair is sustained.

Mr. KELLEY. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Chairman, a division is demanded on the appeal.

Several MEMBERS. Do not vote!

Mr. COX, of New York. I serve notice on the Chair to give us a hearing.

Mr. HOUSE. Do not vote; they have no quorum here.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Does the Chair refuse to hear an argument on the question?

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. It is the first time the Chair has refused to hear argument.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is dividing.

Mr. SCALES. Will the Chair hear argument on the subject?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina wish to be heard?

Mr. SCALES. Will the Chair hear the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMPSON] on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The House is dividing, and the time for discussion has passed.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. There will be no objection if the gentleman desires to speak on the appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the gentleman wished to speak on the appeal.

Mr. COX, of New York. The Chair gave us no chance.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the gentleman rose to address the Chair.

Mr. COX, of New York. Half a dozen were addressing the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear them. If the gentleman wishes to be heard on the appeal, the Chair will hear him.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, and I should like to have order in the House while I state it.

Mr. ROBESON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I wish to ask the Chair why it is that a member on this side of the House cannot be recognized by the Chair upon a question which is of a privileged character? I rose to address the Chair with a view of being heard, first, on the point of order made on the amendment which I had offered to the bill. I do not complain of the discourtesy of the Chair in not hearing me; nor do I complain of the discourtesy in not allowing me one word upon the point of order pending to my amendment, an important amendment.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. One of the most important.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. But I do complain when I rose to take an appeal I was refused recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that the Chair did not understand the gentleman desired to be heard on the question of appeal. The Chair has already stated, so far as it is concerned, it would recognize the gentleman to be heard on that subject now.

Mr. BAYNE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky cannot be taken off the floor.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I do not yield.

Mr. BAYNE. Then I rise to a point of order against the proposition the gentleman is now making. I want to know whether it is a principle of parliamentary law that when the Chair is fully prepared to decide it is a matter of courtesy or right on the part of anybody.

The CHAIRMAN. That is another question and not the one pending at all.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I make no complaint of the Chair on that account.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. He is arguing the appeal now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has stated to the gentleman from Kentucky he has recognized him on the appeal, and if he desires to speak to that the Chair will be glad to hear him.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I do not desire to be heard on the appeal. I wish only to insist on my right in this House, as every other member, when I rise to take an appeal, that the Chair shall recognize me for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair again desires to state to the gentleman from Kentucky that he had no disposition to cut the gentleman off and not permit him to be heard. The Chair did not understand that the gentleman wished to address the committee on that subject.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I want it understood distinctly I do not propose to have a quarrel with the Chair on this matter or to treat the Chair with discourtesy, but it is the first time in my short service in this House that I have known the Chair to cut off a member from expressing his views on any amendment. It is the first time I have ever known any member of the House to have to run a race with the Chair to be heard on an important matter pending offered by him for the consideration of the committee.

I am the only member that I have ever seen in this House refused a hearing upon his amendment when the point of order was made against it, and the only person who has ever been refused recognition to appeal from the decision of the Chair when the Chair had run rough-shod over him. That is what I complain of.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman from Kentucky, that as he understands the practice it is entirely discretionary with the Chair whether or not he will listen to arguments upon the point of order. But the Chair had thoroughly considered this matter before; had carefully read the amendment of the gentleman, and had come to the conclusion that it was entirely subject to the point of order, and therefore to avoid taking up the time of the committee, the Chair felt it was his duty to rule upon it. The Chair, however, desires to state that he meant no discourtesy whatever to the gentleman from Kentucky; but having made the examination, he was prepared to rule and felt it his duty to rule simply for the purpse of expediting the business of the House, and not with a view to cutting off the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I have no doubt the wisdom of the Chair is so great that it could not be enlightened upon any subject by any remarks which I might have seen fit to make in connection with the point of order. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no doubt that the gentleman from Kentucky might possibly have enlightened him or the committee, but the mind of the Chair was made up from a thorough consideration of the amendments, which have all been printed, and discussion would have been profitless and fruitless; and unless the gentleman from Kentucky had desired to consume the time of the committee in talking to no purpose, the Chair thought that discussion was out of order; and being fully prepared to rule upon the question, did what he believed to be his duty in that connection.

Mr. COX, of New York. What is the pending proposition?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I have an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from New York rises to discuss the appeal.

Mr. COX, of New York. I do not propose to discuss the appeal. I have endeavored time and again to get the ear of the Chair, but have failed to do so. I simply rose to ask what was the pending proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending proposition is on the appeal of the gentleman from Kentucky. Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken, and the Chair decided by the sound the yeas had it.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 102, noes 4.

Mr. HOUSE. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that no quorum has voted, under the rule the Chair will order tellers to ascertain whether gentlemen desire to vote upon the proposition or not.

The Chair appoints the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. RUSSELL, and the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. THOMPSON.

Mr. VANCE. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his demand.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. Is it necessary that a quorum shall vote on a question of this character? I make the point that it is not necessary that a quorum shall vote on such a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks a quorum is necessary. The tellers will take their places.

Mr. RUSSELL took his place as one of the tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Kentucky act as one of the tellers?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. No, sir; "the gentleman from Kentucky" will not.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York act as one of the tellers?

Mr. COX, of New York. With the greatest pleasure, sir; it is my duty. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 114, noes 35.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FLOWER] will now be reported.

Mr. COX, of New York. I do not want to lose my right to perfect the bill before the substitute is adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman to offer his amendment as an additional section.

Mr. ATKINS. There will be several other amendments, perhaps a dozen of them.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. There are a great number of amendments yet to be offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the proposed substitute of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FLOWER] for the entire bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend House bill 5538 by striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting the following:

"That the several sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States embraced in title 35, chapter 3, beginning with section 3232 and ending with section 3246, imposing 'special taxes,' be, and the same are hereby, repealed, to take effect on the 1st day of May, 1883; and the several sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States embraced in title 35, chapter 5, beginning with section 3335, and ending with section 3354, relating to 'fermented liquors,' and all amendments thereto; and the several sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States embraced in title 35, chapters 9 and 10, beginning with section 3418 and ending with section 3440, relating to 'stamps on specific objects' and 'legacies and successions,' and all amendments thereto, be, and the same are hereby, repealed, to take effect on the 1st day of July, 1882.

SEC. 2. That so much of section 3408 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and all amendments thereto, as imposes a tax upon deposits of money with any person, bank, association, company, or corporation, engaged in the business of banking, and so much of said section and all amendments thereto as imposes a tax upon the capital of any bank, company, or corporation, and on the capital employed by any person in the business of banking, and so much of section 5214 of said Revised Statutes as imposes a tax on the capital and deposits of national banks be, and the same are hereby, repealed, to take effect on the 1st day of January, 1883; and that the sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States embraced in title 35, chapters 6 and 7, beginning with section 3355 and ending with section 3406, relating to "tobacco and snuff" and "cigars," and all amendments thereto, be, and the same are hereby, repealed, to take effect on and after January 1, 1884.

SEC. 3. It shall be the duty of the President and the Secretary of the Treasury to discharge from the service all officers and employés specially employed in carrying into effect the acts of Congress repealed in this act, as soon as the repeal of the taxes takes effect; and to reduce the remaining officers and employés to such number as will be required for an efficient and economical administration of the internal-revenue laws thereafter. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall report to Congress at the beginning of each regular session, after the provisions of this act shall have taken effect, what reductions of the official force have been made, and the reduced expenses in consequence thereof.

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to report to Congress at the beginning of the next regular session the propriety of so amending the laws relating to the taxes on distilled spirits as to provide for taxing the capacities of all distilleries, and thus enabling the Government to dispense with the entire system of collections of internal revenue as now required by law, after the taking effect of this act, and the collection of the license on distilleries through the customs officers of the Treasury Department.

SEC. 5. That all taxes assessed under the sections repealed in this act, and the amendments thereto, before this act takes effect, as provided herein, shall be collected as heretofore; and all suits, prosecutions, rights of action, liabilities, and bonds, originating under said sections and amendments thereto, shall in no wise be affected by the provisions of this act.

Mr. FLOWER. Mr. Chairman, in my remarks before this House on the tariff and tax commission bill I took the ground that all of the taxes embraced in the internal-revenue system should be abolished with the exception of the tax on distilled spirits. I believe the sixty-five or seventy millions we collect from that source, together with the five millions which would be saved from salaries were this internal or infernal system abolished, would be sufficient to pay our pensions for all time. All the rest of these taxes ought to go, for they are unnecessary, and I believe that surplus revenue is as productive of lavish expenditure in governments as it is in individuals.

To take off these taxes is in the direct line of civil service and revenue reform. When you ask me, as an abstract question, whether we should take the tax off of sugar or tobacco first, I prefer taking it off the sweeter article. But, Mr. Chairman, there are other things besides toothsomeness to be considered. There are 600,000 licensed men in this country who cannot hold up their heads before the horde of Republican office-holders as I can. The tax is not collected in the same way from sugar—mark the difference.

I have had experience in this matter of the internal-revenue system. My opponent last fall walked through the eleventh district of New York, the wealthiest district in the United States, arm and arm with one of the attachés of the Internal Revenue Department, soliciting votes from the tobacco manufacturer, from the cigar manufacturer, from the whisky dealer, from the lager-beer brewer, and the saloon-keeper. If there was anywhere a man who had ever violated the law that man was importuned to vote for my opponent.

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish to inquire if the rumor that the incomes of gentlemen in that district were largely increased is true or not?

Mr. ROBESON. You should say decreased.

Mr. FLOWER. I can say for myself I made the plain statement in my canvass that I would not purchase a vote if I never came to Congress. And that is the reason I came here.

What about the 2 per cent. assessment? On the anniversary of President Garfield's death the question as to the 2 per cent. assessment is ringing through the papers. I give you notice that with all such means to corrupt the voters of this country you cannot buy them. And I desire to say, as a member of the Democratic campaign committee of this Congress, I will not solicit a single subscription. Go on; assess. Draw in your funds from the internal-revenue system. You are welcome. Your refusal to lighten the load of the people is more than all your money can atone for.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to say that I think the committee's bill has been better considered than the substitute of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. FLOWER,] and I hope that substitute will be voted down.

Mr. COX, of New York. In response to what has fallen from my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] who thinks the committee has better considered their propositions than my friend and colleague from New York [Mr. FLOWER] has considered his, I beg to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that while he and my colleague may agree on many of the propositions in this bill, and though I think my colleague and he may vote together for the bill, even though his substitute fail, of which I do not speak advisedly, for one, unless there be some substitute or some amendment placed on this bill, in order to get rid of the great bulk of this internal-revenue machinery, I for one, representing my constituents, cannot vote for it. Although it does reduce taxation twenty millions or so, although it is a great desideratum at this time to reduce taxation, although I believe we have no chance to reduce the tariff by means of your commission machinery for two years to come, I do believe it to be the duty of this House not merely to take off the taxes from your banks, State or national, or from your bank checks, or from a certain class of manufacturers, but I would favor the radical upturning of this business, and I would favor the substitute of my colleague, that we may have an end to the coming of these vast sums into the Treasury.

I think it would be proper and right for us just now and here if possible to vote to cut up the whole internal-revenue machinery, and turn it over if you please to the customs-house for its collection. For we will always fail to be rid of these electioneering devices rehearsed by my colleague until we burn the very barn to be rid of the rats. The rats in this country have taken possession of our politics. Your assessments are a part of that sort of system. I know my friend from Iowa the other day disavowed being in favor of this business of assessment on men who earn merely their living by labor. I was glad to hear him say it. He would like to have a more general law. I hope he will vote for a section I will offer to this bill to stop the assessments to be levied on the men who will execute this machinery. We cannot expect any other law very soon. Let us therefore do our best now and follow out the suggestions made here, and made eloquently to-day in the Senate on both sides, to cut down this upas tree, this 2 per cent. assessment, on our pages, our scrubbing women, and our laborers in our navy-yards.

I speak of this matter feelingly, because the men in my district work in the navy-yard, and on my visit home they came to me in groups asking me to relieve them from the dilemma this Congressional committee had placed them in. How could I advise them except as I did the other day? One gentleman from Springfield, Massachusetts, working in the armory, said he would pay both parties rather than one. He said, "I voted for Hancock, but I voted for ROBINSON for Congress. I mean to be just, but your assessments will not allow men to be just, fair, decent, or moral in our politics in this country." Therefore I have an amendment here I propose to submit at the proper time, and which, I have no doubt, the Chair will rule to be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] that his amendment must be submitted and voted upon before the question is taken on the substitute offered by his colleague, [Mr. FLOWER.]

Mr. COX, of New York. Then I offer it now.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. There are a dozen other amendments to be offered, and we ought to adjourn.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I will move that the committee rise.

Mr. COX, of New York. Let my amendment be read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

No assessments for political purposes shall be made on any person who shall be engaged in the execution of this law, nor shall any moneys collected under this act be used to pay political assessments.

Mr. KASSON. I reserve the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. ATKINS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlemen will state it.

Mr. ATKINS. Would it be in order to move that the committee now rise?

The CHAIRMAN. It would be.

Mr. ATKINS. I make that motion.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 64, noes 87.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. ATKINS called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ATKINS and Mr. RUSSELL were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 77, noes 92.

So the motion that the committee rise was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a point of order pending by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

Mr. COX, of New York. What is that point of order?

Mr. KASSON. My point of order is that the amendment is not germane to the bill, is new legislation, and I may add, it is totally inadequate to accomplish the purpose the gentleman professes to seek.

Mr. COX, of New York. It refers directly to the men who will execute this law; it endeavors to make them honest men.

Mr. KASSON. If I understand the proposition this bill creates no new officers at all, but simply reduces taxation. On that the gentleman proposes to ingraft some regulation totally disconnected with the provisions of the bill. I therefore say it is not germane to the bill, and can only be offered for purposes of delay.

Mr. COX, of New York. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] interrupts me before I get through. And the gentleman has no right to attribute to me any purpose of delay. What I propose here is in the interest of my constituents, and not for delay. They are summoned by your Congressional committee, who are about to be tried by the United States courts, if they will only accept the issue of Mr. Curtis.

Mr. KASSON. The issue was proposed by the chairman of our committee.

Mr. COX, of New York. The issue he proposed was to refer the matter to the Attorney-General.

Mr. HUBBELL. I beg your pardon; it was to refer it to him or any one else.

Mr. COX, of New York. I will ask to insert the paper of Mr. Curtis in my remarks. I have it in my desk here; and gentlemen can pray over it to-night. And when they come to Congress hereafter by means of the little pittances that they get from the pages and poor laboring-men, when they come crawling here into their seats in that way, by means of the sums collected from their one-legged and one-armed soldiers, forcing them to pay those sums by the pretension that the Administration favors that sort of a system—when that is done, it seems to me that it is about time for the elaborate legislation of my friend from Kansas to take its place on every appropriation bill, on every bill providing for the use of public money, so as to stop this business right off, in limine, here and now.

Mr. BROWNE. All of which I suppose is on the point of order.

Mr. COX, of New York. And the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BROWNE;] the gallant soldier, the man of many battles, the man of old-fashioned, motherly gumption, to think that he should approve of this J. A. Hubbell circular, and try to put me down on the point of morality, as he did the other day. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROWNE. If the gentleman will pardon me, I think that speech of his is an excellent one; I have heard it five times already. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX, of New York. Yes; and it will be repeated until some reform is made in your party.

Mr. BROWNE. I suggest to the gentleman to get up a new speech.

Mr. COX, of New York. If you will only get up and confess your sins, only take back that circular, which makes such an unpleasant odor all over the United States, if you will only get Mr. HUBBELL and the rest of you to get up and confess your sins before the American people, I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. McCOOK. How about the Buchanan administration?

Mr. COX, of New York. I was opposed to the Buchanan administration. You did not know that; you were too young to know that. [Laughter.]

Mr. KASSON. I assume, from what the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] has said, that he knows as well as I do that his proposition is not in order on this bill. I have only to answer briefly what he has said, for I want no concealment about this matter.

Instead of making speeches on this floor in the name of civil-service reform, if he will only tell the men who have come to him (if any of them have honestly come to him for that purpose) to refuse to pay one dime if they did not do it willingly, he will find every member on this side of the House sustaining the manhood of such a person. [Applause on Republican side.]

Mr. COX, of New York. Yes; and then you will turn him out on some pretext.

Mr. KASSON. I did not interrupt the gentleman on his "point-of-order" speech. I want to say further that you know from old Democratic precedents that you turned out the men who refused your demands——

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. We never made any. [Laughter, and cries of "Oh!" from the Republican side of the House.]

Mr. KASSON. I refer you to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and to a certain speech in it which contains the particulars.

Mr. COX, of New York. Are you talking on the point of order?

Mr. KASSON. I am meeting the gentleman's point of order. One word more. I am in earnest about this thing. The manhood of this country is not to be insulted by that side of the House any more than by this. When a man in office or out is asked to pay money for political purposes he has a right and it is his duty to decline to do so if he does not wish to pay it. [Applause on Republican side.] More than that, if I find any officer of Congress, any member of the Congressional committee or of the executive government, or the man's immediate superintendent, who interferes to get him turned out, I will get up on this floor and denounce him as a tyrant. [Applause.] I have no concealment in this matter. There is no one of these men to whom I allude who will lose his place if he declines to pay.

Mr. McMILLIN. How about the children—the pages whom you have notified?

Mr. KASSON. One thing more; and I speak by indulgence of the House, as it has indulged my friend from New York. I want to go further than to depend upon the manhood of the employé and the honor of the Government officer who is the employer. I want to devise some law by which officers of the Government—at least those subordinates not nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate—whenever they have by experience shown their qualifications shall not be turned out without cause at the will of any politician. [Applause.]

Mr. COX, of New York. Does my friend denounce that circular?

Mr. KASSON. I have stated to the gentleman my views upon that subject, so that he cannot misunderstand me. Now, I insist on my point of order upon this amendment, which is a pure political maneuver and not in fact a proposition to amend the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule upon the point of order.

Mr. COX, of New York. I want to know from the Chair whether I have permission to print the letter of George William Curtis?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that that would hardly assist the Chair in deciding the point of order, as it would not be printed till to-morrow, and the Chair will probably have to decide this point to-night.

Mr. COX, of New York. I want authority to print what President Garfield said to you gentlemen on this subject. Shall I not print that? [Cries of "Yes!" "Yes!"]

I ask these gentlemen what they think of the system of political assessments * * * of issuing a circular calling for 1, 2, or 3 per cent. of the salaries of all the employés * * * with the distinct understanding that unless they pay, others will be found to fill their places? I call the attention of gentlemen around me to that shameful fact. The practice affords a large so-called electioneering fund which in many cases never gets beyond the shysters and the mere camp-followers of the party.

Mr. SPRINGER. I wish to say a word upon the point of order. This is a bill to reduce internal-revenue taxation. The gentleman from New York proposes to reduce infernal-revenue taxation by the Republican party or their employés. The question is simply as to the distinction between internal and infernal; for if there is one thing more infernal than another it is an enforced assessment by Republican members of Congress upon the pages and one-legged and one-armed soldiers employed about this House in order to enable these members to be re-elected to Congress.

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to say to the gentleman that there is no reason for any such remark as that. There is no such thing as "enforced assessments." He knows it, and so does everybody else.

Mr. SPRINGER. May I be allowed to print the letter of Mr. Curtis, of New York, to Mr. HUBBELL, which shows that there are enforced assessments? [Cries of "Yes!" "Yes!" "No!" "No!"]

Mr. CALKINS. I am willing that the gentleman may print the Ten Commandments if he wants to.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, I want to know if I have the authority of the Republicans on the other side of the House to say to these little pages here and to other employés of the House—one-legged and one-armed soldiers—that they are not expected to make any payment in response to this circular unless they really want to do so?

Mr. HUBBELL. I will say to the gentleman that so far as the pages are concerned, he has that right.

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish to say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] that he has no authority to speak for the Congressional committee. It will speak by its own circulars and its own methods. We are not asking information from the other side as to what those methods should be. I stand here putting a fair construction—the construction intended—upon their circulars, willing now and forever to indorse them. It is right that citizens of this country—one-legged and one-armed soldiers, if you please—should contribute if they choose to the expenses of an election. And I am not here to blush for them. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I would like to know what officer of this House, a one-armed or one-legged soldier, Union soldier, has asked the gentleman from Illinois to appear here as his advocate and his representative?—In the House of Representatives, June 26, 1882.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Does not my friend from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] know that the trouble with the party on the other side of the Chamber is that they esteem themselves as being virtuous when they are in fact only impotent? [Laughter.]

Mr. HISCOCK. Most emphatically, yes.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not see the exact force of that remark.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to the floor. Before the gentleman proceeds the Chair desires to state that in his opinion this discussion does not furnish much light on the point of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. KASSON. I beg now to be permitted to make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is speaking to the point of order, and will continue until he has concluded.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman stated I had no authority to speak for any employé of this House in regard to these assessments.

Mr. HISCOCK. I questioned his authority to speak for any one-armed or one-legged soldier. [Cries of "Oh!" on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I will state then that one one-legged soldier on the roll of the House applied to me in one of the corridors of the Capitol and stated to me he had been assessed $24 by the Republican campaign committee and that he did not want to pay it, and asked me what he should do.

Mr. HISCOCK. Not assessed $24 by the Republican party?

Mr. SPRINGER. That he was assessed $24 by this committee.

Mr. HUBBELL. No man has been assessed one cent, and I defy the gentleman to name an instance during the past ten years where a man has declined to make a contribution to the committee in response to its circular who has for that reason lost his position under the Government.

Mr. SPRINGER. He got a circular that voluntary contributions would be received, and it was always understood if he did not pay up his official head would fall into the basket.

Mr. HUBBELL. The gentleman has no right to make that statement.

Mr. WILSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. [Cries of "Order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILSON. Would it be in order to read the riot act? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it would. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield the floor?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes; I yield the floor. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the point of order raised by the gentleman from New York. The Chair does not think it relates to the same subject contained in the bill, and sustains the point of order.

Mr. COX, of New York. I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair. I wish to say that I presume there never was an amendment to the bill so thoroughly just and equitable and so near the point. I know it is germane by the way it touches gentlemen on that side. [Laughter.] I know the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. HUBBELL,] who is receiving these vast moneys, which will be $2,000,000 before they get through, judging by the Blue Book—I know that he is a candidate for Senator in Michigan, and I hope and pray he will take and use this money for the Senatorship and not use it in our Congressional districts to corrupt the whole country. The Chair will see at once how pertinent my remarks are to the question of the appeal. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSON. Let him take it and buy a farm with it. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The motion was agreed to; and the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. VANCE. I move the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend after section 3: "Provided, That the money raised under the provisions of this bill shall be turned over to the States of this Union for the purpose of educating the people in the common schools on the basis of illiteracy, as shown by the census of 1880."

Mr. KELLEY. I make the point of order that the amendment does not relate to the subject-matter of the bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield to a motion to rise.

Mr. VANCE. I suppose the gentleman from Pennsylvania referred to section 7 of Rule XIV. I submit the question to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this amendment does not relate to the same subject as the bill. This relates to an expenditure of money for school purposes, while the bill relates to another subject.

Mr. VANCE. I ask to be allowed to print some remarks on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the gentleman has consent to do so. [See Appendix.]

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I move the following amendment:

SEC. 4. That all taxes imposed upon distilled spirits or alcohol manufactured from apples, peaches, grapes, or any other fruits be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and all laws and parts of laws in conflict of the same be, and are hereby, repealed.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ANDERSON. I wish to offer a substitute.

Mr. SPRINGER. The substitute of the gentleman from New York has not yet been disposed of.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out of the substitute of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FLOWER] that portion which proposes to relieve the banks from tax on deposits and capital.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 94.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. No quorum has voted.

The Chair appointed as tellers Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, and Mr. RUSSELL.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 41, noes 106.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the substitute proposed by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. FLOWER.]

The question was taken; and the Chair decided by the sound that the substitute was lost.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I demand a division.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 91.

Mr. ATKINS. No quorum has voted.

Mr. RUSSELL and Mr. FLOWER were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 32, noes 104.

So the substitute was not agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I offer the following as a substitute for the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposed substitute will be read.

Mr. SPRINGER. If permitted by the committee, I will explain briefly the provisions of the proposed substitute instead of reading it.

Mr. ATKINS. I demand that it be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the taxes herein specified, imposed by the internal-revenue laws now in force, be, and the same are hereby, repealed, namely: the taxes on matches, perfumery, medicinal preparations, and other articles, imposed by Schedule A following section 3437 of the Revised Statutes; the stamp tax on bank checks, drafts, orders, and vouchers; that from and after the 31st day of December, 1883, all sections of the Revised Statutes embraced in chapters 6 and 7 of title 35, and amendments thereto, entitled, respectively, 'tobacco and snuff' and 'cigars,' shall be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and on all original unbroken packages of tobacco, snuff, cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes held by manufacturers or dealers on the said 31st day of December, 1883, upon which the tax has been paid, there shall be allowed a rebate or drawback of the full amount of the tax; and from and after the 1st day of May, 1883, all special taxes imposed on dealers in or manufacturers of tobacco, cigars, and all articles manufactured from tobacco, shall be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

"SEC. 2. That from and after the 1st day of May, 1883, wholesale dealers in malt liquors shall pay a special tax of $46; retail dealers in malt liquors shall pay $8 40, and brewers shall pay $60, provided that any person who manufactures less than five hundred barrels a year shall pay $30.

"SEC. 3. All officials of the United States especially engaged in carrying into effect the provisions repealed by this act shall be discharged from the service as soon as the provisions of this act take effect repealing the provisions of law requiring the services of such officials. It shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to adopt such rules and regulations and to prescribe and furnish such blanks and forms as may be necessary to carry this act into effect."

Mr. SPRINGER. One word in reference to the proposed substitute. If this substitute is adopted it will reduce the internal-revenue taxes as now collected, as I am informed by the Commissioner, about $55,000,000. This takes the tax off of matches, proprietary medicines, bank checks, and on manufactured tobacco, &c., but not on bank deposits or capital, so that in lieu of bank deposits and capital, as in the pending bill, I substitute the repeal of all tobacco taxes and on all dealers in tobacco. This, as I say, will reduce the internal revenue fifty-five millions instead of twenty-three, as proposed by the committee's bill.

A MEMBER. How about fermented liquors?

Mr. SPRINGER. It does not touch fermented liquors at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Illinois.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 51, noes 98.

So the substitute was not agreed to.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, before moving that the bill be reported to the House, that my object now is to have the bill sent to the House and the previous question ordered upon it, and then to adjourn and let the vote be taken on it in the morning.

Mr. BERRY. How much time will be allowed for debate after the previous question is ordered?

Mr. KELLEY. There will be an hour.

Mr. ANDERSON. I desire to offer a substitute for the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send it to the desk.

Mr. ANDERSON. The substitute that I propose to offer is the present bill with the words "capital and" left out of the first section where they occur, and I desire to be heard a few moments upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this is the same amendment which has already been voted upon by the committee. It was proposed by the gentleman from New Jersey, as an amendment in lines 7, 10, and 12, of the first section——

Mr. ANDERSON. That may be, but I have the right to offer the substitute in this shape for the entire bill. I then offer it as a substitute with those words left out.

Mr. KETCHAM. Then offer it.

Mr. ANDERSON. I do offer it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. ANDERSON. I desire to be heard for a moment on the substitute. I want to say simply this, that when this Congress met there was a strong pressure brought to bear upon us to reduce taxation from all over the country. For that purpose, after a long debate, we created a tariff commission to revise the whole subject of the tariff. There was an understanding upon the part of many gentlemen, if not a general understanding, that the same pressure which rested upon reduction of the tariff should continue to rest also upon the reduction of the internal revenues, and that both subjects should be considered together. Under that impression the tariff commission was created, and to my surprise, at least, this bill was then brought in.

The people all over the country have been demanding a reduction of taxation, and you offer them this bill, which fitly terminates with the relief of that oppressed class of workers who make cigarettes! Look at the position it places you in, and which you will have to justify when you go to the people next fall and are asked, "What reduction have you made? Did you reduce the tax that we have to pay upon trace-chains, upon horseshoes, upon iron in its many forms, or that we have to pay upon salt, or upon sugar, or clothing, or blankets?"

What would be your response? "Oh, no; we could not do that; no, we did not do anything of that kind. [Laughter.] But then we did take the tax off bank capital and deposits;" and you can offer them a bottle of Mrs. Winslow's soothing sirup, for which they will pay exactly what they did before. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLS. And smoke a cigarette.

Mr. ANDERSON. I am in all good faith and in earnest upon this, and I have a right to express what is my judgment about it. I criticise no other gentleman who may think differently.

You are making the only mistake the majority of the Republican party has made, but a great one, because you cannot fool the people a half-inch on this thing.

Several MEMBERS on the Democratic side. That is so.

Mr. ANDERSON. You cannot go before them and say, "This long-suffering, down-cast, decrepit, shriveled, oppressed class of owners of capital in banks have had relief." The thing is a fraud from top to bottom, [applause on the Democratic side;] and that is the first truth I ever knew the Democratic party to applaud. [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. It is the first time we ever heard it from that side.

Mr. ANDERSON. The object of my substitute is to knock out this reduction of the tax on bank capital; I confine it to that, although I am opposed to many other things in this bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Kansas be extended.

The question being taken on the substitute offered by Mr. ANDERSON, there were—ayes 68, noes 95.

Mr. ANDERSON. I call for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered, only 26 voting therefor; not one-fifth of a quorum.

Mr. KELLEY. I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation and with the amendments.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask for a division. I want to divide on the question of reporting the bill favorably.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 109, noes 45.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CAMP reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. KELLEY. I demand the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. WHITE. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to know whether it is in order at this time to move to postpone the further consideration of this matter until the 26th day of next December?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to move a recommittal of this bill. Is that motion now in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not now in order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. KELLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry, whether it would be in order at this time to move to postpone the further consideration of this matter until next December.

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to say to the gentlemen on the other side——

Mr. ATKINS. I demand the regular order.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. ATKINS, there were—ayes 31, noes 85.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The previous question having been ordered the question is first on the amendments to the bill.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to say there will be one hour for debate; thirty minutes on that side and certainly not more than thirty, and probably not the thirty minutes, on this side. For my own part, I do not want any debate.

Mr. HISCOCK. If no debate is wanted, why have it?

Mr. KELLEY. Gentlemen on the other side have stated that they wanted some time for debate.

Mr. HISCOCK. I suggest that the question as to the hour's debate be left to be determined to-morrow morning.

Mr. KELLEY. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. KENNA. Pending the motion to adjourn, I ask unanimous consent that the bill with the amendments be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The bill, with the amendments reported by the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, is as follows, (the amendments strike out the portions within brackets and insert those in italics:)

A bill to reduce internal-revenue taxation.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That on and after the passage of this act, except as hereinafter provided, the taxes herein specified imposed by the internal-revenue laws now in force be, and the same are hereby, repealed, namely: The stamp-tax on bank checks, drafts, orders, and vouchers; the tax on the capital and deposits of banks and bankers under section 3408 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended; the tax on the capital and deposits of national banks under section 5214 of said Revised Statutes, not including the taxes on the capital and deposits of said banks, bankers, and national banks for the [current] six months' period ending in the case of national banks on the 30th day of June, 1882, and in the case of other banks and bankers on the 31st day of May, 1882; the tax on matches, perfumery, medicinal preparations, and other articles imposed by Schedule A following section 3437 of said Revised Statutes.

SEC. 2. That from and after the 1st day of May, eighteen hundred and eighty-[two] three, [rectifiers of distilled spirits shall pay a special tax of $120: Provided, That any person who rectifies, purifies, or refines less than 500 barrels a year, counting 40 gallons of proof spirits to the barrel, shall pay $60. Wholesale liquor-dealers shall pay $60, and retail liquor-dealers shall pay $12.] Dealers in leaf tobacco shall pay $12; dealers in manufactured tobacco shall pay $2.40; all manufacturers of tobacco shall pay $6; manufacturers of cigars shall pay $6. [Wholesale dealers in malt liquors shall pay $36; retail dealers in malt liquors shall pay $8.40; brewers shall pay $60: Provided, That any person who manufactures less than 500 barrels a year shall pay $30.] Peddlers of tobacco, snuff, and cigars, shall pay special taxes as follows: peddlers of the first class, as now defined by law, shall pay $30; peddlers of the second class shall pay $15; peddlers of the third class shall pay $7.20; and peddlers of the fourth class shall pay $3.60. [Manufacturers of stills shall each pay $36, and $12 for each still or worm for distilling made by him.] Retail dealers in leaf tobacco shall pay $250, and 50 cents for each dollar on the amount of their monthly sales in excess of [one thousand] the rate of five hundred dollars.

[SEC. 3. That on cigars of all descriptions, made of tobacco or any substitute therefor, which shall be sold or removed for consumption or sale, there shall be paid by the manufacturer $5 per thousand; on cigarettes weighing more than three pounds to the thousand, $5 per thousand.]

SEC. 3. That on cigars which shall be manufactured and sold, or removed for consumption or use, there shall be assessed and collected the following taxes, to be paid by the manufacturer thereof: on cigars of all descriptions, made of tobacco or any substitute therefor $4 per thousand; on cigarettes weighing not more than three pounds per thousand, 75 cents per thousand; on cigarettes weighing more than three pounds per thousand, $4 per thousand: Provided, That on all original unbroken packages of checks, matches, cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes held by manufacturers or dealers on the passage of this act, upon which the tax has been paid, there shall be allowed a rebate or drawback of the full amount of the reduction. It shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to adopt such rules and regulations and to prescribe and furnish such blanks and forms as may be necessary to carry this act into effect.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WARNER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 5004) to accept and ratify an agreement with the Shoshone and Bannock Indians for the sale of a portion of their reservation in Idaho Territory required for the use of the Utah and Northern Railroad, and to make the necessary appropriation for carrying out the same; and

A bill (H. R. No. 5996) for the relief of J. H. Merrill.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HERNDON, until next Monday, on account of important business.

To Mr. MUTCHLER, until Friday next.

To Mr. KELLEY, from evening sessions during the remainder of this session.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave to withdraw papers from the files of the House was granted, as follows:

To Mr. WALKER, in the case of W. G. Raymond, which had been referred to the Committee on War Claims; and

To Mr. DEERING, papers relating to House bill No. 2322, for the relief of S. B. Chase.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. WALKER, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD remarks on bill H. R. No. 4460. [See Appendix.]

REPORT OF CRUISE OF UNITED STATES STEAMER CORWIN.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH, by unanimous consent, submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be published in royal octavo form by the Government Printer 5,000 copies of a report of the cruise of the United States revenue steamer Corwin in the Arctic Ocean, by Captain C. L. Hooper, United States revenue marine, 900 copies for the use of the Senate, 1,800 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,300 copies for the use of the Treasury Department. The necessary illustrations to be made by the Government Printer, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, the matter to be furnished by the Secretary of the Treasury, under whose direction the report is being prepared.

The motion of Mr. KELLEY was then agreed to; and accordingly (at seven o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS.

The following petitions were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CARPENTER: The petition of Joseph N. Gaston, for a pension—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. S. S. COX: The petition of S. M. Shaw and others, for reduction of Federal taxation—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. N. J. HAMMOND: The petition of G. M. Hook and others, citizens of Milton County, Georgia, for an appropriation for educational purposes—to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. KING: The petition of Charles Harrison and others, citizens of Franklin Parish, Louisiana, for an appropriation for educational purposes—to the same committee.

By Mr. H. G. TURNER: The petition of M. Hatch and 34 others, citizens of Clay County, Georgia, for an appropriation for educational purposes—to the same committee.

By Mr. C. G. WILLIAMS: The petition of William B. Whiting, of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, praying for a pension for service in the United States Navy—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. YOUNG: The petition of J. L. Newcomer and Theo. T. Lawton, for the passage of a bill taxing glucose—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 27, 1882.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. ANTHONY. I present the petition of George Leschot, praying for the extension of letters-patent to the heirs of Rudolph Leschot, deceased, for a diamond drill. There is a bill accompanying the petition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Patents, and the bill will be held until the introduction of bills is reached.

Mr. ANTHONY. If it makes no difference in regard to the Journal, I should rather introduce the bill now, because I do not like the practice of a Senator introducing a bill by request when it relates to a subject of which he has no knowledge. I suggest to Senators that I think it would be better if bills which are introduced at the request of petitioners should be presented in the form of petitions, because when a bill is journalized as having been introduced by a particular Senator he is naturally looked upon as the father of it. This bill I know nothing about. It was sent to me because the company which owns the patent derives its existence from an incorporation of the General Assembly of Rhode Island.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be entered at another place in the Journal, but will be received now.

The bill (S. No. 2088) for the extension of letters-patent to the heirs of Rudolph Leschot, deceased, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. MAHONE presented the petition of John R. Traddy, late first lieutenant Fourth Regiment United States Artillery, praying for the removal of his political disabilities; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PLUMB presented a petition of citizens of Kansas, praying the passage of the bill granting an increase of pension to soldiers who lost a leg or an arm in the military service of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a resolution of the Legislature of New York, in favor of an appropriation of $250,000 for advances made by that State for the commission for the adjudication and payment of certain claims for services of the militia in the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

THE SIGNAL SERVICE.

Mr. MAXEY. I beg to call the attention of the Senate for a moment to the bill (S. No. 691) to increase the efficiency of the Signal Service of the Army. At the session of the Military Committee this morning the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. HARRISON,] who reported the bill, and has been suddenly called away by sickness in his family, was instructed to ask that the bill be taken up for consideration at the earliest practicable moment. I wish to say that the sub-committee, of which the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. HARRISON,] the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY,] and myself are members, have devoted a great deal of attention to the bill. It is one of national importance, and one that ought to be acted on, and acted on very promptly in view of the recent act passed with respect to the compulsory retirement of officers of the Army. Therefore I shall ask the Senate to give us at the first favorable moment an opportunity to take up the bill and consider it, and I think it will take but a very short time to dispose of it.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MAXEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1275) for the relief of First Lieutenant Eugene Griffin, United States Army, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. WINDOM. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom were referred the bill (S. No. 1648) to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese, and the bill (S. No. 1655) to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese, to report them back and to move their indefinite postponement, for the reason that a bill on the subject has already passed and become a law.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 2084) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Europe, reported it with amendments.

Mr. CHILCOTT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3581) granting a pension to Mrs. Lizzie M. Mitchell, reported it without amendment; and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1819) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth B. Custer, reported it with an amendment; and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Caroline French, widow of the late William H. French, brevet major-general, United States Army, praying for a pension, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 2089) granting a pension to Caroline French.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Pensions, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 6514) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAMDEN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1494) for the relief of Catharine Johnson, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1733) granting a pension to Elizabeth C. Crawford, submitted an adverse report thereon.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask that the bill be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar, with the adverse report of the committee, which will be printed under the rule.

Mr. JACKSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 547) granting a pension to E. G. Hoffman, late a captain in the One hundred and sixty-fifth Regiment New York Volunteers, reported it with an amendment; and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1904) granting a pension to Sophia A. Melson, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1520) granting a pension to Ann Lally, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1237) granting a pension to Isador Rohrer, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1048) granting an increase of pension to Bernard Brady, reported it without amendment; and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 803) granting a pension to Laban Connor, reported it without amendment; and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. GROOME, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 450) for the relief of Elizabeth S. Seeley, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2554) granting a pension to Louis Groverman, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 5382) granting a pension to Peter J. Welshbillig, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1606) for the relief of George A. Jaeger, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 2054) to authorize the Secretary of War to deliver to Lafayette Carver Post No. 45 of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Vinalhaven, Maine, fifty Springfield rifles and equipments, to report it adversely. I will read the bill. It provides—

That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to deliver to the Lafayette Carver Post No. 45 of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Vinalhaven, Maine, fifty Springfield rifles and equipments.

Under the law there is a distribution to each State of arms and equipments, and the Committee on Military Affairs decide not to entertain any bills for special issues of arms and equipments, in addition to the number allowed to each State under the general law. Therefore we report the bill adversely and recommend its indefinite postponement.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 2021) authorizing the National Bank of Kutztown to change its location and name, to ask to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be indefinitely postponed, a House bill having been passed upon the same subject.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. No. 2090) to further regulate the investment of the Pacific Railroad sinking fund; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MORRILL. I give notice that to-morrow morning, after the bill is printed, I shall call it up for action.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1132) in relation to the port and harbor of New York, and the waters near the same, reported it with amendments; and, on his motion, the bill was recommitted to the committee.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, reported an amendment intended to be proposed by that committee to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

GARFIELD MEMORIAL ADDRESS.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to which was referred a resolution to give additional copies of Mr. Blaine's eulogy on the late James A. Garfield to Mr. Blaine and Mrs. Garfield, to report it without amendment and recommend its passage; and I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That, in addition to the number heretofore ordered, there be printed for the use of James G. Blaine 750 copies of his eulogy upon James A. Garfield, and 750 of the same for the use of Mrs. Lucretia R. Garfield.

ALEXANDER SMILEY.

Mr. ALLISON. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 482) for the relief of Alexander Smiley, to report it with an amendment. My desire is that the Senate take action upon the bill; it will take but a moment.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment, to strike out in lines 4 and 5 "$874.38" and in lieu thereof to insert "$660.94;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is hereby authorized and required to remit the amount of $660.94, assessed against Alexander Smiley, proprietor of distillery No. 2, in the county of Mississippi and State of Missouri: Provided, That he shall be satisfied that said Smiley has fully paid to the Government all taxes due for spirits actually made by his distillery from the 1st day of February to the 23d day of April, 1875.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE FUND INVESTMENTS.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1829) to amend an act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts, to report it with amendments. This is a bill merely changing section 4 of the act of 1862 to enable States that have no State stocks or debt, and consequently cannot comply with the law, to invest in either United States or other State stocks yielding not less than 5 per cent. interest. There are some States where the funds have already accumulated, and it is important that the bill should pass at the present session. I therefore ask for the present consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The first amendment reported from the Committee on Finance was, after the word "stocks," in line 12, to strike out the following words:

Provided, That the moneys derived from the sale of said lands or said land scrip in the State of California may in that State be either invested in good stocks or loaned upon real estate, secured by mortgage, which real estate shall be of reasonably sufficient value to constitute a good security for said investment, the said investments or loans yielding not less than 5 per cent. upon the par value of said stocks or upon money loaned upon mortgage.

And to insert:

Or the same may be invested by the States having no State stocks in any other manner, after the Legislatures of such States shall have assented thereto and engaged that such funds shall yield not less than 5 per cent. upon the amount so invested.

So as to read:

That the fourth section of the act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts, approved July 2, 1862, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. That all moneys derived from the sale of lands aforesaid by the States to which the lands are apportioned, and from the sales of land scrip hereinbefore provided for, shall be invested in stocks of the United States or of the States, or some other safe stocks, or the same may be invested by the States having no State stocks," &c.

Mr. MORRILL. That is an amendment of section 4 of the act of 1862 allowing the States where the Legislatures may authorize it and engage that the fund shall yield not less than 5 per cent., to invest the fund in any manner they see fit.

Mr. McMILLAN. I should like to hear the Senator from Vermont state as briefly as he can the difference between the section as it is in the statute-book and the proposed amendment and the reason why this change is made.

Mr. HOAR. Before the Senator proceeds let me ask, does he propose to have the Legislatures guarantee the principal as well as the interest?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. Does the language employed do that?

Mr. MORRILL. The remainder of the bill, I think, does it. The State of Iowa, the State of California, and perhaps some other States have no State debt. They therefore cannot invest their funds so as to yield 5 per cent. either in United States stocks or their own State stocks, and in some places the fund has accumulated and is lying idle. The bill merely provides that States which shall authorize it and obligate that the fund shall yield 5 per cent., may make such investments as the State Legislatures may duly authorize.

Mr. BROWN. Does the Senator from Vermont mean that the State is to guarantee 5 per cent.?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROWN. The State permits the investment, but if it does not yield 5 per cent. she must make it good up to 5 per cent.?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have that part of the bill read which the Senator from Vermont thinks makes the State guarantee the principal of the fund when it has been invested at 5 per cent.

The Acting Secretary read the amendment of the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Or the same may be invested by the States having no State stocks in any other manner, after the Legislatures of such States shall have assented thereto and engaged that such funds shall yield not less than 5 per cent. upon the amount so invested.

Mr. HOAR. I think if the State is permitted at its election to invest these funds in any way it chooses, and is required at the same time to have the fund pay 5 per cent. (which is about double, I understand from the Treasury circular received this morning, the present rate of 4 per cent. bonds, which give an interest of from 2.64 to 2.85 at different days, but the lowest is 2.64) there is an insecurity of the principal.

Mr. MORRILL. If the Senator will look at the original act he will see that it reads:

And that the moneys so invested shall constitute a perpetual fund.

We do not alter that at all.

Mr. HOAR. Certainly if you wish to compel a State to become a guarantor of the security of this fund, it is better to say so in a few words, and not to raise the difficult legal question as to whether the enactment of 1862 that this shall constitute a perpetual fund, makes the State a guarantor when considered in connection with the enactment now proposed. I move therefore to add at the end of the proposed amendment the words:

And that the principal thereof shall forever remain unimpaired.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that the State ought to keep the fund at 5 per cent., but the question is whether those words are sufficient for that purpose.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Vermont thinks the bill is sufficient without the amendment I propose; but a guarantee that the principal shall ever remain good certainly is sufficient.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment of the Committee on Finance.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a further amendment reported by the Committee on Finance which will be stated.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In line 20, the committee propose to strike out the word "and" and to insert "provided;" so as to read:

Provided, That the moneys so invested or loaned shall constitute a perpetual fund, the capital of which shall remain forever undiminished (except so far as may be provided in section 5 of this act) and the interest of which shall be inviolably appropriated, by each State which may take and claim the benefit of this act, to the endowment, support, and maintenance of at least one college where the leading object shall be without excluding other scientific and classical studies, and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts, in such manner as the Legislatures of the States may respectively prescribe, in order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions in life.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORGAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2091) to compensate physicians for services rendered under an order of the United States court of the northern district of Alabama; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2092) for the relief of Major W. R. King; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SAWYER (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2093) to amend section 3709 of the Revised Statutes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. MAHONE asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2094) for the relief of J. Henry Rives; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HAWLEY asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2095) granting a pension to John G. Scherzer; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORT OF SURGEON-GENERAL OF THE NAVY.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Navy Department 1,500 copies of the report of the Surgeon-General of the Navy.

JESSIE BENTON FREMONT.

Mr. LOGAN. The bill (S. No. 2066) for the relief of Jessie Benton Fremont has been reported formally from the Committee on Military Affairs, but believing it to be a proper subject for investigation by the Judiciary Committee, as it relates to a land title, I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

CANNON FOR MONUMENTAL PURPOSES.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. The bill (H. R. No. 5377) to authorize the Secretary of War to deliver certain cannon to the Saratoga Monument Association, to the Grand Army of the Republic post at Westminster, Massachusetts, and to the Danville Light Battery A, Illinois National Guard, Danville, Illinois, was reported adversely from the Committee on Military Affairs, and postponed indefinitely. I ask that the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed be reconsidered in order that the bill may be recommitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed will be reconsidered. The Chair hears no objection. The bill will be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 1294) more effectually to suppress gaming in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 4460) to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for the United States district court, post-office, and other Government offices at the city of Williamsport, Pennsylvania;

A bill (H. R. No. 6236) to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 6405) to authorize the Court of Claims of the United States to ascertain the amount of damages sustained by Ann C. Carroll and Maria C. Fitzhugh, executrices of the estate of the late Daniel Carroll, deceased, by the regrading of the streets around square numbered 736, in the city of Washington;

A bill (H. R. No. 6406) to refund the assessments made under the administration of M. G. Emery, while mayor of Washington, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 6625) to authorize the Washington and Atlantic Railroad Company to extend a railroad into and within the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 6626) to authorize the Washington City and Point Lookout Railroad Company to extend a railroad into and within the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 6627) to authorize the establishment of a free public highway in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 6676) to more effectually punish house-breaking in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 6225) to authorize the changing of alley-ways in the city of Washington;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 224) accepting the offer of Dr. H. D. Cogswell, of San Francisco, California, to donate to the Government of the United States an ornamental drinking-fountain, to be erected at his cost in the city of Washington;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 247) to provide for the printing of public documents for binding and distribution to those entitled to receive them;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 156) to provide for the suspension of collection of special assessments in the District of Columbia until the improvements which said assessments were made to pay for are fully completed; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 240) for printing the report on the subject of tornadoes in the Western States.

The message also announced that the House had passed a resolution for the printing of 15,000 copies of the report of the Director of the Mint on the annual production of gold and silver in the United States; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate of May 9, 1882, that the copies of the Atlas of Colorado, heretofore ordered for the use of the two Houses of Congress and the Department of the Interior, be suitably bound by the Public Printer, for distribution in accordance with the resolution ordering the same.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. No. 789) to regulate the use of the Capitol grounds; and

A bill (S. No. 1158) to authorize the supreme court of the District of Columbia to appoint two additional criers.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 5004) to accept and ratify an agreement with the Shoshone and Bannock Indians for the sale of a portion of their reservation in Idaho Territory required for the use of the Utah and Northern Railroad, and to make the necessary appropriation for carrying out the same; and

A bill (H. R. No. 5996) for the relief of J. H. Merrill.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the appropriation bill indicated by him be now taken up, to the displacement of the Calendar under the Anthony rule. At the hour of two o'clock the Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business, when the appropriation bill can take its place by proper order. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 6244) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, if Senators will turn to the document called "Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 112," to be found on the desks of Senators, they will see the changes that the Senate Committee on Appropriations have proposed in this bill.

Now I ask unanimous consent that the amendments reported by the committee may be considered as they are reached in the reading of the bill, and that the bill be considered by paragraphs, so that we can get on rapidly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the course suggested.

Mr. BECK. Let us understand it. Are the committee amendments to be first considered, and after they are all considered the bill will be open generally to any Senator to go back to any paragraph?

Mr. ALLISON. That is my intention.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the understanding of the Chair. The bill will be read through paragraph by paragraph, and the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations to each paragraph considered as the paragraph is read.

The Acting Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "legislative," in the appropriations for the "Senate," in line 15, after the word "Senate," to strike out "one hundred and eighty-one thousand eight hundred and seventy-five dollars and two" and insert "two hundred and eighteen thousand nine hundred and seventy-two dollars and thirty-two;" so as to read:

For compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others receiving an annual salary in the service of the Senate, $218,972.32, namely.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 23, to increase the item for "hire of horse and wagon for the Secretary's office" from $600 to $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 24, after the word "clerk," to insert "and financial clerk at;" and in line 25, after the word "dollars," to insert "each;" so as to read:

Chief clerk and financial clerk at $3,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 26, after the word "and," where it occurs the second time, to strike out "financial" and insert "enrolling;" so as to read:

Principal executive clerk, principal clerk, minute and journal clerk, and enrolling clerk, $2,592 each.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I understand that the term "financial clerk" refers to Mr. Nixon. Why is he stricken out?

Mr. ALLISON. For this reason: we inserted Mr. Nixon on line 24, and therefore it is necessary to strike him out here.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Acting Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 28, after the word "each," to strike out "enrolling clerk, $2,250."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 30, to increase the item for the compensation of "librarian" from $2,000 to $2,220.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES. Allow me to inquire of the Senator from Iowa whether the matter in lines 29, 30, and 31 relates to the Librarian of Congress?

Mr. ALLISON. No; that relates to our own librarian for the Senate.

The Acting Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 32, to increase the item for the compensation of "six clerks" from $2,000 each to $2,220 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 33, to increase the item for the compensation of "five clerks" from $2,000 each to $2,100 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 34, to increase the item of appropriation for the compensation of "keeper of the stationery" from $1,800 to $2,102.40.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 37, to increase the item of appropriation for compensation of "assistant keeper of stationery" from $1,600 to $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 39, to increase the item of appropriation for the compensation of "two messengers" from $1,200 to $1,440 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 43, to increase the item of appropriation for the compensation of "secretary to the Vice-President" from $1,800 to $2,102.40.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 47, to increase the item of appropriation for the compensation of "messenger to the Vice-President's room, to be appointed by the Vice-President," from $1,200 to $1,440.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 56, to increase the item of appropriation for the compensation of "clerk of printing records" from $2,000 to $2,220.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 65, after the word "Library," to strike out "and;" in line 66, after the word "Census," to insert "clerk to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and clerk to the Committee on Public Lands;" and after the word "thousand," in line 67, to insert "two hundred and twenty;" so as to make the paragraph read:

For clerk to the Committee on Claims, clerk to the Committee on Commerce, clerk to the Committee on the Judiciary, clerk to the Committee on Private Land Claims, clerk to the Committee on Pensions, clerk to the Committee on Military Affairs, clerk to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, clerk to the Committee on the District of Columbia, clerk to the Committee on Naval Affairs, clerk to the Joint Committee on the Library, clerk to the Committee on the Census, clerk to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and clerk to the Committee on Public Lands, at $2,220 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 68, to insert:

For assistant clerk to the Committee on Pensions under resolution of the Senate of January 30, 1882, $1,440.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 72, to increase the item of appropriation for compensation of "telegraph operator" from $720 to $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 73, to insert:

For telephone operator, $720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 77, to increase the item of appropriation for compensation of "Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper" from $4,000 to $4,320.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 78, to increase the item for compensation of "clerk to Sergeant-at-Arms" from $1,200 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 79, to increase the item of appropriation for compensation of "assistant doorkeeper" from $2,000 to $2,592.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 80, to increase the item of appropriation for compensation of "acting assistant doorkeeper" from $2,000 to $2,592.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 82, to increase the appropriation for compensation of "three messengers acting as assistant doorkeepers" from $1,200 each to $1,800 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I understand from all these items that there has been an increase by our Committee on Appropriations. I do not object if it is necessary, but I think it is proper there should be some explanation as to why these alterations are made in the House bill. They may be proper, but I do not understand them.

Mr. ALLISON. I will state to the Senator from Delaware that the Senate Committee on Appropriations have simply provided for the salaries that are now paid to the several employés of the Senate, with two or three exceptions, where we have increased the compensation.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Then the bill came from the House without the proper allowance?

Mr. ALLISON. The bill came from the House with a complete readjustment of the salaries of the Senate employés, and the Senate Committee on Appropriations simply adhere to the salaries that are paid now, with two or three exceptions.

Mr. PLATT. I was not in when the bill was taken up. If it is neglected at this time, will it be in order when the bill has been read through to move an addition to the assistant postmaster's salary?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Amendments will be in order after the committee's amendments are disposed of.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 86, to increase the item of appropriation for compensation of "assistant postmaster and mail-carrier" from $2,000 to $2,088.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 86, before the word "mail-carriers," to strike out "four" and insert "five;" so as to read:

Five mail-carriers, at $1,200 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 89, to increase the item of appropriation for compensation of "superintendent of the document-room" from $2,000 to $2,160.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 91, after the word "each," to insert:

One clerk to the superintendent of the document room, under resolution of the Senate of December 21, 1881, $1,440.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 96, to increase the appropriation for compensation of "superintendent of the folding-room" from $2,000 to $2,160.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 99, before the word "messengers," to strike out "fourteen" and insert "twenty-four;" and after the word "thousand," in the same line, to strike out "two hundred" and insert "four hundred and forty;" so as to read:

Twenty-four messengers at $1,440 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "each," in line 100, to strike out "ten messengers, at $1,000 each."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 103, to increase the appropriation for compensation of "messenger to the Committee on Appropriations, to be appointed by the committee," from $1,000 to $1,440.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out "two hundred," in line 106, and insert "four hundred and forty;" so as to read: "one thousand four hundred and forty dollars;" that is, for the messenger to the Official Reporter's room, placing him on a par with the other messengers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 106, to insert:

For seven messengers during the session, at the rate of $1,440 per annum, for the following committees of the Senate, namely: Finance, Post-Offices and Post-Roads, Pensions, Claims, District of Columbia, Judiciary, and Engrossed Bills, $3,370.50.

Mr. FERRY. Before that amendment is concurred in, I send to the desk an amendment to the amendment, because if it is not made now it cannot be made again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan probably was not in when the bill was taken up.

Mr. FERRY. I was in; but if the Senate concurs in the amendment of the committee it shuts out any amendment, and while that is pending I have a right to amend it.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan is right. The amendment to the amendment will be read for information.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In line 107 it is proposed to strike out the words "during the session," and in lines 112 and 113 to strike out "$3,370.50" and insert "$10,080."

Mr. FERRY. I see that by the committee's amendment the pay of the seven messengers is provided for who were authorized in the early part of the session, in February last, I think, but they are proposed to be paid only for the session, while the other messengers, some twenty-four in number, on line 99, have $1,440 each per annum; and then, I notice in lines 102, and 103 that there is a messenger for the Committee on Appropriations provided for also at an annual salary of $1,440.

My object in the amendment is simply to put these seven new messengers, who have equally arduous duties, on the same basis with the other messengers here, as they are liable to be detailed just as the messenger of the Appropriations Committee by the Sergeant-at-Arms. I understand the Sergeant-at-Arms made a written communication to the committee asking to have this done. By some oversight, or perhaps owing to a press of labor, the committee have not done it, and I am here to offer the amendment, hoping that the committee will concur, or at least that the Senate will concur in placing these messengers on the same basis as the other messengers of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. It was neither an oversight nor a pressure of labor that suggested the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations. When these seven messengers were appointed the report of the Committee on Contingent Expenses proposed that they should be annual messengers, but after considerable discussion and debate in the Senate the Senate decided to appoint these messengers for the session only, and the Committee on Appropriations felt bound by the decision of the Senate, and they believe that the efficiency of the working force of the Senate will not be impaired if this amendment is allowed to stand as reported by the committee.

Mr. FERRY. I am reminded by the remarks of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who has this bill in charge, of the occurrence that took place when this matter was pending. I think it was the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] who reported the resolution providing for placing them on the same basis with the other messengers of the Senate for annual pay. I think it was the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM,] the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, who moved the amendment, thinking that the Senate would not concur—more that than any thing else; he is here present now, and perhaps after his experience, knowing the duties these messengers perform, he will concur with my amendment to place these messengers on the same basis that the other messengers are.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan if his amendment will have the effect of making these seven special messengers annual messengers, with an annual salary?

Mr. FERRY. That is my object, placing them on the same basis with the twenty-four in the paragraph above.

Mr. HARRIS. Changing the rule that the Senate adopted in originally authorizing their appointment.

Mr. FERRY. That is true. That was simply authorizing it at the time, and I remind the Senator from Tennessee that the Senator from Connecticut, who reported the resolution, placed them on the annual basis, but it was on the amendment, I think, of the Senator from Minnesota that the Senate changed them to session messengers, and the Senator from Connecticut, I believe, yielded. He is here and can speak for himself; but, as I believe, the way in which the resolution was introduced in the Senate originally it placed them where my amendment proposes to put them now.

Mr. HARRIS. Yes; but the order of the Senate was to make them special messengers for the session only.

Mr. FERRY. If the Senator will allow me, there is no discrimination whatever. They are under the control of the Sergeant-at-Arms. There is no more discrimination in relation to them than the twenty-four provided for above in lines 99 and 100. They are liable to be detailed as well as the others, and, if so, compelled to remain here and perform duties during the year. Certainly they are entitled to $1,440 as well as the twenty-four permanent messengers of the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, it will be observed that this bill is for the compensation of officers, clerks, &c., for next year, when the Senate will be in session probably only three months. Now it is proposed by the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to pay the additional messengers that the Senate ordered for a special service and during the session only, for twelve months, when they will be occupied only three months unless there should be a special session.

Mr. FERRY. Why then does the Committee on Appropriations propose to pay a like messenger for that committee, perhaps having more work than the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and yet the latter committee is continually occupied during the session? If this messenger to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads ends his service when the session ends, so also does the messenger to the Committee on Appropriations. That committee has a messenger who is paid $1,440 a year.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The messenger at the door of the Committee on Appropriations has been there and paid annually as long as the Senator and I have been here, I expect. These seven messengers are special messengers in addition to the regular number authorized by the Senate during this session and after debate, to be paid during the session only, by a vote of the Senate, I believe.

As I observed, this bill provides the salaries for the next fiscal year, when the session of the Senate will last three months; yet as to these new messengers that were intended for special service during the session only, the Senator from Michigan proposes now to pay them for twelve months' work when only three months' service is to be performed. That is the whole question as I understand it; and the proposition is against a direct vote of the Senate at the time the special messengers were authorized to be employed. The Committee on Appropriations would have violated the order of the Senate if they had reported anything else than what is now in the bill.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator from West Virginia has made my argument. He says that the messenger for the Committee on Appropriations has been there since the Senator and myself have been in the Senate. That is true; that is simply priority of time. He performs no more duties than the messenger for the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, or the messengers for other committees here. If the Senate have neglected to do their duty hitherto, that is no reason why they should not do their duty from now henceforth.

The argument applies as well to the messenger of the Committee on Appropriations that the next session will last but three months and he gets paid for the whole year. I am not attempting to lessen the salary of the messenger of the Committee on Appropriations. I think any competent man employed for such service, who should be familiar with all the departments of this building and know where to get papers and books, should be paid at least $1,440 a year. I am only arguing that other committees have as much labor, almost, as the Committee on Appropriations; I know they have hardly as much as that committee; it has more labor than any other. I grant that; but a messenger must remain all the time; he must be active in attending around the room of the committee, as well the Committee on Claims, as well the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, as well the Committee on the Judiciary, as well all the other committees named here of the seven. If the Committee on Appropriations want their messenger paid that much—and he should have it, and I am ready to vote it, and I will vote against reducing his pay—the messengers of the other committees should be paid alike. I cannot see any difference; and I thank the Senator from West Virginia for making my argument. He has put it better than I could.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, this is a very small matter. When the movement was first originated here I believe the amendment making this merely an appointment for the session was made at my own suggestion to the mover of the resolution. Subsequently upon inquiring of the Sergeant-at-Arms I found that it was his opinion that the efficiency of his staff would be promoted if they were made permanent. It is only a question of economy. It strikes me that the Sergeant-at-Arms is correct in asserting that he needs these men permanently. If he obtains them permanently it will diminish the number of temporary employés during the recess.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. May I ask my friend from Vermont a question?

Mr. MORRILL. I have said all I desired to say upon the subject. I rather think that the Sergeant-at-Arms understands his duties here and knows what it is best for us to provide for. I shall vote in favor of making these permanent messengers.

Mr. GARLAND. I should like to hear the amendment of the Senator from Michigan read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The Acting Secretary read the amendment of Mr. FERRY to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GARLAND. I think that amendment is eminently proper, because taking these committees, the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, on Finance, on Pensions, on Claims, on the District of Columbia, on the Judiciary, and on Engrossed Bills, I do not know any of the committees that have any more to do than those seven committees; and as a matter of fact ever since I have been in the Senate the messenger to the Committee on the Judiciary has been permanent. I have not heard any good reason given why he should now be limited in his pay simply to the session. That committee has about as much work as any other committee in the Senate, I believe.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. There is no proposition to change him.

Mr. GARLAND. He gets his pay only during the session by the amendment of the committee.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. There are twenty-four messengers who get annual pay, and the committees the Senator speaks of had messengers before these special messengers were appointed. These seven are new entirely, in addition to what the Senate has heretofore had at any time.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator will notice that the messenger of the Judiciary Committee is named here as one of those paid during the session.

Mr. GARLAND. That is the way I read it. I may misunderstand it.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator from Arkansas is correct.

Mr. GARLAND. I think I am. Now, the point is this: here is the messenger of the Committee on the Judiciary, under the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to be limited in his pay to the session. He never has been so limited heretofore, within my knowledge; and I think the theory of a salaried clerk ought to carry with it the theory of a salaried messenger.

Mr. MORGAN. I will say to the Senator from Arkansas that this only refers to the supernumerary messengers, who were put in under the resolution providing for seven. The regular messenger to the Judiciary Committee is included in the twenty-four messengers, and he draws his annual salary.

Mr. GARLAND. I want to understand if the Senator from Alabama is correct. We have a messenger there who has been messenger to the Committee on the Judiciary for years. Does he get permanent pay? That is what I wish to learn.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that will depend entirely on the permanency of the messengers. Of course the Judiciary Committee had, as the Senator from Arkansas says, formerly an annual messenger; but one of these seven messengers, it seems, was assigned to the Judiciary Committee room; and of course if the provision as it stands now in the bill as reported shall pass, the messenger to the Judiciary Committee room will be a messenger for the session.

Mr. GARLAND. Then I support the amendment of the Senator from Michigan. I think it is certainly correct.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say in addition that it is perfectly in the power of the Sergeant-at-Arms to so arrange his messengers as to assign an annual messenger to the Judiciary Committee room, if he chooses.

Mr. FERRY. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if it is designated in the bill that there shall be a messenger for the Judiciary Committee, as for the Committee on Finance or the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, whether the Sergeant-at-Arms would have the right to designate some other when it is stipulated here precisely that for those committees the messengers shall only have pay during the session. I think the Senator from Iowa is not correct on that point.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I think perhaps that I can explain this amendment, having originally, as acting chairman of the Committee on Contingent Expenses, reported the resolution providing for these seven additional messengers.

If this amendment is not adopted in this bill these seven messengers will not exist. The former action of the Senate appointed seven additional messengers for this session. The Committee on Appropriations now propose to continue these seven additional messengers for the next session and to limit their pay to the session only.

When the resolution was reported by the Committee on Contingent Expenses we could see no reason whatever, if seven additional messengers were needed in the Senate, why they should not have the same pay that the other messengers had had, and I apprehend it is impossible for any Senator to state a reason why, if these messengers are needed, they should not be paid as other messengers are; but objection was made, and rather than not get them at all the amendment was agreed to that they should only be appointed for the session of Congress. I think it was said then that when we came to the general appropriation bill the matter could be considered and settled definitely as to what the future position of these messengers should be. Now, there is not a particle of question but what we need these seven messengers just as much as we need the twenty-four other messengers, if that is the number. They perform precisely the same duties, except that they are assigned to special committees, when the others are assigned to no committees at all. They are assigned to important committees. They are, in fact, the most important messengers in the Senate and in the pay of the Senate. It seems to me there is no reason why they should not be paid the same as the other messengers are.

Mr. BECK. My principal object in rising is to ask the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Iowa to postpone this amendment without prejudice until the exact facts can be ascertained as to what is done with the twenty-five messengers employed annually and what is the necessity for the addition of seven during the period when there is no session of the Senate; and perhaps we shall reach a result more intelligently after further inquiry of the Sergeant-at-Arms while the bill is going on. But I desire, now that I am up, to say that we have had a struggle for years with the House of Representatives, and we have generally maintained the right of the Senate to designate the number of its own messengers and its own clerks, and its own organization; but if we go on from year to year, as we are going on, adding now an annual clerk for every committee, as we soon shall have, when some of the committees hardly ever meet, and increasing the annual messengers from twenty-five to thirty-two, and keep on at the rate we are going, there will be very serious ground to doubt whether the Senate can properly maintain itself in a controversy with the other House.

Mr. FARLEY. Allow me to ask a question.

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. FARLEY. What necessity is there for twenty-five annual messengers during the time when there is no session of Congress?

Mr. BECK. I am a member of the Committee on Appropriations, of which I know a good deal. The clerk of that committee and the messenger of that committee do not leave this Capitol on an average of three weeks out of the fifty-two weeks of the year.

Mr. FARLEY. The question I asked was, what use is there for a messenger when Congress is not in session?

Mr. BECK. I will explain as far as I can. Take the Committee on Appropriations. The very moment Congress adjourns it becomes the duty of the clerk of that committee, with the aid of the messenger of that committee, to obtain information from every Department of this Government relative to the appropriations they are about to ask and which we are to act upon next winter; and not only that but he has to go to the War Department, the Navy Department, the Interior Department, the Post-Office Department, and the messenger has to go to work at once.

Mr. FARLEY. That committee has two clerks.

Mr BECK. Yes, we have two clerks, and we have now another one working a good part of the time, and we ought to have more during part of the session, and the very moment the session is over we have no further use for him; but we have use for the messenger there to get the information, and when we come back here at the beginning of the next session we expect our clerk and messenger to have the work cut out and prepared for us. We are obliged to know every item of the bills, and if we cannot do that we are not fit for our work; and if we have not the means of getting information we cannot prepare it in time.

There are committees that are absolutely doing nothing, and there are other committees at work all the time. I suppose there are a certain number of men who must be kept here for the purpose of attending to them, and we have twenty-five messengers without these seven. Seven were added, and added by a vote of the Senate temporarily. It was supposed they would be needed while the Senate was in session. It was supposed if they were not needed they could be dropped at the end of the session, and the twenty-five regular messengers would be ample for the service needed. One of those twenty-five can be a permanent messenger for the Committee on the Judiciary. If this amendment is passed over for an hour, I have no doubt the Sergeant-at-Arms will say so; and if the committee has to meet and obtain information all the time, and if it has not an annual messenger, it ought to have one. Take one committee to which I belong, the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard. True it is we have had several important meetings, but the moment that committee closes its work it is at an end until December. I suppose there are half a dozen other committees of the same sort, where the messenger has no work after the session, and they do not need him while the Senate is not in session, because there is no work for him to do.

These seven that were added to the twenty-five may be very useful now, but they are absolutely useless the moment Congress adjourns. The Sergeant-at-Arms, I have no doubt, will inform the committee if you ask him, and you can do it in the course of an hour, that he does employ permanently a man for the Committee on Finance, and one for the Committee on the Judiciary, and one for the Committee on Appropriations, one for the important committees that have to work during the recess, but certain extra ones that were employed outside of the twenty-five messengers we now have are allowed to go without pay until the Senate meets again. It is for that reason that I desire a little further information before a vote is taken on this question.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, it is evident that the bill as reported does great injustice to the messengers of seven of the most important committees of this body. It discriminates against those messengers in favor of every other messenger employed by the Sergeant-at-Arms. The House only allowed the Senate fourteen annual messengers; our Committee on Appropriations have increased that allowance to twenty-four messengers, and they are all at annual salaries.

Mr. ALLISON. Allow me to say a word. The committee have not increased it. The present force of messengers is twenty-four, exclusive of these seven.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not criticise that. I say no doubt upon proper representations the old number was continued at twenty-four, but it is manifest that as the bill now stands it discriminates against the seven messengers who by common consent would be called the most important in the body, with the probable exception of the messenger to the Committee on Appropriations. The messenger of the Committee on Appropriations is very properly made a permanent messenger. Why? Because the duties are of a character that requires a permanent officer, an intelligent man, who can go to any Department of the Government and get the necessary information. That intelligence can only be had from a man of experience, and therefore I think the messenger of the Committee on Appropriations ought to be an intelligent, experienced man. But ought it not to be so with the messenger of the Committee on Claims, who has to go to all the different Departments of the Government; so with the Committee on Finance; so with the Judiciary Committee; so with the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads? These are confidential messengers; they ought to be permanent. As to the number that ought to be employed I would follow very cheerfully the wishes of the Committee on Appropriations, but I say the messengers of these several important committees ought to be permanent officers. If they are to be turned out in the middle of July to roam about without pay until next December with the prospect that they will abandon such an uncertain employment and go into other business, you compel these important committees to get an inexperienced man totally unfitted for the service, to be employed for three months, to be discharged again without pay. It seems to me that when Congress adopted the principle of an annual salary for its members it ought to adopt the same principle and provide for annual clerks and annual messengers, because the experience acquired by these clerks and messengers is even more important than the experience acquired by a Senator. Take a conspicuous man in private life in the States and bring him here and he may make a good Senator, but such a man would not make a good messenger or a good clerk. To be such, a man must be familiar with the technical duties of his office.

I say, therefore, that the messengers employed by these seven committees that are especially prominent in this body or in any legislative body ought to be permanent officials, and if there must be a reduction in the total number it ought to be a reduction of the twenty-four; that ought to be reduced from twenty-four down to the proper number, and the seven messengers for the Committees on Finance, Post-Offices and Post-Roads, Pensions, Claims, the District of Columbia, the Judiciary, and Engrossed Bills ought to be retained. With the exception of the Committee on Engrossed Bills, all these committees are certainly committees that require a messenger of intelligence and capacity. I do not know any special reason why the Committee on Engrossed Bills should have a permanent messenger, but I do not propose to discriminate against it.

I shall vote for the proposition made by the Senator from Michigan, to put these messengers on the same footing with the other messengers. If on the whole the Senate think that too many are provided for, let us reduce in the previous clause the number from twenty-four to seventeen, which would keep up the old numbers.

Mr. BECK. I have believed that the twenty-five messengers now employed annually will furnish a messenger to each important committee of the Senate and have a good many to spare.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator says twenty-five. Why do the committee propose twenty-four?

Mr. BECK. There are twenty-five there; twenty-four in one clause and one in the same paragraph further on. I believe this amendment of the Committee on Appropriations ought to be amended by striking out:

For the following committees of the Senate, namely: Finance, Post-Offices and Post-Roads, Pensions, Claims, District of Columbia, Judiciary, and Engrossed Bills.

And I shall move to so amend it; so that the paragraph will read:

For seven messengers during the session, at the rate of $1,440 per annum, $5,370.50.

And why those several committees were named in this paragraph as though they could not be supplied out of the twenty-five messengers already provided for, I am not prepared to say. There are not important committees enough, or certainly not more than enough to employ all the annual messengers. I do not believe the Committee on Privileges and Elections have any use for an annual messenger. I understand they have not met more than once or twice during the whole year, and I know of no use for a messenger there. I do not believe the Committee on Manufactures has any use for a permanent messenger; the Committee on Agriculture, I think, very clearly has not. The Committee on Revolutionary Claims, I suppose, never does meet. The Committee on Education and Labor might very well dispense with an annual messenger; and so of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses; and the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard, I know, can do without one, and so on as to a number of others. If you strike out the unimportant committees, there are not twenty-five committees left that will pretend that they have any use for an annual messenger.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I do not wonder that the House of Representatives undertakes to cut down the allowance of messengers to the Senate. We are all the time increasing our complement of force here without any actual necessity, it seems to me, for as great an increase as we have made. We have now twenty-five messengers who hold their offices annually, and they receive under this bill $1,440 per year. During this session of the Senate seven additional messengers were added for the benefit of certain committees that are in a resolution introduced by the Senator from Connecticut. Those committees were Finance, Post-Offices and Post-Roads, Pensions, Claims, District of Columbia, Judiciary, and Engrossed Bills. Each of these committees had a regular messenger assigned to it out of the twenty-five, and was never without such a messenger. They had these messengers at the time this resolution was introduced and adopted, and this force of seven messengers was a merely supernumerary force, an additional force supposed to be made requisite by the necessities of the respective committees therein named.

Objection was made at the time by several Senators to the passage of that resolution on the ground that it was an unjustifiable extravagance. That resolution limited the appointment of these seven messengers to the session. Now it is proposed to make in this bill these seven messengers permanent, in addition to the twenty-five that we already have, making thirty-two messengers for the committees of this body to be made annual messengers, or messengers with annual salaries of $1,440 each per annum. That is the proposition. I object to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair begs leave to interrupt the Senator to state that the Judiciary Committee has had but one messenger, and the same messenger has been there all the time.

Mr. MORGAN. The Chair, I think, is mistaken, because the resolution added a messenger to the Judiciary Committee. That was the intention of the resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him a moment, I think I can explain the matter. Until this resolution passed this winter no committee of this body had a messenger especially assigned to it except the Committee on Appropriations. All the messengers were not only assigned to duty at the committee-rooms but they were also assigned to the doors of the Senate Chamber and galleries and in various ways performed other services aside from their duties to the committees to which they were assigned for duty during the meetings of the committees. This resolution contemplated that the seven committees named in it should have a messenger specially assigned to each. These special messengers have no other duties except to attend to the door and to the work of the committee to which they are assigned, while the twenty-four messengers that are provided for in the bill are not only obliged to look after the several committees but attend to the doors during the sessions, and they do various other business about the Capitol. The object of the resolution was to assign messengers to the committees named who would have no other employment. So the President of the Senate is right when he says that a messenger has always been assigned to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that messenger before this winter did other service around the Capitol in addition to his services at the committee.

Mr. MORGAN. What I meant to say was that all the leading standing committees of this body have had messengers assigned to them by the Sergeant-at-Arms, and they have never been for a moment of time without a messenger.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. If the Senator will allow me, I beg to suggest that statement is a little too broad. I know the mode of doing business in the Committee on Claims; the Senator was a member of that committee during several sessions, and he knows something about the mode of doing business and the amount of business before that committee. The Sergeant-at-Arms assigned a messenger to that committee. That messenger attended the room of the committee during the time that the Senate was not in session, but during the time that the Senate was in session he was withdrawn, necessarily withdrawn by the Sergeant-at-Arms and assigned to duty elsewhere.

The object of the resolution adopted by the Senate last winter was that each of the Senate committees named in that resolution should have a messenger assigned to it, and that that messenger should have no other duties. It has proved very advantageous, I know, to the Committee on Claims; an efficient gentleman was assigned to that committee and he has been constantly employed in the service of the committee since that time. Hardly a day has passed that he has not gone to one or more of the Departments for the purpose of obtaining information that it was necessary that the committee should have in order to determine upon claims before it.

If the resolution of last winter had not been adopted, he would not have been able to go to the Departments and obtain this information, neither would it be possible for the clerk of that committee to go. The room of the Committee on Claims is almost as public as the office of a justice of the peace in this city. There are perhaps a thousand claims pending before it, and every day, and during all hours of the day, the claimants, their attorneys and friends are coming to that room for the purpose of obtaining information, and it is necessary that the door of the room should be kept open from nine o'clock in the morning until the Senate adjourns in the afternoon. If we did not have this special messenger the clerk would be compelled to remain constantly in the room of the committee, and we should have no person to send for information to the Departments, and in that way the committee would be very much embarrassed.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I was two years ago a member of that committee, before this last resolution was adopted appointing a special messenger for that committee, and I now for the first time have heard any complaint that that committee did not have quite enough of service rendered by its clerk and by the messenger that was assigned to it by the Sergeant-at-Arms; and so it is in respect of all of these other committees unless it may be the Committee on Appropriations which has a permanent messenger set apart by law. These twenty-four messengers were found to be amply sufficient until this session of Congress to discharge all the duties that were required to be performed by messengers for all the committees of this body. These seven messengers were not had for the purpose of serving the convenience of the committees, but for the purpose of serving the convenience of the chairmen of the committees. The rule itself was changed; the rule of appointment was changed. The Sergeant-at-Arms was required to appoint on the recommendation of the chairman of the committee, and the sole object of it was to provide for the chairmen of the various committees an additional power of appointment in this body. The Sergeant-at-Arms was a Democrat, or so called.

Mr. FERRY. I think the Senator is mistaken. The proposition was that they be appointed at the instance of the committee. I can speak for the one appointed for the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, that all the members of that committee were required to join in the request for the messenger. He was not appointed by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MORGAN. The power of appointment had to be transferred to the gentlemen who represented what is called the majority of this body. That was the whole object of the resolution. The Sergeant-at-Arms was compelled to obey what they said to him, compelled to put on such persons as they selected. That was for the convenience of the chairmen of the committees more than for the convenience of this body. It was a mere addition of seven to the twenty-five, making thirty-two persons who were to be appointed merely for the convenience of gentlemen who hold chairmanships of committees. That is not just to the minority. The honorable Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] has tried to relieve against that by putting it in the power of Senators here to employ clerks. I do not know that one Senator has more to do than another, according to his official duty, but there are many men here who do not occupy the position of chairmen of committees who do more work in this body than some men who do occupy the position of chairmen of committees. The Senate denies to us the right to have a clerk. That resolution was pressed on the attention of this body, and it was refused.

The resolution which the honorable Senator from Connecticut introduced was intended for an alleged temporary emergency in this body. By the terms of the resolution these offices were to expire with this session of the Senate. Now, this bill comes forward and makes them permanent, so that during the entire period of the next fiscal year we shall have seven additional messengers in this body. Mr. President, the truth is that they have got nothing to do in this body but to hold open the doors. There never was a body so overrun with supernumeraries as the Senate. You can scarcely stir about the corridors of the building sometimes lest you should run against employés of this body, who are here for nothing in the world but to adorn the corridors and to lean against the doors.

The Senator from Ohio thinks they ought to be a very talented set of men. I think they should be, to find some occupation, to find some way to amuse themselves in the sweet hours of idleness that they pass in the Senate. He thinks there are some men on this floor who are qualified to be Senators who would not make good messengers; they have not got the ability! That is a strange conclusion to come to, Mr. President, and I think we had better have a committee appointed to select the talented gentlemen who are to hold up the doorposts.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senator did not so understand me. I do not think either he or I would be good messengers. I know I would not be, and I think he would not be; it requires activity and also intelligence.

Mr. MORGAN. If it only requires activity, I am sure I should make a very fine one.

Mr. SHERMAN. I certainly would not want to perform the duties of messenger.

Mr. MORGAN. What these gentlemen want, to come down to the real facts of the case, is a convenient body servant, a man who will wait upon them in a very submissive, quiet, and excellent way. It is not for the public service, it is for private service that we are voting these messengers, and for the accommodation of a few gentlemen.

This clamor for additional force here broke out very suddenly and very recently. It was never dreamed of until a very recent date, and now it is to be made permanent. I hope the Senate will strike out the entire proposition, provide for the pay of the seven messengers for the present session, and then let the matter drop, and we can see at the next session of Congress whether we need an addition to the force of twenty-five messengers that we have here already. There may be something misleading in the language of the latter part of this amendment, and I intended to offer the same amendment that the Senator from Kentucky has suggested, to strike out the words "for the following committees," and down to the word "bills," so that the whole of the thirty-one or thirty-two messengers, if we shall have thirty-one or thirty-two messengers here, may stand upon the same footing, and that the Sergeant-at-Arms may assign them, as he has done heretofore, as the convenience of the Senate has required.

Mr. BECK. I think we ought to have a little further time to look over these committees that desire a man to wait upon them. Here is one that I think can get along without a man during the recess—the Committee to examine the several branches of the Civil Service, Mr. SAWYER chairman, and three or four other Senators on the committee. Then there is the committee "to make provision for taking the Tenth Census and ascertaining the results thereof." That census, I think, has been taken, and it is about time its results were published so that we should have the benefit of them. I do not know that a messenger is needed to hang about that door any longer. Then we have a committee "to inquire into all claims of citizens of the United States against the Government of Nicaragua." My friend from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] is chairman. I think he can get along without a messenger during the recess of the Senate. I do not see any use for it at all except to make a place. Then there is the committee "to investigate the condition of the Potomac River front of Washington." That has been going on for a good while, and if they have investigated anything I do not know it. I am no wiser than I was when they began to investigate. There is a committee "on the bill (S. No. 307) to provide that the principal officers of each of the Executive Departments may occupy seats on the floor of the Senate and House of Representatives." I think they can get along without a messenger waiting on them during the recess. There is a committee "on woman suffrage." We have had a report from the distinguished Senator from New York, [Mr. LAPHAM,] the chairman. I do not think he cares about a messenger hanging around that door while he is looking into that question.

Then there is a committee "on honoring the memory of the late James A. Garfield," of which the Senator from Ohio is chairman. We can honor the memory of the late President, I think, without a messenger to hang around the door of that committee. There are a number of others that I think may as well be dispensed with.

Mr. LAPHAM. I remind the Senator from Kentucky that there has been no messenger to my committee.

Mr. BECK. I am very glad to hear that there has not been one. I supposed the Senator was well enough waited upon by the distinguished ladies. [Laughter.] They could take care of him without having a messenger to guard the door. [Laughter.]

In other words, twenty-five annual messengers are obviously enough, and the seven attached by the vote of the Senate ought to stand as they were ordered by the Senate, and the Committee on Appropriations have gone quite as far as they ought; indeed, they have done just what they ought to do in reporting under the resolution of the Senate the seven extra ones to remain during the session if the Senate see fit.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I do not think I am in harmony with this annual outbreak in favor of economy at the expense of the organization of this body. Whenever I rise to high public position it will not be by electioneering in that direction. In fact, I have no respect for the constant recurrence of this demand to economize the public service at the expense of the most laborious and the poorest paid of all the employés of the Government. Now, Mr. President, there is just one of two things about this: these messengers ought to be discharged and not employed at all, or they ought to be employed permanently. Whether there are too many of them or not I do not know, nor do I pretend to speak; but I do know that when men are induced to come here for employment it should not last merely a part of the year. When in the midst of the summer as now we adjourn, these men are thrown out of employment and they have nowhere to turn. We might as well look the matter square in the face and be honest with ourselves. These men have no place to obtain employment; their families are dependent on their income; and it is not worth while for us to attempt to deceive ourselves that possibly they may have something else to do, that they can go to work at something else when the session closes. It is not true, and I am for meeting this thing in a frank and square way. Either discharge supernumeraries who have no work to do, or pay them, as we are paid ourselves, the year round. They have no other means of support and no other employment.

Mr. President, I do not criticise the remarks of my accomplished friend from Alabama, and I do not think he sympathizes with them himself. I think the employés of the Senate do a great deal more than lean against the door-posts. I think they are equal in intelligence, capacity, and industry to the employés in any other branch of the Government. They should be treated with respect, for they treat us with respect; and I, for one, intend to vote on the score of liberality, as well as justice, in their behalf, knowing perfectly well that they will not get too much, in fact not enough.

I have said this much to indicate my purpose. I shall vote with the Senator from Michigan upon this subject, believing that it is right and wise to do so.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I have no sympathy with the argument which does not recognize the two Houses of Congress as the repositories of the legislative power of fifty millions of people, nor with the argument which assumes that Senators and members of Congress come here equipped with all the information and all the agencies to act upon the important questions which come before them. Sir, it is not true. These bodies ought to be organized, and when the judgment of the Senate has been pronounced upon the fact that a committee should exist, that committee ought to be organized with a permanent clerk and with a messenger to serve its convenience. If there are too many, this body is responsible for that error and should correct it; and the Committee on Appropriations carries but little weight with it if in a recommendation as to the employés of the Senate it is not to be respected.

Why, sir, this Government ought to be regarded as a government fully equipped for the performance of its duties at any time. Who can tell when these two Houses may be convened by the proper authority for the purpose of discharging their constitutional duties? And to say that the poor men who are employed here shall be turned adrift because there may be one or two too many, or to advance the idea that, because these Committees upon Woman Suffrage or upon the Potomac River front may have little for messengers to do, therefore the messengers are merely to wait upon the chairmen of such committees, is not presenting the question correctly.

Whenever this body recommend the appointment of a committee, and the Committee on Appropriations recommend an appropriation of money for the payment of the officers of that committee, I shall cheerfully vote for it. That much respect is due, I think, to a committee of this body.

Mr. BECK. I do not care about saying anything more, except this: I admit that the Senator from Florida and every man who comes to the Senate is not fully equipped with an absolute knowledge of all the questions we are to consider. If he was, it would not be necessary for myself and the Senator from Florida to make so many speeches as we have to do to enlighten this body.

Mr. CALL. The Senator from Kentucky; not the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Florida has been heard once or twice on the floor since I have been here, according to my recollection. [Laughter.] The Committee on Appropriations is trying to carry out the law and all that the Senator said ought to be carried out and all that is necessary to be carried out; but it is now proposed to pay men by the year for only working three months, against the vote of the Senate and against the recommendation of the committee; and it is that that I protest against.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FERRY called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. MAXEY. I want to say a few words in regard to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan. I know personally the work of the Post-Office Committee, which has been mentioned by the chairman. During something more than seven years that I have been a member of that committee I do not remember a single instance where that committee failed to hold its weekly sessions, and very frequently much more often than once a week. My point in voting for a proper messenger for that committee is that it requires an intelligent, qualified man, prepared to go to any of the various branches of the Post-Office Department and get that information which we are constantly in need of in the investigation of cases that are submitted by the Senate to the committee for investigation; and I want a good man, and I believe we can get a better man at the price fixed here of $1,440 than we shall get by taking a man that is employed only during the session. It is in order to get experienced, educated talent, adapted to the business of the committee, and therefore the business of the country, that I believe in giving a competent salary to a competent man.

Mr. BECK. I only desire to say, before the vote is taken on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan to make each of these seven extra messengers, in addition to the twenty-five we now have, an annual messenger, that if it is voted down I shall move to strike out of the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations the words "for the following committees of the Senate, namely: Finance, Post-Offices and Post-Roads, Pensions, Claims, District of Columbia, Judiciary, and Engrossed Bills;" leaving the seven special messengers to be paid during the sessions; striking out these words in order that the Sergeant-at-Arms may assign the twenty-five annual messengers we now have among the important committees, of which the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads is one, and the Finance another, and the Judiciary another, and so through the committees named. I would go further and say——

Mr. MAXEY. Will the Senator permit me to ask, is there any more reason why the Appropriations Committee should select its messenger than the Post-Office Committee should select its messenger, when it needs a messenger with certain qualifications? Yet this bill provides that the Committee on Appropriations shall select a messenger.

Mr. BECK. That has been the law for years, and we do not propose to change the law. We do not regard the Committee on Appropriations as a committee whose duty it is to change the law as they find it. Finding that law existing for years, and no complaint against it, we allowed it to remain; but I agree that these words ought to be stricken out of this amendment, and that the Sergeant-at-Arms ought to be required to assign the twenty-five annual messengers we have in such a way as to promote the public interest. I will say further, that if the Sergeant-at-Arms, in the exercise of his duty of assigning the twenty-five annual messengers we now have, were to leave out the Committees on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, Pensions, and Judiciary, and assign them to half a dozen other committees I could name, on Woman Suffrage, Honoring the Memory of the late President, Mines and Mining, Revolutionary Claims, Agriculture, Manufactures, the Sergeant-at-Arms would not be fit to occupy the place he occupies, and I would vote for his removal as a man wholly unfit to hold the position. But I have a perfect assurance that out of the twenty-five men we give him he will assign men from the twenty-five to the important committees, and will give the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads one, the Committee on the Judiciary one, and each of the important committees who ought to have a messenger one; and if this amendment is voted down, I shall move to strike out the words naming the particular committees that never ought to have been named in the resolution or in the bill, and leave it to the Sergeant-at-Arms, on his responsibility, to assign the twenty-five where they ought to be assigned.

Mr. FERRY. I have full confidence in the present Sergeant-at-Arms. I do not believe that he would formally invite the attention of the Committee on Appropriations to the necessity of making these permanent messengers unless he felt that the service demanded them.

Now, there is one point here which has not been mentioned in the service of messengers, but my colleague on the committee [Mr. MAXEY] broached it. The fact that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and also the Committee on Finance have often suffered and have not made extraordinary complaint, is no reason why they should not be provided for when the necessity occurs. How often during the sessions of committees it is necessary to send for books and papers while the clerk of the committee is reading papers before the committee; and before we had a messenger we were compelled to send the clerk and arrest the proceedings of the committee. Now, as well stated by my colleague on the committee, we need a man whose whole attention is devoted to the interests of the committee, who knows all about its work, who is not to be detailed to these galleries when twelve o'clock arrives, who is not one messenger to-day and another the next day, and the Committee on Appropriations know that more than any other committee; and that is the reason why they set the example and asked that there should be a permanent messenger for them, and have so employed one. Now they say that we should not follow their example. I propose by my amendment to follow that example; and when this committee, so laborious, so attentive, so economical, set us such an example, I think we are very safe in following it.

I want to emphasize what has been said here, that these men, if they are fit for their places, ought to be paid a salary during the year; and I was glad to hear one Senator say that if Senators had a yearly salary when they were compelled to remain here only during the session, and could go home during the interim, the humble men who do the duties of committee messengers are entitled to the same kind of salary. Every day from the House to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads come inquiries in regard to post-routes, and there is not a day occurring here but what Senators are appealing to different committees for information, caused by their correspondence or otherwise, and they are compelled to send these inquiries or go themselves, or snap first for a page and then for a messenger to get the information. If you are left with a clerk alone, that clerk must leave his duties; he is not laboring only during the sessions of the committee in the morning hours but during the whole day, preparing matter, looking up facts to be ready for the next meeting, whether special or otherwise. So we want a man who knows something of the work. The clerk of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads sends its messenger whenever he finds occasion, whether to the Post-Office Department or to the libraries in the Capitol. He could not do it all himself. If you send down to the committee-room you may find it locked, and that must be the consequence if the clerk has to work without a messenger. If you have to send the clerk on all these errands you will find complaint. We have suffered from this, and we asked the Sergeant-at-Arms to provide us with a messenger that was competent and should remain there all the time, and I am thankful to the Sergeant-at-Arms that he has insisted on this. I know he has appealed to the Committee on Appropriations time and time again, and I am here to sustain him in it, and I hope the Senate will concur in my amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, believing as I do that this amendment has been debated quite sufficiently for every Senator to comprehend and to have made up his mind on it, I move to lay the amendment of the Senator from Michigan on the table.

Mr. FERRY. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on laying the amendment of the Senator from Michigan on the table.

The yeas and nays were taken.

Mr. ANTHONY, (after having voted in the negative.) I voted inadvertently. I am paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.] I understand he would vote "yea." I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Allison,	Coke,	Hampton,	Plumb,
Beck,	Davis of West Va.,	Harris,	Pugh,
Blair,	Frye,	Jackson,	Rollins,
Brown,	George,	Jonas,	Saulsbury,
Camden,	Groome,	Jones of Florida,	Slater,
Cockrell,	Hale,	Morgan,	Vest.

NAYS—29.

Butler,	Garland,	Maxey,	Sherman,
Call,	Gorman,	Miller of Cal.,	Van Wyck,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hawley,	Miller of N. Y.,	Voorhees,

Bayard,	Harrison,	Lamar,	Sewell,
Dawes,	Hill of Georgia,	McDill,	Vance,
Edmunds,	Hoar,	McMillan,	Williams.
Fair,	Ingalls,	McPherson,

So the motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. MAXEY. There is no necessity for the yeas and nays now.

Mr. FERRY. I have no desire to press the yeas and nays.

Mr. ALLISON. Let us see what the result will be.

Mr. FERRY. Very well, let us have the yeas and nays. I follow the chairman, generally.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 31, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—31.

Butler,	Garland,	Logan,	Saunders,
Call,	Gorman,	Mahone,	Sawyer,
Cameron of Pa.,	Grover,	Maxey,	Sherman,

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of two o'clock having arrived the Chair announces the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. No. 1382) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that that may be laid aside temporarily and the appropriation bill continued.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that order is made. The Chair hears no objection. With the indulgence of the Senate, however, the Chair will lay before the Senate some bills from the House for reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolution from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

A bill (H. R. No. 1294) more effectually to suppress gaming in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 6236) to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 6405) to authorize the Court of Claims of the United States to ascertain the amount of damages sustained by Ann C. Carroll and Maria C. Fitzhugh, executrices of the estate of the late Daniel Carroll, deceased, by the regrading of the streets around square numbered 736, in the city of Washington;

A bill (H. R. No. 6406) to refund the assessments made under the administration of M. G. Emery, while mayor of Washington, and for other purposes;

A bill (H R. No. 6625) to authorize the Washington and Atlantic Railroad Company to extend a railroad into and within the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 6626) to authorize the Washington City and Point Lookout Railroad Company to extend a railroad into and within the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 6627) to authorize the establishment of a free public highway in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 6676) to more effectually punish house-breaking in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 156) to provide for the suspension of collection of special assessments in the District of Columbia until the improvements which said assessments were made to pay for are fully completed.

The following joint resolutions were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 240) for printing the report on the subject of tornadoes in the Western States; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 247) to provide for the printing of public documents for binding and distribution to those entitled to receive them.

The bill (H. R. No. 4460) to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for the United States district court, post-office, and other Government offices at the city of Williamsport, Pennsylvania, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

PRODUCTION OF GOLD AND SILVER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That 15,000 copies of the report of the Director of the Mint on the annual production of gold and silver in the United States be printed, 8,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 3,000 for the use of the Senate, and 4,000 for the use of the Director of the Mint.

DONATION OF DRINKING-FOUNTAIN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the joint resolution (H. R. No. 224) accepting the offer of Dr. H. D. Cogswell, of San Francisco, California, to donate to the Government of the United States an ornamental drinking-fountain, to be erected at his cost in the city of Washington.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I ask that the resolution be passed at this time.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Has that resolution been to a committee?

Mr. MILLER, of California. I have consulted with the members of the Committee on the District of Columbia who are here, and they have examined it, and there is no reason why it should be referred. It is simply to accept a drinking-fountain which is donated by Dr. Cogswell. It will cost nothing to the Government, and there certainly can be no objection to it.

The joint resolution was, by unanimous consent, read three times, and passed.

CHANGING OF ALLEY-WAYS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. No. 6225) to authorize the changing of alley-ways in the city of Washington.

Mr. ROLLINS. I ask the Senate to consider the bill at this time. It is a precise copy of a bill which has been reported favorably by the Committee on the District of Columbia on the part of the Senate. I have carefully compared it and find it to be an exact copy.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the bill be read for information.

The Principal Legislative Clerk read the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. A bill precisely similar has been carefully considered by the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia. We think it very proper, and hope the bill will pass.

The bill was, by unanimous consent, read three times, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 1128) to authorize the Secretary of State to allow for expenditures within named to James Rea, late consul at Belfast, Ireland.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 4222) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 5559) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. GEORGE and Mr. JONAS submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. No. 6242) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, and Mr. SAUNDERS submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6244) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations as amended on the motion of the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. FERRY.]

Mr. COCKRELL. What is now pending?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate decided in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COCKRELL. In what line?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. From line 107 to 113.

Mr. COCKRELL. Before that is agreed to I want to amend the amendment. I offer the following amendment to the amendment. Add—

That each Senator, who does not as the chairman of a committee have a clerk, be authorized to employ a clerk during the session at a per diem salary of $6.

I offer that in view of the action of the Senate in this case. If there is to be a little favoritism, let it be extended all around. I ask that the amendment to the amendment be again read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Acting Secretary read the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORRILL. That would be manifestly unfair to several gentlemen who occupy chairmanships of committees where their clerks had to be employed entirely for the service of the committee and they are of no service to the chairman personally. Take the Committee on Appropriations; take the Committee on the Judiciary, or the Committee on Finance.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Appropriations has two clerks, and it is no more unfair than it is in regard to the messengers. I say to the Senator from Vermont with perfect candor that I want to see now if the Senate will distribute its favors with some equality.

Mr. PLATT. I happen at the present time to be chairman of two committees; that is to say, I am chairman of the Committee on Patents and I am acting as chairman of the Committee on Pensions. In the Committee on Pensions we have two clerks and a special messenger; in the Committee on Patents we have a clerk; but I desire to say that I have not been able to avail myself of the services of any one of these for my personal business during this session; they are entirely required for the purposes of the committees. I have no clerk.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 23, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—23.

Blair,	Chilcott,	Jackson,	Morgan,
Brown,	Cockrell,	Jonas,	Pugh,
Butler,	Gorman,	Jones of Florida,	Slater,
Call,	Groome,	Kellogg,	Voorhees,

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee as amended on the motion of the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. FERRY.]

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 114, to increase the item of appropriation for compensation of "chief engineer" from $1,700 to $2,160.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 116, to increase the item of appropriation for compensation of "three assistant engineers" from $1,200 each to $1,440 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 118, to increase the item of appropriation for compensation of "two firemen" from $900 each to $1,095 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 122, to increase the item of appropriation for "eight skilled laborers" from $720 each to $1,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 128, to increase the item of appropriation for compensation of "female attendant in charge of ladies' retiring-room" from $600 to $720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 134, after the word "hundred," to insert "and fifty;" so as to read:

For stationery and newspapers, including $5,000 for stationery for committees and officers of the Senate, and $150 for postage-stamps for the Secretary of the Senate, and $150 for postage-stamps for the Sergeant-at-Arms, $14,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 137, before the word "clerks," to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "twenty-two;" and in line 138, after the word "session," to strike out "17,424" and insert "15,972;" so as to read:

For twenty-two clerks to committees, at $6 per day during the session, $15,972.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 143, after the word "each," to strike out "while actually employed" and insert "during the session, and one riding page annually at the same rate;" and in line 145, after the word "thousand," to strike out "142.50" and insert "445;" so as to read:

For seventeen pages for the Senate Chamber, including three riding pages at the rate of $2.50 per day each during the session, and one riding page annually at the same rate, $5,445.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 150, to increase the appropriation "for materials for folding" from $4,000 to $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 156, to insert:

For folding speeches and pamphlets, at a rate not exceeding $1 per thousand, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 165, after the word "committees," to insert "and for inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate;" so as to make the clause read:

For fuel and oil and cotton-waste for the heating apparatus, $7,000; for furniture and repairs of furniture, $10,000; for packing-boxes, $770; for miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, $10,000; expenses of special and select committees, and for inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate, $40,000; in all, $67,770.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "Capitol police," in line 179, after the word "watchmen," to insert "who, in addition to their present duties, shall have and exercise the authority of policemen;" so as to make the clause read:

Capitol police:

For one captain, $1,600; three lieutenants, at $1,200 each; twenty-one privates, at $1,100 each; and eight watchmen, who, in addition to their present duties, shall have and exercise the authority of policemen, at $900 each; in all, $35,500, one-half to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate and the other half to be disbursed by the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 185, to increase the appropriation for "contingent fund" of the Capitol police from $100 to $600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "House of Representatives," in line 194, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixteen" and insert "eighteen;" so as to read:

For compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the service of the House of Representatives, $318,287.60, namely.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to line 242.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 241, after the word "Columbia," I move to insert the words "clerk to the Committee on Agriculture." I wish to say, while I am up, in reference to these House provisions, that the Committee on Appropriations agreed with the House Committee that we would make such amendments to the House appropriations as would enable us to carry into a committee of conference the whole question of salaries between the two Houses. The Senate is well aware that there is a difference of opinion in reference to the compensation of the employés of the House and the Senate. I move the amendment in deference to the wishes of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair.) The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There ought now to be an amendment increasing the aggregate amount.

Mr. ALLISON. That we can have made afterward. It would require us to go back to line 194. If the Chief Clerk will read on for the present we can go back to that later.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to line 254.

Mr. ALLISON. In lines 253 and 254 I move to strike out the words "clerk to the Sergeant-at-Arms, $2,100," and to insert "one cashier, $3,000." I will say that since the passage of this bill by the House, that body has passed a bill reorganizing the force in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House. That bill was referred to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, but we did not feel at liberty from the information we had to report to this bill the suggested amendments. However, it was agreed that we should report such an amendment as would give the House an opportunity to make the amendment they may desire with reference to this officer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to line 276.

Mr. ALLISON. After the word "for," in line 275, and before the word "messengers," I move to strike out "eight" and to insert "nine;" so as to read:

For nine messengers at $1,200 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to line 316.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 314, before the word "messengers," I move to strike out "four" and to insert "five;" so as to read:

Five messengers, during the session, at $800 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the items for "public printing," in line 365, before the word "clerks," to strike out "three" and insert "four;" in the same line, after the word "four," to strike out "one clerk of class 2;" and in line 366, after the word "all," to strike out "thirteen thousand six hundred" and insert "fourteen thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

Public printing:
For compensation of the Public Printer, $3,600; for chief clerk, $2,000; four clerks of class 4, one clerk of class 1, in all, $14,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent to go back to line 244. After the words "assistant clerk to the Committee on War Claims, $1,600," I move to insert:

One assistant clerk to the Committee on Commerce, $1,500.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know the necessity for that.

Mr. ALLISON. So should I. I have no knowledge of it. These are amendments, I will state to the Senator from Missouri, that are being put in merely to give the other House the proper opportunity to regulate their own affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. This is for the House Committee on Commerce?

Mr. ALLISON. It is for the House Committee on Commerce, which now has no assistant clerk. I was asked by the chairman of that committee to have this clause inserted merely for consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suppose we had better appoint about three clerks to all the committees as a matter of favor to the chairmen. I should like to see the clerical force distributed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair.) The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the "Library of Congress," in line 374, before the word "assistant," to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "twenty-three;" in line 375, after the word "thousand," to strike out "two hundred and fifty" and insert "five hundred;" in line 376, after the word "each," to strike out "one at $2,000" and insert "two at $1,800 each;" in line 377, after the word "each," to strike out "four" and insert "two;" after the word "each," in line 379, to strike out "two at $1,250 each" and insert "seven at $1,400 each;" in line 381, after the word "each" to strike out "eight" and insert "five;" in line 382, after the word "each," to strike out "four at $1,000 each, and;" in line 384, after the word "dollars," to strike out "per annum" and insert "one at $720 and one at $400;" and in line 386, before the word "hundred," to strike out "eight" and insert "six;" so as to make the clause read:

Library of Congress:
For compensation of the Librarian, $4,000; and for twenty-three assistant librarians, two at $2,500 each, two at $1,800 each, two at $1,600 each, two at $1,440 each, seven at $1,400 each, five at $1,200 each, one at $960, one at $720, and one at $400; in all, $36,640.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have some explanation of the reduction of the force in the Library.

Mr. ALLISON. There is really no reduction of the force in the Library. I will state to the Senator from Ohio that this is the exact force they have in the Library now, and the adjustment was made as requested by the Librarian, Mr. Spofford. We have adjusted the force exactly as he wishes it, believing that he knew more about it than we possibly could know.

Mr. SHERMAN. I see that there is a reduction.

Mr. ALLISON. There is a very small reduction.

Mr. SHERMAN. All right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to line 424.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In line 424 the word "dollars" should be inserted after "1,800."

Mr. ALLISON. That is a mistake in the print.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the "Department of State," in line 443, after the word "for," to strike out "five" and insert "six;" so as to read:

For six chiefs of bureau and one translator, at "$2,100."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 446, before the word "clerks," to strike out "four" and insert "five;" so as to read:

Five clerks of class 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 446, before the word "clerks," to strike out "five" and insert "seven;" so as to read:

Seven clerks of class 2.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 447, before the word "clerks," to strike out "ten" and insert "twelve;" so as to read:

Twelve clerks of class 1.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 459, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for compensation of the Secretary of State, assistant secretaries, and clerks and employés in the Department of State, from $121,650 to $130,550.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to line 499.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the estimates of the Treasury Department in regard to the chiefs of division. I wish to say that the present Secretary of the Treasury, and two or three of his predecessors, have recommended a slight change of the chiefs of division, which involves scarcely any expense. It is now contained in the regular estimates and is urged also by the present Secretary of the Treasury. There ought to be one chief of the division of captured and abandoned property. There was formerly an old officer of the Government there, Mr. Noerr, who was paid out of the captured and abandoned property fund. When that fund was covered into the Treasury it became necessary in order to retain his services to make him the chief of a division. Seven chiefs of division are provided for by law, and it necessarily crowded off one of the old chiefs of division, who was compelled to take the salary of an assistant chief of division.

I ask the Senator from Iowa either to allow a provision to be made for one chief of division of captured and abandoned property, or to increase the number of chiefs of division from seven to eight. That will make a reduction of the assistant chiefs, and will only make an increase of about $500 in the appropriation. There is now great injustice done to a very competent and excellent officer who has charge of the division of the mail and all the files and records of the Department, who is one of the most important officers of the Treasury Department.

As being probably the simplest form, I move, in line 496, after the word "dollars," to strike out "seven" and insert "eight;" so as to read:

Eight chiefs of division, at $2,500 each.

And in line 498, after the word "each," to strike out "six" and insert "five;" so as to read:

Five assistant chiefs of division, at $2,000 each.

I know of my own knowledge that this is an important change without involving any material expense, and it would place the chief of the mail division in his proper rank.

Mr. ALLISON. The committee considered that question very carefully, and read the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury. He desires very much to have the assistant chief in charge of the mail division made a chief; but inasmuch as we had a vast number of applications of that kind, the committee decided not to recommend the change to the Senate. I think myself there is no great harm if the amendment should be adopted. It simply adds $500 to this man's compensation. I would very much prefer the Senator to move his amendment so as to increase the assistant chiefs of division to $2,100. I think that would be better.

Mr. SHERMAN. That would still keep up the discrimination. The assistant chiefs are not responsible for anything; but this chief of the mail division, who has charge also of all the files and records

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. GEORGE and Mr. JONAS submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. No. 6242) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, and Mr. SAUNDERS submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6244) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations as amended on the motion of the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. FERRY.]

Mr. COCKRELL. What is now pending?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate decided in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COCKRELL. In what line?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. From line 107 to 113.

Mr. COCKRELL. Before that is agreed to I want to amend the amendment. I offer the following amendment to the amendment. Add—

That each Senator, who does not as the chairman of a committee have a clerk, be authorized to employ a clerk during the session at a per diem salary of $6.

I offer that in view of the action of the Senate in this case. If there is to be a little favoritism, let it be extended all around. I ask that the amendment to the amendment be again read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Acting Secretary read the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORRILL. Take the Committee on Appropriations; take the Committee on the Judiciary, or the Committee on Finance.

I have no clerk.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 23, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—23.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee as amended on the motion of the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. FERRY.]

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 114, to increase the item of appropriation for compensation of "chief engineer" from $1,700 to $2,160.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 116, to increase the item of appropriation for compensation of "three assistant engineers" from $1,200 each to $1,440 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 118, to increase the item of appropriation for compensation of "two firemen" from $900 each to $1,095 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 122, to increase the item of appropriation for "eight skilled laborers" from $720 each to $1,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 128, to increase the item of appropriation for compensation of "female attendant in charge of ladies' retiring-room" from $600 to $720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 134, after the word "hundred," to insert "and fifty;" so as to read:

For stationery and newspapers, including $5,000 for stationery for committees and officers of the Senate, and $150 for postage-stamps for the Secretary of the Senate, and $150 for postage-stamps for the Sergeant-at-Arms, $14,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 137, before the word "clerks," to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "twenty-two;" and in line 138, after the word "session," to strike out "17,424" and insert "15,972;" so as to read:

For twenty-two clerks to committees, at $6 per day during the session, $15,972.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 143, after the word "each," to strike out "while actually employed" and insert "during the session, and one riding page annually at the same rate;" and in line 145, after the word "thousand," to strike out "142.50" and insert "445;" so as to read:

For seventeen pages for the Senate Chamber, including three riding pages at the rate of $2.50 per day each during the session, and one riding page annually at the same rate, $5,445.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 150, to increase the appropriation "for materials for folding" from $4,000 to $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 156, to insert:

For folding speeches and pamphlets, at a rate not exceeding $1 per thousand, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 165, after the word "committees," to insert "and for inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate;" so as to make the clause read:

For fuel and oil and cotton-waste for the heating apparatus, $7,000; for furniture and repairs of furniture, $10,000; for packing-boxes, $770; for miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, $10,000; expenses of special and select committees, and for inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate, $40,000; in all, $67,770.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "Capitol police," in line 179, after the word "watchmen," to insert "who, in addition to their present duties, shall have and exercise the authority of policemen;" so as to make the clause read:

Capitol police:

For one captain, $1,600; three lieutenants, at $1,200 each; twenty-one privates, at $1,100 each; and eight watchmen, who, in addition to their present duties, shall have and exercise the authority of policemen, at $900 each; in all, $35,500, one-half to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate and the other half to be disbursed by the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 185, to increase the appropriation for "contingent fund" of the Capitol police from $100 to $600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "House of Representatives," in line 194, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixteen" and insert "eighteen;" so as to read:

For compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the service of the House of Representatives, $318,287.60, namely.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to line 242.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 241, after the word "Columbia," I move to insert the words "clerk to the Committee on Agriculture." I wish to say, while I am up, in reference to these House provisions, that the Committee on Appropriations agreed with the House Committee that we would make such amendments to the House appropriations as would enable us to carry into a committee of conference the whole question of salaries between the two Houses. The Senate is well aware that there is a difference of opinion in reference to the compensation of the employés of the House and the Senate. I move the amendment in deference to the wishes of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair.) The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There ought now to be an amendment increasing the aggregate amount.

Mr. ALLISON. That we can have made afterward. It would require us to go back to line 194. If the Chief Clerk will read on for the present we can go back to that later.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to line 254.

Mr. ALLISON. In lines 253 and 254 I move to strike out the words "clerk to the Sergeant-at-Arms, $2,100," and to insert "one cashier, $3,000." I will say that since the passage of this bill by the House, that body has passed a bill reorganizing the force in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House. That bill was referred to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, but we did not feel at liberty from the information we had to report to this bill the suggested amendments. However, it was agreed that we should report such an amendment as would give the House an opportunity to make the amendment they may desire with reference to this officer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to line 276.

Mr. ALLISON. After the word "for," in line 275, and before the word "messengers," I move to strike out "eight" and to insert "nine;" so as to read:

For nine messengers at $1,200 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to line 316.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 314, before the word "messengers," I move to strike out "four" and to insert "five;" so as to read:

Five messengers, during the session, at $800 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the items for "public printing," in line 365, before the word "clerks," to strike out "three" and insert "four;" in the same line, after the word "four," to strike out "one clerk of class 2;" and in line 366, after the word "all," to strike out "thirteen thousand six hundred" and insert "fourteen thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

Public printing:
For compensation of the Public Printer, $3,600; for chief clerk, $2,000; four clerks of class 4, one clerk of class 1, in all, $14,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent to go back to line 244. After the words "assistant clerk to the Committee on War Claims, $1,600," I move to insert:

One assistant clerk to the Committee on Commerce, $1,500.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know the necessity for that.

Mr. ALLISON. So should I. I have no knowledge of it. These are amendments, I will state to the Senator from Missouri, that are being put in merely to give the other House the proper opportunity to regulate their own affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. This is for the House Committee on Commerce?

Mr. ALLISON. It is for the House Committee on Commerce, which now has no assistant clerk. I was asked by the chairman of that committee to have this clause inserted merely for consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suppose we had better appoint about three clerks to all the committees as a matter of favor to the chairmen. I should like to see the clerical force distributed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair.) The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the "Library of Congress," in line 374, before the word "assistant," to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "twenty-three;" in line 375, after the word "thousand," to strike out "two hundred and fifty" and insert "five hundred;" in line 376, after the word "each," to strike out "one at $2,000" and insert "two at $1,800 each;" in line 377, after the word "each," to strike out "four" and insert "two;" after the word "each," in line 379, to strike out "two at $1,250 each" and insert "seven at $1,400 each;" in line 381, after the word "each" to strike out "eight" and insert "five;" in line 382, after the word "each," to strike out "four at $1,000 each, and;" in line 384, after the word "dollars," to strike out "per annum" and insert "one at $720 and one at $400;" and in line 386, before the word "hundred," to strike out "eight" and insert "six;" so as to make the clause read:

Library of Congress:
For compensation of the Librarian, $4,000; and for twenty-three assistant librarians, two at $2,500 each, two at $1,800 each, two at $1,600 each, two at $1,440 each, seven at $1,400 each, five at $1,200 each, one at $960, one at $720, and one at $400; in all, $36,640.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have some explanation of the reduction of the force in the Library.

Mr. ALLISON. There is really no reduction of the force in the Library. I will state to the Senator from Ohio that this is the exact force they have in the Library now, and the adjustment was made as requested by the Librarian, Mr. Spofford. We have adjusted the force exactly as he wishes it, believing that he knew more about it than we possibly could know.

Mr. SHERMAN. I see that there is a reduction.

Mr. ALLISON. There is a very small reduction.

Mr. SHERMAN. All right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to line 424.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In line 424 the word "dollars" should be inserted after "1,800."

Mr. ALLISON. That is a mistake in the print.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the "Department of State," in line 443, after the word "for," to strike out "five" and insert "six;" so as to read:

For six chiefs of bureau and one translator, at "$2,100."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 446, before the word "clerks," to strike out "four" and insert "five;" so as to read:

Five clerks of class 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 446, before the word "clerks," to strike out "five" and insert "seven;" so as to read:

Seven clerks of class 2.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 447, before the word "clerks," to strike out "ten" and insert "twelve;" so as to read:

Twelve clerks of class 1.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 459, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for compensation of the Secretary of State, assistant secretaries, and clerks and employés in the Department of State, from $121,650 to $130,550.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to line 499.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the estimates of the Treasury Department in regard to the chiefs of division. I wish to say that the present Secretary of the Treasury, and two or three of his predecessors, have recommended a slight change of the chiefs of division, which involves scarcely any expense. It is now contained in the regular estimates and is urged also by the present Secretary of the Treasury. There ought to be one chief of the division of captured and abandoned property. There was formerly an old officer of the Government there, Mr. Noerr, who was paid out of the captured and abandoned property fund. When that fund was covered into the Treasury it became necessary in order to retain his services to make him the chief of a division. Seven chiefs of division are provided for by law, and it necessarily crowded off one of the old chiefs of division, who was compelled to take the salary of an assistant chief of division.

I ask the Senator from Iowa either to allow a provision to be made for one chief of division of captured and abandoned property, or to increase the number of chiefs of division from seven to eight. That will make a reduction of the assistant chiefs, and will only make an increase of about $500 in the appropriation. There is now great injustice done to a very competent and excellent officer who has charge of the division of the mail and all the files and records of the Department, who is one of the most important officers of the Treasury Department.

As being probably the simplest form, I move, in line 496, after the word "dollars," to strike out "seven" and insert "eight;" so as to read:

Eight chiefs of division, at $2,500 each.

And in line 498, after the word "each," to strike out "six" and insert "five;" so as to read:

Five assistant chiefs of division, at $2,000 each.

I know of my own knowledge that this is an important change without involving any material expense, and it would place the chief of the mail division in his proper rank.

Mr. ALLISON. The committee considered that question very carefully, and read the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury. He desires very much to have the assistant chief in charge of the mail division made a chief; but inasmuch as we had a vast number of applications of that kind, the committee decided not to recommend the change to the Senate. I think myself there is no great harm if the amendment should be adopted. It simply adds $500 to this man's compensation. I would very much prefer the Senator to move his amendment so as to increase the assistant chiefs of division to $2,100. I think that would be better.

Mr. SHERMAN. That would still keep up the discrimination. The assistant chiefs are not responsible for anything; but this chief of the mail division, who has charge also of all the files and records of the Department, is one of the most important chiefs of division, but by a matter beyond his control, by the action of Congress in covering into the Treasury very properly the fund out of which one of these chiefs had formerly been paid, he lost his rank.

Mr. ALLISON. There was another reason, I will say to the Senator from Ohio. We thought the division of captured and abandoned property must be in a condition where the office could be dispensed with. I do not see that there can be a very large division of captured and abandoned property in the Treasury.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state the reason why the office is important. All the cotton claims and all the claims arising out of that large fund are constantly referred to that department. I know myself that that officer has saved many times his salary every year. Since that time there has been by law attached to his division the custody and charge of all the lands of the United States which appertain to the Treasury Department. That is a very large and a very important trust, and a great deal of saving has occurred in that way.

I know that that officer is one of the oldest and best officers in the service of the Treasury Department. He naturally complains of it, and every Secretary of the Treasury, I think, for a number of years has recommended this change; but the matter has passed sub silentio. In the mean time this officer, although he has the rank of a chief of division, is really paid as an assistant chief. I think it is time to correct it. I see that Mr. Folger, in a personal note to the Senator from Iowa, urges this very strongly as an act of justice, and he also, in an official letter to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, recommends strongly that this change should be made. It is also contained in the regular estimates. It is a small matter, but still it is a matter of justice.

Mr. COCKRELL. I raise the question of order on the amendment. Is it in order?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is in order if it was estimated for.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is new legislation.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I was not aware of the fact that it was estimated for.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is estimated for.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It certainly has not been recommended by any committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is estimated for by the Secretary of the Treasury in the regular estimates, and I have here his letter to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations strongly urging it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. A letter the Senator well knows will not do, but it must be in the Estimate Book.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is in the Estimate Book; the Senator will find it there. Instead of being called "chief of division," he is called "superintendent of mails" in the estimates.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri raises a question of order. The Chair does not know whether he insists on it or not.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator from Missouri will look at the estimates he will find it in the regular estimates. This officer is called there "superintendent of mails."

Mr. PLUMB. I do not think the question of its having been estimated for by the Secretary of the Treasury alone covers the point of order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is it not new legislation? That is the point I made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inquire of the Senator from Missouri under what part of the rule he raises his point of order?

Mr. PLUMB. Pending that consideration I desire to say a word or two. I do not know the gentleman who is to be benefited, if anybody is to be, by the amendment; but I desire to say simply that there is a constant tendency toward the increase of salaries, a tendency which in my judgment is unwise and injudicious. Many officers have served the Government for the last ten or fifteen years with the salaries named in the law without complaint and with entire satisfaction. While I believe that in regard to bureau officers many increases might be made with advantage to the Government, my own opinion is that there ought not to be a great increase, if any increase at all, in the salaries of subordinate officers.

The fact is that a large number of chiefs of division are practically clerks. Their duties involve no responsibilities except what are merely clerical. They do not involve the responsibility which attaches to cashiers of banks or other persons who have the custody or investment of money, and the mere fact that the person described in the amendment of the Senator from Ohio has to dispatch the mails of the Treasury Department does not add in any effective way to his duties or his responsibility.

If we are to take up every person who happens to have devolved upon him some degree of responsibility in regard to the handling of mail matter, or for any other thing which makes responsibility to a Department, and increase the salary therefor, we shall find ourselves involved in a maze of consideration in regard to the relative merits of persons in the service of the Government.

My own theory about the matter is that when it comes to persons who have judicial responsibility, who have actual responsibility, the Government can afford to pay a large or at least a commensurate salary; but when it comes to the subordinates who simply formulate, put together, and put into shape the decisions, the rules, the regulations of the Departments, and present them to the superior officers who have the responsibility, they should not have necessarily a large salary.

Ths fact is that to-day the Government is paying for the services which it receives more in every way than is paid by private parties. There is no question about that. The Government is so paying salaries in every single department, whether it be civil or whether it be military, and this constant tendency toward the increase of salaries brings about a condition of things of which I spoke a few days ago, in which one-half of the tax-payers of this country will be levied upon to pay the salaries and the compensation of the other half—a condition of things which I think is not desirable and is wholly unnecessary.

While in this given case it may be that this particular person by comparison with some other one may be deserving, I resist it as a part of a policy to resist everything which tends to increase salaries at this particular time.

I think the judgment of the Committee on Appropriations has been wise; I think its decision has been in accordance with the facts in the case; and while this officer may be doing something which is more responsible by comparison than others with whom he is associated, I think he is not entitled to this increase. I therefore hope that the amendment of the Senator from Ohio will not prevail.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me inform the Senator from Kansas that formerly the one who is now chief of the division of captured and abandoned property received $3,000 a year. I think this Mr. Noerr is the very man who received it. I knew him in his official capacity when he administered a trust of $60,000,000 or $70,000,000. When that fund was lessened, however, there was attached to his division the custody and care of all the lands of the United States acquired by purchase at sales, &c. Very large tracts of land are purchased at internal-revenue and other sales, amounting to probably a thousand different pieces scattered throughout the United States. This gentleman, Mr. Noerr, was formerly paid out of the special fund. When that fund was covered in, he was paid afterward as chief of division, and his salary was reduced from $3,000 to $2,500. The present Secretary of the Treasury recommended that he be made a chief of division at a salary of $2,750, and he recommends it strongly. The Committee on Appropriations seem to have declined to do that. Mr. Noerr was then appointed chief of division. That reduced the pay of one of the other chiefs of division, Mr. Johnson, by making him an assistant chief. He, also, is one of the old officers of the Government and has a very responsible position. Mr. Noerr not only has charge of all the mails, and has to stay there the last man in the Department, but he has also charge of all the records and files of the Department. Mr. Folger, in a private note to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, says:

> There are some officers in this Department who are deserving of more salary than they now have. One is the head of the mail-room, who labors hard and long, and has a responsible place. He cannot leave the building until all letters are signed and dispatched.

I regard the chief of the customs division, the chief of the mail division, and probably that of captured and abandoned property, as the most important chiefs of divisions in the Treasury Department. It so happened that in order to provide for Mr. Noerr, who was dropped out when the fund was covered into the Treasury, although his duties continued, Mr. Johnson was reduced down to an assistant chief. It seems to me that might be corrected without any injustice to anybody. It is only giving him $500 a year more than he gets now, but it gives him an equality of pay with the other officers of his grade.

Mr. PLUMB. Does the Senator from Ohio regard it as an imposition that this officer should stay there until the mails are dispatched?

Mr. SHERMAN. He has to stay there until seven or eight o'clock very often, while most of them only stay there until four. As a matter of course he has to stay there until all the mails are dispatched; and when you remember that the Treasury mail is a mail not only of ordinary letters but is a mail of great sums of money which are carried in that mail, you will see that it is a position of trust and responsibility.

I cannot say anything more than this. I have no interest in this question except as my attention was called to it. I see by reference to reports previously made that this was recommended by two or three of my predecessors, but was passed over without probably any one to call attention to it. It is urged again by the present Secretary of the Treasury.

I suggest that the committee allow this amendment to be made, and if there is any objection made to it in the House, I will have done my duty. I do not think they will object to it, because I think they are willing to make this change, but they were not willing to make a new officer. The Secretary of the Treasury had called this new officer the custodian of the mails, and they decided not to introduce a new officer, but by making this change no new officer will be introduced, and it will simply change the salary of one assistant chief to that of a chief.

Mr. PLUMB. The constant tendency is to create new offices, new divisions, new assumed responsibility, and consequently new salaries. While it is not as conspicuous in the civil branch as it is in the military, perhaps, it seems to me that is enough to arrest the attention of the country.

I am opposed to the creation of new offices except those of a clerical character. I am opposed to the assumption of new responsibilities, unless they are warranted by new duties imposed by new conditions. I believe that the tendency is too much toward the increase of salaries and the increase of officers, and that within a brief period we are to be confronted with a condition of things where the constant increase of salaries and of officers will be one of those things which will be a subject of public criticism, public denunciation, and public concern, and I think it is as well now to pause as at any other time.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I wish for one to say that within my observation the officers of the Government of the United States are more poorly paid than any other class of people performing similar duties. The rule is a very plain and simple one. The Senate and House can easily judge whether a man is receiving an adequate compensation for a particular employment. With the exception of a sinecure here and there, no Senator can point to a salary received for the ordinary performance of official duty that is more than adequate to the most economical support of the person receiving it. Considering the place where they have to perform their duties, the salaries are not adequate to the comfortable support of a man and a small family.

I therefore, for one, think that the Government owes it as a duty to the people to employ the best talent for a place which it can obtain, and it owes it to common honesty, to say nothing of liberality, that a fair and liberal compensation should be given. An employé of the Government has no hope of large personal profit from the performance of his functions. He is confined to a limited amount. He cannot look forward to any increase. There is no amount left in the sum appropriated as a provision for his family in case of death. He is dependent entirely upon a stipulated sum. That should be an entirely adequate sum to his comfortable and reasonable support, the education of his children, and the supply of his family with the ordinary comforts of life. The salaries paid by the Government to its officials are not adequate to that as a general rule, in my opinion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN.]

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 21, noes 10.

Mr. BECK. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 19, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Call,	Davis of Illinois,	Jones of Nevada,	Sherman,
Cameron of Pa.,	Ferry,	Mahone,	Voorhees,
Cameron of Wis.,	Harrison,	Miller of Cal.,	Williams,
Chilcott,	Hawley,	Morrill,	Windom.
Conger,	Hoar,	Rollins,

NAYS—26.

Allison,	Coke,	Harris,	Plumb,
Beck,	Davis of W. Va.,	Jackson,	Ransom,
Blair,	Farley,	Jonas,	Van Wyck,
Brown,	Frye,	Jones of Florida,	Vest,
Butler,	Garland,	Logan,	Walker.
Camden,	George,	Maxey,
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Morgan,

ABSENT—31.

Aldrich,	Grover,	Lapham,	Pugh,
Anthony,	Hale,	McDill,	Saulsbury,
Bayard,	Hill of Colorado,	McMillan,	Saunders,
Dawes,	Hill of Georgia,	McPherson,	Sawyer,
Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Miller of N. Y.,	Sewell,
Fair,	Johnston,	Mitchell,	Slater,
Gorman,	Kellogg,	Pendleton,	Vance.
Groome,	Lamar,	Platt,

So the amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 499, after the word "each," to insert:

Assistant superintendent of the Treasury building, $2,100; estimate and digest clerk, $2,000.

Mr. BROWN. I will thank the chairman of the committee to explain the necessity of having an assistant superintendent of the Treasury building at $2,100 a year salary. Why is it necessary now when it has not been necessary heretofore, and what are his duties?

Mr. ALLISON. The chief clerk of the Treasury Department is ex officio superintendent of the Treasury building. Until a recent investigation there was what was called a custodian of the Treasury at a salary of $2,400. There was no provision really made for such an officer, and when the custodian had been in office some time and was discharged or resigned an $1,800 clerk was put in his place. This officer has charge of all the public property in the Treasury building, and he has the immediate charge of all the contingent fund and their expenditure. It is really one of the most important places in the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury wrote us a very urgent letter asking that this officer should be paid the sum of $2,100. Indeed, I believe he requested that he should be paid $2,500.

Mr. BROWN. Does this officer take the place of the custodian that the Senator speaks of?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROWN. The office of custodian is abolished.

Mr. ALLISON. It is abolished. In other words, this officer takes the place of one who has been receiving for many years $2,400 or $2,500.

Mr. BECK. I hope the chairman of the committee will go on further to say that by section 4 of the bill we endeavored to cut off all special salaries and places.

Mr. ALLISON. All salaries of an indirect nature are cut off by section 4 of the bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The fact is that by section 4 the man who has been heretofore acting as custodian could not be continued.

Mr. ALLISON. No; he could not.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. But he must be provided for by law. As was well said by the Senator who has charge of the bill, the person who is performing the duties now was paid out of the contingent fund, and there was no special appropriation for it, but we have stopped all that by section 4.

Mr. BROWN. Then there is no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 504, to increase the item for compensation of "Government actuary under control of the Treasury Department" from $2,000 to $2,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 505, to reduce the number of clerks of "class 4," appropriated for in the office of Secretary of the Treasury, from forty-three to forty-two.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 510, to increase the number of "clerks at $1,000 each," appropriated for in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, from fifteen to sixteen.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 537, after the word "one," to strike out "paper counter" and insert "paper cutter;" so as to read:

One paper cutter at $3 per day.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 540, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for compensation of the Secretary of the Treasury, assistant secretaries, and the clerks and employés in the office of the Secretary from $494,633.25 to $498,183.25.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the Supervising Architect's office, in line 548, to increase the item for compensation of "photographer" from $2,000 to $2,200; and in line 551, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for compensation of Supervising Architect and the clerks and messenger in his office from $19,420 to $19,620.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the office of the "First Comptroller of the Treasury," in line 570, before the word "clerks," to strike out "five" and insert "seven;" in line 572, before the word "clerks," to strike out "eleven" and insert "seven;" in line 573, before the word "messenger," to strike out "assistant;" and in line 574, after the word "all," to strike out "eighty-two thousand nine hundred" and insert "eighty-three thousand and twenty;" so as to make the clause read:

First Comptroller of the Treasury: For First Comptroller of the Treasury, $5,000; deputy comptroller, $2,700; four chiefs of division at $2,100 each; seven clerks of class 4; eleven clerks of class 3; ten clerks of class 2; eight clerks of class 1; four clerks at $1,000 each; and seven clerks at $900 each; one messenger and three laborers; in all, $83,020.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the office of the "Second Comptroller of the Treasury," in line 588, after the word "pensions," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" in the same line, after the word "four," to strike out "and four" and insert "three;" in line 589, after the word "three," where it occurs the second time, to insert "and two clerks of class 1;" and in line 590, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirteen" and insert "twelve;" so as to make the clause read:

For the following additional force in the Second Comptroller's office, rendered necessary by increase of work relating to pensions: Three clerks of class 4, three clerks of class 3, and two clerks of class 1; in all $12,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the office of the Commissioner of Customs, in line 595, to increase the number of "clerks at $1,000 each" from two to three; and in line 598, to increase the total amount of the appropriation from $51,630 to $52,630.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the office of the "First Auditor," in line 604, to increase the number of clerks of "class 3" from nine to ten; and in line 608, to increase the total amount of the appropriation from $83,410 to $85,010.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the office of Second Auditor, in line 612, to increase the number of "chiefs of division" from five to six; in line 613, to increase the number of "clerks of class 3" from twenty-nine to forty-five; in line 616, to reduce the number of "clerks of class 2" from sixty to forty-four; and in line 619, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for the compensation of Second Auditor, deputy auditor, chiefs of division, and clerks and messengers in his office from $218,890 to $224,090.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the office of Third Auditor, in line 626, to increase the number of "chiefs of division" from five to seven; in line 628, to reduce the number of "clerks of class 1" from forty-three to forty, and in line 632, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for the compensation of Third Auditor, deputy auditor, chiefs of division, and clerks and employés in his office from $200,610 to $201,010.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the office of the Fifth Auditor, in line 650, to increase the number of "chiefs of division" from two to three; in line 651, to reduce the number of "clerks of class 4" from five to four: in line 652, to increase the number of "clerks of class 2" from four to five; in line 653, to reduce the number of "clerks of class 1" from six to five; in line 655, after the word "and," to strike out "one laborer" and insert "two laborers;" and in line 656, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for compensation of the Fifth Auditor, deputy auditor, chiefs of divisions, and clerks and employés in his office from $46,750 to $47,810.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the office of Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, to strike out, from line 673 to line 679, inclusive, in the following words:

To provide the necessary force for examining registers on arrival and departure of mails, and obtaining information and making such examination and revision as is necessary for the proper auditing and settlement of accounts for the transportation of the mails: Four clerks of class 4; six clerks of class 3; four assorters, at $900 each; in all, $20,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the office of the "Register of the Treasury," in line 730, to reduce the number of "clerks of class 3" from eighteen to seventeen; in line 731, to increase the number of "clerks of class 1" from nineteen to twenty; in line 733, to increase the number of "copyists" from fifty-eight to sixty; in line 735, to reduce the number of "laborers" from eight to seven; and in line 735, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for compensation of the Register of the Treasury, assistant register, chiefs of divisions, and clerks and employés in the office, from $187,370 to $188,110.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, to strike out lines 751 and 752, in the following words:

For expenses of special examinations of national banks and bank plates, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 785, to reduce the total amount of the appropriation for the compensation of the officer in charge of the Bureau of Statistics and the clerks and employés in his office from $50,580 to $50,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, in line 795, after the word "dollars," to strike out "one clerk" and insert "two clerks;" in the same line, after the word "three," to strike out "one clerk of class 2;" and in line 800, after the word "thousand," to strike out "one" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Bureau of Engraving and Printing: For chief of bureau, $4,500; one assistant, $2,250; accountant, $2,000; one stenographer, $1,600; two clerks of class 3; four clerks of class 1; one clerk, $1,000; additional to one clerk as disbursing clerk, $200; three copyists, at $900 each; two assistant messengers; and four laborers; in all, $26,330.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the office of Life-Saving Service, in line 807, after the word "thousand," to strike out "six" and insert "eight;" in line 810, before the word "clerks," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" in line 811, after the word "three," to strike out "one clerk" and insert "two clerks;" and in line 814, after the word "all," to strike out "twenty-nine thousand two" and insert "thirty-two thousand four;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of Life-Saving Service: For General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service, $4,000; assistant general superintendent of the Life-Saving Service, $2,500; one topographer and hydrographer, $1,800; one civil engineer and draughtsman, $1,800; one draughtsman, $1,500; one principal clerk and accountant, $1,800; three clerks of class 3; two clerks of class 2; three clerks of class 1; two clerks at $1,000 each; five clerks at $900 each; one assistant messenger and one laborer; in all, $32,480.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 819, after the word "service," to insert:

And one officer from the special agency service, and one from the customs service, respectively, for duty at the Treasury Department at Washington.

So as to read:

And nothing in section 4 of this act shall be construed to prevent the Secretary of the Treasury from detailing one officer of the revenue-marine service for duty in the office of the Life-Saving Service, and one officer from the special agency service, and one from the customs service, respectively, for duty at the Treasury Department at Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "office of Supervising Surgeon-General, Marine Hospital Service," in line 835, after the word "dollars," to insert "one hospital steward, (employed as chemist,) $1,200;" and in line 839, after the word "all," to strike out "twenty-six thousand six" and insert "twenty-seven thousand eight;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of Supervising Surgeon-General, Marine Hospital Service: For Supervising Surgeon-General, $4,000; one surgeon, $3,000; one passed assistant surgeon, $1,800; one clerk, $1,800; five clerks at $1,600 each; one clerk, $1,200; one hospital steward, (employed as chemist,) $1,200; six copyists; one messenger at $50 per month; one laborer at $40 per month; and one laborer at $30 per month; in all, $27,840, the same to be paid from the permanent appropriations for the Marine Hospital Service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in line 876, before the word "clerks," to strike out "twenty-three" and insert "twenty-four;" in line 877, after the word "each," to strike out "seventy-six" and insert "seventy-nine;" in line 878, after the word "each," to insert "two messengers;" in line 879, before the word "assistant," to strike out "thirteen" and insert "fourteen;" and in line 880, after the word "and," to strike out "ninety-two thousand eight" and insert "ninety-nine thousand one;" so as to make the clause read:

Commissioner of Internal Revenue: For Commissioner of Internal Revenue, $6,000; one deputy commissioner, $3,200; two heads of division at $2,500 each; five heads of division at $2,250 each; one superintendent of stamp agencies, $2,100; one superintendent of stamp vault, $2,000; one stenographer, $1,800; twenty-four clerks of class 4; twenty-five clerks of class 3; thirty-six clerks of class 2; twenty-four clerks of class 1; fourteen clerks at $1,000 each; seventy-nine clerks at $900 each; two messengers; fourteen assistant messengers, and thirteen laborers; in all, $295,190.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 888, to increase the appropriation "for salaries and expenses of collectors and deputy collectors" from $1,975,000 to $2,100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 897, to reduce the appropriation "for stationery for the Treasury Department and its several bureaus" from $40,000 to $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 905, after the word "than," to strike out "five" and insert "one;" so as to make the clause read:

For purchase of material for binding canceled marine papers requisitions, and other important records, newspapers, books, hand-stamps, and repairs of the same, $2,600; and of this amount not more than $100 may be used in the purchase of current publications.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 909, to reduce the appropriation "for investigations of accounts and records, including the necessary traveling expenses and for other traveling expenses" from $2,500 to $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 911, to reduce the appropriation "for freight, expressage, telegrams, and car-tickets" from $4,000 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 917, to increase the appropriation "for purchase of subsistence of horses for office and mail wagons, including shoeing, and for wagons, harness, and repairs of the same," from $2,600 to $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 920, after the word "clocks," to strike out "six" and insert "eight;" in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out "five thousand" and insert "two thousand five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For purchase of ice, buckets, file-holders, book-rests, and clocks, $8,600; $2,500 of this sum to be expended for shelving and file-holders in the Second Auditor's office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 926, to reduce the appropriation "for purchase of coal, wood, grates, grate-baskets and fixtures, stoves and fixtures, blowers, coal-hods, hearths, shovels, tongs, pokers, matches, and match-safes," from $12,500 to $10,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 973, to reduce the appropriation "for the purchase of desks, tables, and chairs, and shelving for file-rooms, and cases, boxes, rugs, chair-covers and caning, cushions, cloth for covering desks, locks, screws, hand-saws, turpentine, and varnish," from $17,000 to $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 951, to reduce from $14,000 to $10,000 the appropriation "for washing and hemming towels, and for purchase of brooms, brushes, crash, cotton, cloth, cane, chamois-skins, dusters, flour, keys, lye, matches, nails, oil, powders, sponge, soap, tacks, wall-paper, and for repairs of machinery, baskets, spittoons, files, water-coolers, tumblers, ice-picks, bowls and pitchers, traps, thermometers, ventilators, towels, awnings and fixtures, alcohol, window-shades and fixtures, wire screens, axes, bellows, chisels, canvas, candlesticks, door and window fasteners, bells and bell-pulls, hammers, mallets, leather, gum and other belting, stencil-plates, tools, whetstones, wire and zinc, and other absolutely necessary articles for the use of the Department."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "office of assistant treasurer at Chicago," in line 987, after the word "each," to insert "one coin and currency clerk at $1,500;" in line 990, after the word "and," to strike out "one watchman" and insert "three watchmen;" and, in line 992, after the word "all," to strike out "sixteen thousand nine hundred and sixty" and insert "nineteen thousand nine hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of assistant treasurer at Chicago: For assistant treasurer, $4,500; for cashier, $2,500; for paying teller, $1,800; for bookkeeper and receiving teller, at $1,500 each; one coin and currency clerk, at $1,500; one assistant bookkeeper and two clerks, at $1,200 each; for one messenger, $840, and three watchmen, $720; in all, $19,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "office of the assistant treasurer at New York," in line 1044, after the word "dollars," to insert "one assistant engineer, $720;" and in line 1046 to increase the total amount of the appropriation for the compensation of the assistant treasurer and the clerks and employés in his office from $167,370 to $168,090.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "office of assistant treasurer at San Francisco," in line 1084, after the word "dollars," to strike out "one receipt clerk, $1,600;" and in line 1087 to reduce the total amount of the appropriation for the compensation of the assistant treasurer and clerks and the employés in his office from $29,720 to $28,120.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I hope the amendment of the committee will not be adopted. The treasurer's office in San Francisco has become very important. All disbursements in the Territories for the Army and for the Navy on that coast are made at this office. The matter was brought to the attention of the Secretary of the Treasury, who recommended an increase of the force. The recommendations do not go to the extent that we expected. The assistant treasurer at San Francisco desires an increase of force in order that he may be able to perform his duties acceptably. I hope the committee will not insist on the amendment striking out this one clerk, who is certainly as necessary to the office as any other clerk in it.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no doubt that much, if not all, the Senator says is true in reference to the growing business of the assistant treasurer's office in San Francisco, but the bill gives that office an additional receiving teller, a coin teller, and a messenger, and the House in addition to that provided for one receipt clerk. The Secretary of the Treasury, I know, did make a recommendation for all these new places. At the same time, the committee thought that if the business was being transacted now with the force on hand there, they might get along this year with the additional force provided.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I will say that the increase recommended was not large enough. The assistant treasurer has been using the watchmen there for tellers and clerks, and is compelled to do that. I have myself seen in that office watchmen counting money and receiving money. It is not economy to cut down an office like that, with such a great amount of business, with functions of as much importance as that office performs. I must insist on the clause standing as it came from the House. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I suppose the chairman of the committee has stated that the House had added two new offices here, and this was the third.

Mr. ALLISON. I stated the fact as I understood it that the House had added four persons to the office of the assistant treasurer at San Francisco, and that we omitted one of the persons recommended by the House in the bill, allowing all the remainder.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. If the chairman of the committee will allow me, this is a greater increase than in any other city in the Union. We gave the office at San Francisco more than any other.

Mr. MILLER, of California. That is no argument for dispensing with this clerk. The fact is that the public business has grown to such an extent there as to require all the force provided by the House, and more too. The fact is that the increase has not been large enough. This I know of my own personal knowledge of the office, for I investigated the subject very thoroughly last fall at the request of the assistant treasurer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee striking out the item.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the office of Director of the Mint, after the word "messenger," in line 1108, to strike out "one copyist" and insert "two copyists;" in line 1110, after the word "dollars," to insert "one helper at $360;" and in line 1111, after the word "all," to strike out "25,700" and insert "26,960;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of the Director: For Director, $4,500; examiner, $2,300; computer, $2,200; assayer, $2,200; adjuster of accounts, $2,000; two clerks of class 3; one clerk of class 2; two clerks of class 1; one translator, $1,200; one clerk, at $1,000; one messenger; one assistant messenger; two copyists; one helper in laboratory, $840; one helper, at $360; in all, $26,960.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations "for contingent expenses of the Bureau of the Mint," in line 1125, to increase the item "for the collection of statistics relative to the annual production of the precious metals in the United States" from $4,000 to $4,500; and in the same line, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for contingent expenses from $8,200 to $8,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "mint at San Francisco, California," in line 1153, after the words "weigh clerk," to insert "and;" in line 1154, after the words "warrant clerk," to strike out "and register of deposits;" in line 1155, after the word "each," to insert "register of deposits, $2,600;" and in line 1160, before the word "hundred," to strike out "six" and insert "four;" so as to make the clause read:

Mint at San Francisco, California: For salary of superintendent, $4,500; assayer, melter and refiner, and coiner, at $3,000 each; assistant assayer, assistant melter and refiner, and assistant coiner, at $2,500 each; chief clerk and cashier, $2,500 each; bookkeeper, abstract clerk, weigh clerk, and warrant clerk, at $2,200 each; register of deposits, $2,000; cashier's clerk, $1,800; assayer's computation clerk, assistant weigh clerk, and superintendent's computation clerk, at $1,600 each; in all, $43,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "assay office at New York," in line 1228, to increase the item "for wages of workmen" from $23,000 to $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 1280.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations the reason for fixing the salary of the governor of Arizona and the governor of each of the other Territories at $2,600 when the Revised Statutes, section 1845, fix it at $3,500; also why that of secretary is put in the bill at $1,800 instead of $2,500, the amount fixed in the Revised Statutes.

Mr. ALLISON. We did not see proper to change the present compensation of these officers of the Territories. It is true, I believe, that the Revised Statutes did authorize a higher rate, but the committee did not feel authorized to make an increase of compensation to these officers.

Mr. MILLER, of California. It would seem that $2,600 is rather a small salary for the governor of a Territory.

Mr. ALLISON. It would seem so, and I think it is a low salary. I quite agree with the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator be good enough to explain? I understood the Senator to say that the law in the Revised Statutes gave a certain higher salary, and the committee have not appropriated what the law requires because they did not feel at liberty to raise the salary. I do not understand that.

Mr. ALLISON. That may seem a little contradictory, but for several years these governors have been receiving under appropriation bills $2,600 a year.

Mr. HOAR. They can go to the Court of Claims and get the balance.

Mr. ALLISON. They could were it not for a provision in the beginning of the bill which cuts them off.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Is that all the salary they have received?

Mr. ALLISON. That is all they have received for several years. It is a reduction practically made by law in an apropriation bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if I understood him to say that we were not appropriating the amount required by law for the salaries of these officers? I understood that we appropriated the amount fixed by law; whether that law was passed in an appropriation bill or not I did not know, and that was the point I wanted to ascertain, whether the amount now appropriated by this bill is not the salary fixed by law for these officers.

Mr. ALLISON. I am very glad to be catechised by my colleagues on the committee. The Senator from California stated that the Revised Statutes fixed the salary at $3,500. I stated that that was true, although for several years we have fixed a different rate in appropriation bills. If I did not make myself understood by the Senator from Missouri I am very sorry. So we have done in this bill, and we did not feel at liberty to increase the compensation to these governors of Territories.

Mr. COCKRELL. Do the Revised Statutes, which were a compilation of the laws existing at the time, govern all officers? Have there not been hundreds of amendments as to the salaries of various officers since that time, and is simply a provision of the Revised Statutes now the rule if it has been subsequently amended or modified?

Mr. ALLISON. I think if the law has been amended those statutes would not be the law now.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The Revised Statutes, section 1845, provide:

From and after the 1st day of July, 1873, the annual salaries of the governors of the several Territories shall be $3,500, and the salaries of the secretaries shall be $2,500 each.

That is the law, and if it has been modified it has been only by an appropriation bill. It seems to me $3,500 is little enough salary for an officer who performs such high functions as the governor of Dakota, Arizona, Montana, or New Mexico. At the proper time I shall move an amendment to restore the salary to what the law fixes.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand the salary named here is the salary that has been paid for several years, and it is the regular salary of all these officers. The salary named for the governor of Arizona is the salary of all the other Territorial governors. A change in one would probably call for a change in the others.

As to the Revised Statutes, we all know that at the time the compilation took place Congress had increased the salaries of all the clerks, employés, and officers, by what was known, as the Senator from Kentucky tells me, by some as "the salary grab." It was during that year; and I think if you will turn to the Revised Statutes you will find the compensation of Senators put at $7,500, and yet they receive only $5,000. Each appropriation bill appropriates the amount for the full salary of the officers named in it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California make any motion?

Mr. MILLER, of California. If this is the proper time, I will move to amend.

Mr. ALLISON. I trust the Senator from California will wait until the committee amendments are disposed of.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I will wait.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "War Department," in line 1387, to insert:

For compensation of an assistant Secretary of War, to be appointed in said Department, $3,500.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out in line 1388 "to be appointed in said Department." I think those words are unnecessary.

Mr. HOAR. Is there a general law requiring that officer to be appointed?

Mr. ALLISON. There is not a general law on the subject. There is no assistant secretary now, but "to be appointed in said Department"——

Mr. HOAR. Would it not be better to say "to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate?"

Mr. ALLISON. That will be so if nothing is said about it.

Mr. HOAR. If there is nothing said about it, does the general law fix that there is an assistant secretary to be appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate?

Mr. ALLISON. So I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But there is no provision now that he shall "be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," if that is what the Senator from Massachusetts means.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to amend the amendment by striking out after the words "to be appointed" the words "in said Department" and inserting "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," in the usual form.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1390, to increase the appropriation for compensation of "one chief clerk" in the War Department from $2,500 to $2,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1398, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for compensation of the Secretary of War, assistant Secretary of War, and the clerks and employés in his office, from $71,640 to $75,390.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "dollars," in line 1400, to strike out:

And section 3 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Provided, That the President may authorize and direct the commanding general of the Army or the chief of any military bureau of the War Department to perform the duties of the Secretary of War under the provisions of section 179 of the Revised Statutes, and section 1222 of the Revised Statutes shall not be held or taken to apply to the officer so designated by reason of his temporarily performing such duties.

Mr. BECK. I ask whether the provision for the appointment of an assistant Secretary of War does not dispense with the necessity of that amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. I will say that the Secretary of War thought it wise to have this provision in addition to that authority, because it might be possible that the Secretary and assistant Secretary might both be absent, or that before he could procure a proper assistant, one that would be satisfactory, some temporary occupation of the office might be necessary; and at his request I inserted this provision, understanding that to be the sense of the committee.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The chairman of the committee will recollect that when this provision was inserted it had not been agreed that he should have an assistant Secretary.

Mr. ALLISON. I know, but it was understood at the last meeting of the committee, when we agreed to the assistant Secretary, that this provision should also go in, and at the instance of the Secretary of War. It can do no harm.

Mr. BECK. I believe the Senator from Iowa is right, but I thought perhaps we had omitted this after agreeing to the other.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for "the office of the Adjutant-General," in line 1433, after the word "and," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "ten;" and in line 1438, after the word "all," to strike out "sixty-one" and insert "forty-six;" so as to make the clause read:

For thirty clerks of class 1, and ten clerks at $1,000 each, to be exclusively engaged in preparing and making reports to expedite the settlement of pension applications called for by the Commissioner of Pensions; one assistant messenger; in all, $46,720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1444, after the word "namely," to strike out "five" and insert "thirteen;" after the word "applications," in line 1448, to strike out "called for by the Commissioner of Pensions" and insert "and soldiers' claims;" and in line 1451, after the word "hundred," to strike out "thousand six hundred" and insert "and fifteen thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

For the following additional force in the office of the Adjutant-General, namely: thirteen clerks of class 4; eight clerks of class 3; twelve clerks of class 2; one hundred and twenty-five clerks of class 1, to be exclusively engaged in preparing and making reports to expedite the settlement of pension applications and soldiers' claims; seven assistant messengers; seven watchmen; and three laborers; in all $215,060.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 1465.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to make an amendment there, and I call the attention of my associates of the committee, in order to give the Senate jurisdiction to that paragraph. I have an earnest statement from the Judge Advocate General, stating that an additional force is required, and a letter from the Adjutant-General is on the way showing its necessity. I move to strike out "one clerk," in line 1463, and insert "two clerks;" so as to read: "Two clerks of class one," so that we may make a further examination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator proposes to strike out "one clerk" and insert "two clerks?"

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Would it not give jurisdiction just as well to strike out that clerk? If the intention is to increase it really, then the chairman is right.

Mr. ALLISON. That is the desire, and that is what I suppose will be done. I have a letter from the Judge Advocate General, saying that under the provisions of the pension laws there are a great number of inquiries addressed to his office, and if the other force is allowed in these different bureaus it will be necessary also to give him an additional force. I know the committee examined this question and also inquired of the Secretary of War, but I am not clear that we should not give an additional force. I only want to make a further examination, and therefore to retain jurisdiction of this paragraph for the time being.

Mr. BECK. I think we had better make the letter a part of the RECORD, so that the House may see what the proposition is.

Mr. ALLISON. I would rather pass it over for the present until we have a further examination. I have not here now the letter to which I refer.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Of course, when you get into conference you can make the change backward or forward.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask to insert "one additional clerk of class 1" in the Bureau of Military Justice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be agreed to to strike out "one" and insert "two" in line 1463, and make the word "clerk" "clerks," if there be no objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1510, before the word "agents," to strike out "twenty" and insert "thirty;" and in line 1512, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixty-six" and insert "eighty;" so as to make the clause read:

For the following clerks and others to be employed by the Quartermaster-General in the investigation of claims for settlement by the Treasury Department under the act of July 4, 1864: one clerk of class 4; two clerks of class 3; four clerks of class 2; eleven clerks of class 1; two clerks at $1,000 each; eleven copyists; three assistant messengers; one watchman; and thirty agents, at $1,400 each; in all, $80,580.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out lines 1514, 1515, 1516, and 1517, in these words:

To provide for the transportation and other necessary expenses of the agents employed while traveling on duty, at not exceeding $3 per day each, $20,000.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For per diem of the agents employed while traveling on duty, at not exceeding $3 per day each, and for actual necessary expenses for transportation, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "office of the Commissary-General," in line 1526, after the word "each," to insert "one messenger;" and in line 1527, after the word "all," to strike out "thirty-one thousand six hundred and eighty" and insert

"thirty-two thousand five hundred and twenty;" so as to make the clause read:

One chief clerk, at $2,000; one clerk of class 4; three clerks of class 3; four clerks of class 2; ten clerks of class 1; two clerks at $1,000 each; one messenger; one assistant messenger; two laborers; and two watchmen; in all, $32,520.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "additional force in the office of the Surgeon-General," in line 1554, to reduce the number of "clerks of class 4" from twenty-one to fifteen; and in line 1556, to increase the number of "clerks of class 1" from fifty to fifty-nine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "office of Publication of Records of the Rebellion," in line 1621, to increase the appropriation for compensation of "one agent" from $2,000 to $2,400; and, in line 1630, to increase the total amount for compensation of one agent and the clerks and employés in the office from $41,120 to $41,520.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1648, to insert:

For the additional force required for the north wing, the north half of the east wing, and two stories of the south wing of the State, War, and Navy Department building, namely: one assistant engineer for the period of nine months, at the rate of $1,000 per annum, $750; one captain of the watch, $900; one carpenter, $1,000; one conductor of elevator for the period of nine months, at the rate of $720 per annum, $540; one laborer; five firemen for the period of nine months, $2,700; twelve charwomen for the period of nine months, $1,620; one hostler, $600; two hostlers, at $540 each; one watchman, at $540; in all, $10,390.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. In providing this additional force for the War and Navy Department, I ask whether it may be occupied more than eight or seven months of next year, and whether we had not better say "so much thereof as may be necessary," instead of appropriating the absolute amount required for nine months' occupation.

Mr. ALLISON. I suppose if they are only employed seven months they will not be paid for nine, but I have no objection to the suggestion. Let it read:

In all, $10,390, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to line 1683.

Mr. ALLISON. The word "dollars" should be inserted after "thousand" in line 1683.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be made.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1710, after the word "streets," to insert "and one laborer at $480;" in line 1711, after the word "thousand," to strike out "two hundred" and insert "six hundred and eighty;" and after the word "items," in line 1718, to strike out "six thousand" and insert "five thousand five hundred and twenty;" so as to make the clause read:

For four watchmen and two laborers in the building at the corner of Seventeenth and F streets, and one laborer at $480, $4,680; and for fuel for warming the entire building, including the Ordnance Office, and for operating the ventilating fan throughout the year, repairs of steam-boiler, furnaces, and of the warming and ventilating apparatus, and pay for gas, purchase of oil-cloth and matting for halls, whitewashing, and for general repairs and miscellaneous items, $5,520; in all, $10,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1722, before the word "buildings," to strike out "six" and insert "two;" and in line 1723, after the word "each," to strike out "one thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

For compensation of the superintendents of the two buildings occupied by the War Department, at $250 each, $500,

Mr. PLUMB. I move to strike out from line 1721 to line 1724. I think that will be in accordance with the provisions the committee adopted in another part of the bill, not to pay the superintendents of buildings any extra compensation.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from Kansas that the Secretary of War proposed——

Mr. PLUMB. The Secretary of War could not have calculated to employ superintendents at $250 each; consequently he must expect to detail somebody already employed at a commensurate salary, and this $250 is for the purpose of putting on an additional compensation. Every time we put an additional duty on a clerk, no matter whether it is examining a new account, superintending a new building, or anything of that kind, we have got to put on an additional salary. Consequently we have so much of it. If the functions of this Government enlarge somewhat and a man who has been employed in carrying on the operations of a bureau in regard to the allowance of accounts between the different States, or in regard to the allowance of accounts for the loss of horses, is required to add a new horse to his duties, or if a new State has been admitted meantime, we have got to add something to his compensation. So when we take a clerk at $1,400 or $1,600 or 1,800 or $2,000 a year, and instead of having him do clerical duty we make him superintendent of a building, (and when he superintends a building he does not do any thing else,) we pay him $250 additional.

We must come to be a little bit careful, because it is not a question what the legislative branch of the Government thinks about this business, but it is a question of the rights of the persons we employ, and we have got to be very careful that we do not cut into the vested rights of somebody whom we have employed at a certain salary. Because we make a man superintendent of a building who has heretofore been a clerk at a certain salary, I am opposed to giving him additional compensation therefor. If this business is to be done, let it be on a thorough and complete understanding. We are opening a very wide door; we are committing ourselves to a wide and enormous expenditure, and I want to know exactly what the limitation of this is to be. The moment we take a clerk and say to him "Notwithstanding you have been doing clerical duty or superintending a bureau of a Department, we will make you a superintendent of a building," which does not involve anything more, "and we will give you $250 extra compensation," we have established a precedent which compels us to give additional compensation to every person upon whom we devolve additional duties throughout the entire Departments.

Now, with what results? Here we have certain clerks who have been doing duties that have now entirely disappeared; nothing further is to be done practically in the line in which they have heretofore been employed; but the superintendents of their bureaus, or the Secretaries under whom they are employed, or Congress, devolve upon them other duties. It does not take them more than ten hours a day; it does not take them more than eight hours a day; and yet, because you have given them duties which they have not heretofore been employed about, something additional in the day, we have an additional claim for compensation.

We are increasing the civil list of the Government in an extraordinary and an inordinate way. It is an outrage, to speak plainly, upon the people who pay the taxes, that every clerk who may be detailed to take care of a building which does not take any more of his time, does not take any more of skill, does not take any more responsibility than he exercised before, should get $250 additional. We have been constantly on the increase in regard to salaries. As I said, it is an outrage. The Senator from Massachusetts, of course, smiles at that expression. Of course it is a very small amount, $250. I have no doubt he would give his check for it, if called upon to do so; but the fact is we are coming to that point where we have got to decide between the people who pay the taxes and the people who eat them up; and we are creating an enormous civil list, we are putting it upon the pension-roll, we are creating a distinction between the people who eat the taxes and the people who pay them, and it is not right to constantly and always avail ourselves of every pretext to increase the salaries of men who already are overpaid by comparison with salaries paid in civil employment.

It is said as a justification of the increase of salaries in Washington that living is higher here than elsewhere. Who made living higher here? It has been made higher by the increase of salaries. If we increased the salaries in Washington 25 per cent. to-morrow the cost of living would increase in proportion. They constantly bring them up. If we had kept salaries down, living in Washington would not be any dearer to-day than it is in Saint Louis or Chicago. I am opposed to increasing the salaries of people who do these perfunctory duties which require no more time, no more skill, no more judgment than the employment for which they were receiving a salary before. I therefore move to strike out the entire paragraph.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Kansas will not prevail. One would suppose from his argument that we were doing something extraordinary and unusual here; that in this bill we proposed to increase salaries. The truth is that in every department of the Government to-day and for years the person who is superintendent of a departmental building has received additional compensation.

Mr. PLUMB. What do they do?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know what they do in detail. I know that in many instances the chief clerk of a Department is superintendent of the building. In the Treasury Department the chief clerk is superintendent. In the Interior Department I believe the chief clerk is superintendent. Every department of this Government has a superintendent of the departmental building, and $250 additional is paid for that service, and has been for years and years. Now, all I have to say about it is, that if we are to strike these out in the War Department, let us go through with every Department and strike out the additional $250 wherever it occurs.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. We have struck this item down from six to two superintendents.

Mr. ALLISON. I was about to say that. I thank my friend for reminding me of it. The War Department has a number of buildings scattered through the city, some of them very large; there is the Winder building occupied not only by the War Department, but by the Second Auditor's office, a bureau of the Treasury. So the old Ford Theater, and a number of other large buildings. Heretofore six of these buildings have been under this supervision with a superintendent at $250. We struck down all but two of these, leaving only that great building known as the War Department proper and the Winder building, being a very large building occupied by several bureaus of the War Department and also by the Second Auditor's office.

I trust that this will not be stricken out unless we are to go back and sweep through all the Departments and cut all this expenditure which has existed for years, and I think very properly, because the superintendent of such a building has great responsibilities.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to inquire what is the particular duty of a superintendent of a departmental building. Does he go through and inspect it and determine what repairs are necessary, what should be done, and what care is taken? I do not know anything about it.

Mr. ALLISON. That is a very graphic and proper description of the duties in a general way. They go through and see what repairs are necessary, see if a gas-pipe needs repairing, or a water-pipe needs fixing, or if the furnace needs some repairing. The superintendent of the building is the man to look after all this. Every boy cannot give orders for repairs of these buildings. Some responsible officer must have charge of the service, and most of the Departments have a large contingent fund to expend for this very purpose, and in one or two instances they give bond. I do not know that these War Department superintendents give bond.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee to strike out "six" and insert "two," in line 1722, and in line 1723 to strike out "one thousand" before "five hundred."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Now the question is on the motion to strike out.

Mr. HOAR. Is that in order at this time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there had been no amendment to the paragraph it might be a question whether it would be in order now or would have to be reserved till the end.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not make any point. We may as well settle it now.

Mr. PLUMB. I mean to say once for all that if, as the Senator from Iowa said, we have committed an error heretofore in allowing $250 extra salary, we ought not to continue it. I am willing to go back with him, or anybody else, and strike out all this extra compensation. I say it is not wise; it is not just. It does not add to the responsibility, it does not add to the duties of any person who has been employed under the Government practically to require that he should do this duty. I think we might as well stop it here as anywhere else. We are confronted with just this thing; we had it up for discussion some days ago in the case of a man employed about the Presidential office, who had to do something that he thought before that time he ought not to have done; he had to sign some patents, and he came here and wanted extra pay, and the Senate sat down upon it.

I say now as a practical man that a man drawing $1,400 or $1,600 or $1,800 from the Government never has done, and never will do, any more work because of such an additional detail than is required, so far as the hours of his work are concerned, than he would originally have done, and there is no responsibility about it in any sense to impose upon him an obligation or a responsibility that he has not before that time exercised. I think it is just as well that we sit down upon all this thing of extra pay.

Here is a man who says, "I have been assistant Secretary of War a few days." I remember when I first came here there was a bill to give somebody pay because that person exercised the duties of Secretary of War during a few days, and there have been other bills of the same kind. I say now we may as well sit down upon them. We pay a certain stipulated sum per annum, and a man does not work any more than the stipulated number of hours, and we ought not to pay him any more than the salary agreed upon. It is a wrong thing to do it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I agree with all that the Senator from Kansas has said, but it is not well to be too radical. I call my friend's attention, my colleague on the committee, to the fact that the six buildings provided for heretofore are reduced by the committee to two. I think it best not to be too radical and cut them all off, and next year probably I shall join my friend and cut off the whole thing.

Mr. PLUMB. Will my friend from West Virginia show us why we should not pay for the whole six as well as for the two?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will tell my friend, of course. The two buildings are two main, large buildings, and it is necessary, probably, that these two should be superintended, because the buildings are more important and larger than the others.

Mr. PLUMB. But my friend employs in the Cumberland coal regions a number of persons; he pays them according to the hours they serve; and will he discriminate between those people who serve him ten or twelve hours, as the case may be? Does he suppose these people serve more than ten hours a day in the superintendence of these buildings? No. Very well. We contract for something, or we contract for nothing. If we contract for two hours a day, let us understand it; if we contract for four hours a day, let us understand it; if we contract for all a person's service, let us understand that; and if we should happen to put upon any particular person enough service to make him serve eight or ten hours a day, as men do in my country who work by the month or by the day, let us not say that that constitutes an additional claim for extra pay. Men in Kansas work for ten hours a day for a dollar, a dollar and a half, or two dollars, as the case may be, and are glad to get the pay.

Now, we put upon a man service here which requires him to work two hours, and if we put on two hours' additional service he wants extra pay. I say it is not fair; I say it is not decent; I say that it is constituting deliberately by legislation an office-holding aristocracy which is offensive to the laboring class of this country that is illy paid to-day by comparison. I believe in imposing on every one of these officials, clerks and others, every single duty which they can perform during eight or ten hours' service, as the case may be, without any additional pay. We have contracted for all the time between those hours, and if they do not do any more than that, and if they are not pressed and broken down physically by it, where is the claim for additional compensation? It does not exist, and especially does it not exist by comparison. At this time all over this country men are striking because they do not get pay enough, and the Government of the United States is proposing to pay additional compensation not for hours of extra service, not for quality of service, but simply because we have put some additional duty upon some man who has not got duty enough now to do, and we say to him, "by reason of the fact that you have not got pages enough to write, that you have not got accounts enough to keep, that you have not words enough to put upon pages, we put you as superintendent of a building, and we give you something additional for doing it."

It is a slight thing to pay a man $250 a year, but this thing is accumulating. Whoever will look through the bill will see that your salaries have risen, and while that has been the case the wages of the laboring people of this country have been diminished. I say that it is not wise, it is not proper, it is not just that the Government of the United States should establish a scale of salaries and a principle of compensation which cannot be maintained in private dealings.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas to strike out the paragraph from lines 1721 to 1724.

Mr. LAPHAM. Mr. President, up to 1875, according to my recollection, each of the principal Departments had an officer known as superintendent, who was paid a salary of $2,000 or $2,500 a year. In the appropriation bill for that year, by common consent, those offices were dropped, and the duties were cast primarily upon the chief clerk of the Department to act as superintendent; and he had a laborer at only a salary of $600 a year, and $250 was allowed him for the extra care he had to take necessarily of the property of the Government in the building, making only about $850 for what before the Government paid $2,000 or $2,500. I hope this clause will not be stricken out. It is a just provision—one that was made understandingly—and it ought to be carried out.

Mr. PLUMB. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BECK. For the current year the law reads:

For compensation of the superintendents of the six buildings occupied by the War Department, at $250 each, $1,500.

The House adhered to that provision in the bill now reported. Our committee cut it down to two buildings, and instead of $1,500 made it $500.

I sympathize very much with what the Senator from Kansas says, that we are in the habit of paying men extra compensation when they are in fact seeking these easy places to superintend. I gladly voted to cut down the six to two, and as I voted with the committee to do that, I shall be obliged to vote no on this proposition.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator from Kentucky tell me why we should superintend six buildings in place of two, unless we had six that required superintendence?

Mr. BECK. The House thought we had six, and made provision for them, after six months' investigation. The Senate committee, on an investigation of a week, found that only two were necessary.

Mr. PLUMB. But the operations of a committee of conference, I am informed, are quite elastic, and I am not sure that when we come to a committee of conference we shall not find the six buildings reinstated; but if there are only two buildings in place of six, my principle and argument applies as well to the two as to the six. I say simply the fact that a man may be, as a clerk, employed to superintend a building does not authorize him to receive $250 for superintending one building or two, because he does not use up more time than the Government has contracted with him that he shall give it for the salary he receives. That is the point; and whether he is to write more words or less, whether he is to index more pages or less, whether he is to superintend more buildings or less, he can only occupy a certain number of hours a day in the public service, and those hours are only entitled to a certain compensation fixed by law and which has been accepted by him in his receipt of the employment.

So, Mr. President, this is only a device for putting up the salaries of some favored persons, and we are constantly doing it. There is not a salary reduced in this bill, not one; and yet at the same time the wages of men who labor in furnaces, on farms, in workshops, and everywhere throughout this country have been reduced during the twelve months measurably, 25 or 30 per cent., sometimes more, and 100,000 men, yea, 200,000 men, are out of employment to-day in the United States because they are not willing to accept the wages offered. And yet the Congress of the United States is here proposing to increase the wages of men already overpaid, upon the violent assumption that they are doing more duty than they were called upon to do when they were employed.

As I said before, it is an outrage. When I say it is an outrage, I mean, of course, relatively speaking; because of course the imposition of $250 on the tax-payers is not a great outrage. It is a small thing. The men who drink liquor at fifteen cents a glass can pay it very easily. But the fact is that we are to-day establishing a rate of wages in Government employment which cannot be maintained in private employment, and we are constantly increasing that, and for work which is not equal in intelligence or in time employed to that which is required of persons in private employment. There is not a man at work to-day in the Pacific Mills, of Massachusetts, there is not a man employed to-day in any one of the manufacturing establishments of the United States that does not employ as much intelligence in his occupation as is employed by the superintendents of these buildings, getting 50 per cent., or I will say 25 per cent., less in wages than the Government pays those people that it now proposes to add $250 per annum to by reason of the fact that they are superintending buildings.

Mr. BECK. But the Senator from Kansas must not forget that the Senate committee reduced the number from six to two and the total sum from $1,500 to $500. So far from increasing the existing wages, we have cut down the number two-thirds and the amount of pay two-thirds.

Mr. PLUMB. But that does not affect the people who are not employed. That only says that four men whom the House employed shall not be employed; the other two are still to be employed at the extra wages. My objection is to the employment of the two men for unnecessary work. It does not make any difference whether the number is two or six. The House said we need six superintendents. The Senate says we need but two. I say we do not need any at increased compensation.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Kansas has argued the case so well that even at the expense of abandoning my committee, of whom he is one, I think I shall vote with him.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope none of the rest of the committee will abandon us after we have struggled so hard to do our duty.

Mr. HALE. I have been waiting for twenty minutes to make a motion to go into executive session, hoping this question would be decided. I see it is not going to be, and I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. There will be further debate on this amendment evidently.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Perhaps there will be no further debate——

Mr. HALE. I see the Senator from Alabama rising.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think the Senator from Alabama rises to debate this question.

Mr. MORGAN. I merely rose to say that the Senator from Kansas had forgotten that he ought to make an allowance in order to supply the sum necessary to comply with the circular of the Republican Congressional committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLISON. That was a sad omission. I am glad the Senator from Alabama has reminded the Senator from Kansas of it. [Laughter.]

Mr. PLUMB rose.

Mr. HALE. I will insist on my motion unless a vote is taken at once.

Mr. HARRIS. The question is on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 18, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Beck,	Harris,	Plumb,	Vest,
Brown,	Jackson,	Pugh,	Walker,

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 6677) to regulate immigration; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1732) to refund excessive duties levied by overvaluation of Austrian paper florin, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Second Lieutenant L. A. Thibaut, praying to be restored to his place in the Army on having the charge of desertion removed, reported adversely thereon; and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PLUMB asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2096) to authorize the Secretary of War to turn over to George H. Thomas Post No. 18 of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Ottawa, Kansas, four condemned cannon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LAPHAM (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2097) for the relief of R. A. Francis; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2098) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle the claim of the State of Florida on account of expenditures made in suppressing Indian hostilities; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 6677) to regulate immigration was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HALE. Now I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fourteen minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened; and (at five o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 27, 1882.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BLAND. I notice in the RECORD of this morning that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. THOMPSON] has referred to a speech which I made on the 22d instant, in which speech I had incorporated a roll-call of the vote in the contested-election case of Mackey vs. Dibble; which roll-call, as set forth, represents the gentleman from Iowa as not voting. This occurred in consequence of an inaccurate copy of the roll-call furnished me, I am sure without any intention on the part of the gentleman who furnished the roll-call, and certainly no intention on my part, to do that gentleman any injustice. By an examination of the RECORD I find that the gentleman from Iowa did vote in the affirmative with his party. I will say for the gentleman that he is always present and always votes, and my only difficulty is that he nearly always votes wrong from the Democratic stand-point. [Laughter.]

PRESENTATION OF PORTRAIT OF EX-SPEAKER WINTHROP.

Mr. MORSE. I ask the Clerk to read the communication which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

BOSTON, June 10, 1882.

GENTLEMEN: A large number of citizens of Massachusetts have united in procuring a portrait of the Hon. Robert C. Winthrop, formerly Speaker of the House of Representatives, which they wish to present to the United States, in recognition of his recent masterly oration at Yorktown, delivered at the request of Congress; and desire that it may be placed in the Speaker's room in the Capitol, at Washington.

On behalf of the donors, we would ask you to have the kindness to take charge of presenting the picture in the proper manner, and at a suitable time, to the House of Representatives.

We have the honor to be,

Very respectfully, your obedient servants,

JOHN D. LONG,
E. R. HOAR,
SA'L C. COBB,
Committee.

Hon. LEOPOLD MORSE and AMBROSE A. RANNEY,
Representatives in Congress from the city of Boston.

BOSTON, January, 1882.

The undersigned, recognizing the important service rendered to the country by the Hon. Robert C. Winthrop in his admirable oration upon the occasion of the national centennial celebration at Yorktown, Virginia in October last, and desiring to manifest their great respect and personal regard for an honored citizen of Massachusetts, hereby contribute the sums set against their respective names for the purpose of procuring a portrait of Mr. Winthrop to be placed in the Capitol, at Washington, the scene of his early political distinction.

BOSTON, January 30, 1882.

MY DEAR SIR: The Paper, of which I inclose a copy, will give you sufficient information of an enterprise in which your neighbors and friends take a warm interest; and I am authorized on their behalf to ask your consent to the execution of the plan, and that you will select the artist, and arrange with him for giving the necessary sittings, at your earliest convenience. I remain, with great respect,

Your obedient servant,

SAMUEL C. COBB.

Hon. ROBERT C. WINTHROP.

BOSTON, February 3, 1882.

MY DEAR SIR: The paper which accompanied your kind note of the 30th ultimo calls for the most grateful acknowledgments.

I am deeply sensible to so unexpected a tribute from those whose good opinion and friendly regard must ever be precious to me.

Such an array of eminent names, of all professions and parties, recognizing my late oration at Yorktown as "an important service rendered to the country," lends a value to the paper altogether beyond the personal distinction which it proposes for me, and I would willingly have had the tribute end with that expression.

Yet I know not how to decline the invitation to allow my portrait to take its place, under such agreeable auspices, in the line of Speakers at Washington, according to the arrangement recently made for one of the corridors of the Capitol. No art, indeed, can obliterate the traces of the more than thirty years which have elapsed since it was my privilege, as a young man, to occupy the chair of the House of Representatives of the United States. But I may well be content that this early honor should be associated with my effort, as an old man, to illustrate the crowning triumph of our Revolutionary struggle, by the generous aid of France, on the occasion which has called forth so distinguished a compliment from my fellow-citizens and friends.

Accept for them all, and for yourself, dear sir, my sincere thanks, and believe me, with great regard,

Very faithfully, yours,

ROBERT C. WINTHROP.

Hon. SAMUEL C. COBB.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, no more agreeable duty could be imposed upon any Representative of the city of Boston. If Mr. Winthrop had no other claim to the grateful recognition of the people of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, it would suffice that, in obedience to the request of the national Congress, he delivered on the historic plains of Yorktown, in commemoration of the crowning triumph of our Revolutionary struggle, that noble oration which has rendered an important public service in strengthening the bonds of friendship with our ancient allies, the French people. It was frank in its acknowledgment of the debt of gratitude we owe France for her timely succor, which enabled us to bring to a speedy close a bloody war, while at the same time it told, with all the dignity of the historian, added to the charm of the gifted speaker, the true story of the nation's renown. Our allies at Yorktown were the military and naval forces of an absolute king. At our centennial celebration of the victory were the honored representatives of a powerful French Republic. Could a more cogent commentary be made of the growth of free ideas in one hundred years?

Mr. Winthrop sat in Congress from Boston from 1840 to 1850, and during the Thirtieth Congress was selected by the representatives of the people to be their Speaker.

In my judgment there is no more exalted position than that of the presiding officer of the people's House, who is the free choice of those who come every two years from the ranks of the citizens, and who must of necessity voice their will. It is, as we all know, as potential as it is exalted. Where can be found—

> The general debate,
> The popular harangue, the tart reply,
> The logic and the wisdom and the wit, in greater perfection than here? How enduring the honor, then, of him who has so exercised his great office as to win the general applause?

In the traditions of this House Mr. Winthrop is known for his scholarship, his clear perception and luminous statement, his strict integrity, his devoted and broad patriotism, and his unfailing and gentle courtesy.

The name of Winthrop is historic. It musters, as with the blast of a trumpet, the grand array of Massachusetts heroes. By the solemn resolve of that ancient Commonwealth stands in our national Statuary Hall, as a memorial for all time, the statue of John Winthrop, the first governor of the colony, the ancestor of him whom we honor to-day. He was of—

> The Pilgrim bands who crossed the sea to keep > Their Sabbaths in the eye of God alone
> In his wide temple of the wilderness.

Of the nineteen years he was in the colony from 1630 he was for twelve years governor, and his only reproof was for "overmuch lenity." In 1642 he gave aid and comfort to one La Tour, a Roman Catholic, and when sharply criticised therefor he responded:

> If there were not other sins which God may have a controversy with us for, I should little fear any harm from this.

But in 1642 began, under Winthrop in Massachusetts, the public-school system which has been, and will continue to be, a blessing beyond all price to the American people.

Robert C. Winthrop took up the proud heritage of an ancestry so renowned for noble deeds, and after a life well spent in the public service, hands it down to posterity, not only untarnished, but with added glory. Could a career be more fortunate?

It is the portrait of this man, in obedience to the wishes of his neighbors and fellow-citizens, men eminent in every profession and of all parties, I have the honor this day to commit to the reverent care of the House of Representatives, asking that it may take its place in the line of Speakers in the corridor of this Hall.

The inscription on the picture indicates that it is the desire of the donors to recognize Mr. Winthrop as a former Speaker of this House, and I feel honored to be privileged by the good people of the old Commonwealth to present through you, Mr. Speaker, and to my country this portrait of Robert C. Winthrop, a man known to us, and who will be remembered by those who are to follow us as the historian, the statesman, the ex-Senator and ex-Speaker, a gentleman who filled every position he ever held with such character and ability, whose utterances have become historical, that Massachusetts proudly boasts of him as one of her worthiest sons. [Loud applause.]

Mr. RANNEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise, sir, for the purpose of joining my esteemed colleague [Mr. MORSE] in the presentation of this portrait, and in the discharge of a grateful duty which has been assigned to us in common by the donors.

The famous poet, Lord Byron, probably in one of his cynical moods, once wrote:

> What is the end of Fame? 'tis but to fill
> A certain portion of uncertain paper;
> Some liken it to climbing up a hill,
> Whose summit, like all hills, is lost in vapor;
> For this men write, speak, preach, and heroes kill,
> And bards burn what they call their "midnight taper,"
> To have, when the original is dust,
> A name, a wretched picture, and worse bust.

However this may have been, sir, with others, the friends of Mr. Winthrop desire that it may not be thus with him. We have here, before his "original is dust," a picture, the gift of his admiring friends, whose action has been prompted and inspired by their "great respect and personal regard" for him; one which has been painted of him in his advanced age, but while still in the full vigor and plenitude of his powers; the work of a master's hand, true to the original and worthy of the artist. It is presented as a tribute by eminent citizens of Massachusetts, of all professions and parties.

Allusion has been made by my associate to the ancestry of Mr. Winthrop. But what is more and better than that in this country, he has won a name and fame which are peculiarly and all his own; and he may well be addressed, with a just pride, in the lines of Dryden:

> O true descendant of a patriot line,
> Vouchsafe this picture of thyself to see.

It is not intended, sir, to displace the one which now hangs upon the wall in the corridors of this Hall. That represents him, or is supposed to represent him, as he was when Speaker of this House, and serves exclusively as a memorial of that event and honor. This one comprehends that and much more, as will be seen by the inscription which is to be found upon the tablet of the same:

> Robert C. Winthrop,
> Speaker, 1847–'49; Senator, 1850–'1.
> Presented by citizens of Massachusetts
> After his Centennial Oration by appointment of Congress.
> At Yorktown, Virginia, 19th October, 1881.

Independently of all other associations, any one who shall in the future view this figure as it stands out, as if alive, upon this piece of canvas, will be impressed with and see only the incomparable Winthrop, the man of seventy-two years of age and over, with eyes undimmed, without any traces of decay, the orator, as he appeared when he stood at Yorktown and spoke on that memorable occasion, which will itself form a part of the history of this country.

In his felicitous letter written in reply to the invitation given him soliciting his assent to what was proposed to be done, Mr. Winthrop has himself embodied the idea of the portrait. He wrote:

> Yet I know not how to decline the invitation to allow my portrait to take its place, under such agreeable auspices, in the line of Speakers at Washington. No art, indeed, can obliterate the traces of the more than thirty years which have elapsed since it was my privilege, as a young man, to occupy the chair of the House of Representatives of the United States. But I may well be content that this early honor should be associated with my effort, as an old man, to illustrate the crowning triumph of our Revolutionary struggle, by the generous aid of France, on the occasion which has called forth so distinguished a compliment from my fellow-citizens and friends.

Mr. Speaker, this tribute is being paid to the living and not to the name of one who is dead. I have not indulged, I shall not indulge, in any eulogy, as Mr. Winthrop needs none and would desire none at my hands, or at the hands of any one else on this occasion. Nothing which could be said would add any new luster to his name. Yet I beg leave to remind the House that he is the last one surviving of that illustrious quaternion of orators and statesmen, Webster, Everett, Choate, and Winthrop, who have done and said so much of good for the State of Massachusetts and their country.

I might with equal propriety and truth say of him what I once heard him say of Everett while alive: "He needs no commendations here. His spotless character, his unrivaled accomplishments, his matchless eloquence, his ardent patriotism, are too familiar to us to require an allusion. But it is not here alone that he is known; it is not here alone that he is appreciated."

The events of Mr. Winthrop's career as member of this House, as Speaker thereof, as Senator in Congress, have passed into history. It is now some thirty years since he retired from active public life, but his services since then, in other fields of labor, have always been conspicuous, and perhaps none the less useful. This is not the time to recount, or to dwell upon them.

What his friends have contemplated, and what is now proposed is that this small tribute of respect and personal regard shall be completed upon this the scene of his earlier triumphs and honors, in what they and we believe to be a fitting recognition of the eminent services rendered by Mr. Winthrop to his country, as indicated, and to the end that this portrait may remain here as a perpetual memorial thereof. [Great applause.]

Mr. TUCKER. I do not think it necessary, Mr. Speaker, to detain the House by any extended remarks after what has been so appropriately said by the two Representatives from Massachusetts, [Mr. MORSE and Mr. RANNEY.]

A third of a century has passed away since Mr. Winthrop presided in the House of Representatives. He was Speaker at a memorable period in our history, when the war with Mexico was closing and the agitation of the Union consequent upon the acquisition of a vast domain was begun. I was a "looker-on in Vienna" at that period. I can well remember the grace, the dignity, and the justice that distinguished Mr. Speaker Winthrop as the presiding officer of this House. He was too much of a patriot to be an extreme partisan in the chair, and so true a gentleman as never to fail in that impartial courtesy to the members of the House which commanded the confidence and esteem of men of all parties and from every section of the country.

After a brief career in the Senate of the United States Mr. Winthrop has been in a large degree withdrawn from the public service. But he was fitly chosen to speak what patriotism would suggest at the centennial anniversary of our assured independence by the surrender of the British army at Yorktown.

In that splendid contribution to our centennial memories Mr. Winthrop has won the universal admiration of the people of the country, and has well merited that testimonial of the high esteem of his fellow-citizens of Massachusetts which has been tendered to this House by its Representatives to-day. As one of the Representatives of the Commonwealth of Virginia, on whose sacred soil the crowning victory of the Revolution was won, and which was so nobly illustrated in the oration of Mr. Winthrop, I beg leave to ask the immediate consideration and adoption by this House of the resolution which I now send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker be requested to inform the Hon. John D. Long, E. R. Hoar, and Samuel C. Cobb, a committee of citizens of Massachusetts, of the satisfaction with which this House has received their present of the portrait of Hon. Robert C. Winthrop, Speaker of the Thirtieth Congress, and to assure them it shall be placed and preserved among those of the other distinguished men who in times past have presided over the House of Representatives.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Speaker, I second, and most heartily second, the resolution offered by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. TUCKER.] Mr. Winthrop has long been my personal and intimate friend. When I entered Congress in December, 1843, I found him one of the distinguished leaders of the Whig party in this House. His most prominent associates were Daniel D. Barnard of New York, Samuel Vinton of Ohio, Joseph R. Ingersoll of Pennsylvania, Garrett Davis and John White of Kentucky, and some others whom I need not now mention. Winthrop was the central figure of them all. In parliamentary tactics he had no superior on the floor, not excepting George C. Dromgoole, of Virginia, the Democratic leader of the House at that time.

Besides this, he was one of the most accomplished gentlemen and scholarly legislators I ever met. During that Congress, the Twenty-eighth, the first that I was a member of, the agitation was great in the country upon the annexation of Texas and her admission as a State into the Union. Strong and unyielding opposition to this measure was manifested upon the part of most of the Northern Whigs, Mr. Winthrop standing prominent among the leaders of this opposition. After an exciting contest and acrimonious debate the measure was carried. Unusual excitement upon that subject prevailed in Massachusetts as well as with the Whigs in the North generally. Threats of disunion were made. It was in this state of affairs that Mr. Winthrop had the boldness and manliness, on the 4th of July, 1845, I think it was, to give a toast expressing sentiments not agreeable to a majority of his hearers, but which sent a thrill through the heart of the entire country and produced the conviction that he was a patriot of the highest order.

The sentiment was to this effect, (I quote from memory:) "Our country, however bounded, with whatever limits, is to be cherished in all our hearts and defended by all our arms." This toast was what made him Speaker. When the next Congress assembled in December, 1847, they had a Whig majority, and the Southern Whigs from Georgia, Virginia, North Carolina, Alabama, Florida, Louisiana, Tennessee, and Kentucky, appreciating the noble sentiment, rallied in solid phalanx in support of this distinguished son of Massachusetts for the Speakership of the House, which secured his triumphant election over the venerable and able Vinton, of Ohio, who had a strong and large following, as we say in modern times, in the Western States. The Southern Whigs sustained him zealously, not because they liked Mr. Vinton less, but Mr. Winthrop more. Mr. Winthrop was elected; and as stated by the gentleman from Virginia, he made a most accomplished Speaker, always impartial, always courteous, always respectful and urbane, discharging the duties of the Chair with amenity and ability rarely equaled. He still lives to enjoy the otium cum dignitate which is becoming the scholar, the patriot, and statesman, and by the discharge of the high trusts confided to him connected with the Peabody fund, he is adding new luster to his ancestral name, his State, and his country.

I heartily indorse the resolution of the gentleman from Virginia upon the reception of this presentation from gentlemen of Massachusetts. [Applause.]

The question being taken on the resolution of Mr. TUCKER, it was agreed to unanimously.

JAMES REA.

Mr. LORD. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 1128) to authorize the Secretary of State to allow for expenditures within named to James Rea, late consul at Belfast, Ireland.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized and instructed to allow to James Rea, late consul at Belfast, Ireland, for clerk hire and other expenses incurred by him as such consul, such sum as he may find just and equitable, not exceeding $1,500 per annum for the period during which he held the office of consul of the United States at Belfast; also the further sum of $600 expended by said Rea in boarding and defending certain destitute American seamen at Belfast while he was consul.

Mr. HOLMAN. Until some explanation of this bill is made, I desire to reserve the right to object.

Mr. SCALES. Does the bill come from any committee?

Mr. LORD. The bill has been unanimously reported to this House by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I send to the Clerk the Senate report in this case, which is brief and will afford considerable information in regard to the matter. I ask the Clerk to read the first page of the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee, after a careful examination, based upon the memorial of the petitioner and the letters of the Secretary of State, find that Mr. Rea was appointed the consul to Belfast on the 16th of April, 1869, and that he entered upon the duties of his office on the 3d day of August, 1869, and served until the 11th of August, 1873. That prior to the time of his taking the charge of said office, it was customary, with the knowledge of the State Department, for the officers of said consulate to charge fees for the preparation and verification of certain papers at a sum which, in the aggregate, amounted to from fifteen hundred to two thousand dollars per year in addition to the salary of $2,000 provided by law. In that way Mr. Rea's predecessor in office received as a compensation for his services, office rent, and clerk hire about $3,700 per annum. By the act of Congress approved March 3, 1869, the fees aforesaid were abolished, and the net receipts of the office were reduced to the sum of $2,200 per year. Adopting the consular invoice fees during Mr. Rea's incumbency of the office as a basis of computation, the amount he would have received, but for the prohibition of the statute aforesaid, would have been about the sum of $4,500. While Mr. Rea was consul as aforesaid no allowance was provided by law for clerk hire.

During the year following his retirement a provision for clerk hire not exceeding $1,500 per year was provided by law, and the salary of the consul was at the same time increased from $2,000 to $2,500 per year.

The duties of the office during Mr. Rea's incumbency required the assistance of one or more clerks, the compensation for which Mr. Rea was obliged to pay out of his own salary.

During Mr. Rea's incumbency he transmitted to the Treasury about 25 per cent. more fees and did about 25 per cent. more business than either his predecessor or successor in office.

Mr. LORD. Mr. Speaker, there is no claim against Mr. Rea in this case, except a nominal one. We have letters from the present and the late Secretary of State saying there is no claim against him in equity. The fees upon which he depended for clerk hire, with the knowledge of the State Department were cut off; and about the time of his retiring from office $500 was added to the salary of the consul and $1,500 for other expenses. It so happened that Mr. Rea did not get the advantage either of the provision for clerk hire or of these additional allowances. The bill passed the Senate, I believe unanimously, and has been unanimously reported to this House by the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ATHERTON. I object.

Mr. LORD. I do not believe the gentleman would object if he knew the circumstances of the case.

Mr. KNOTT. I appeal to my friend from Ohio [Mr. ATHERTON] to withdraw his objection. This case has been twice examined by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio insist on his objection?

Mr. ATHERTON. I do.

EUGENE B. ALLEN.

Mr. ARMFIELD. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table and put upon its passage the bill (S. No. 1120) for the relief of Eugene B. Allen.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to Eugene B. Allen, of Leavenworth, Kansas, the sum of $25,753.94, for losses sustained by said Allen growing out of a contract made on the 24th day of June, in the year 1878, between the said Eugene B. Allen and E. A. Hoyt, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, by which said Allen agreed to furnish and deliver beef-cattle at Red Cloud and Spotted Tail agencies, in the Territory of Dakota.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order.

ELECTION CONTEST—STROBACH VS. HERBERT.

Mr. RANNEY. I rise to submit a privileged report—the report of the Committee on Elections on the contested-election case of Strobach vs. Herbert, from the second district of Alabama. I ask that the resolution appended to the report be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That contestant be allowed to withdraw his contest without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RANNEY] desire the present consideration of this report?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, sir. It is a unanimous report.

The question being taken, the resolution reported by the Committee on Elections was adopted.

Mr. RANNEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ALABAMA CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. I rise to make a privileged report from the Committee on Elections.

Mr. WILSON. The gentleman yields to me.

Mr. MONEY. The demand for the regular order has been withdrawn by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LYNCH. The gentleman who has the floor yields to me to call up a bill.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will be recognized one at a time. The question before the house is the privileged report from the Committee on Elections.

Mr. ATHERTON. I withdraw my objection to the bill of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. LORD.]

The SPEAKER. The question before the House is the resolutions reported by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. THOMPSON.]

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. I have been directed by the Committee on Elections to submit a report, accompanied by a resolution, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Charles M. Shelley was not elected as a Representative to the Forty-seventh Congress from the fourth Congressional district of Alabama, and is not entitled to retain the seat he now occupies in this House.

Resolved, That James Q. Smith was duly elected as a Representative from the fourth Congressional district of Alabama to the Forty-seventh Congress, and having deceased, the seat is declared vacant.

The SPEAKER. The report will be ordered to be printed and laid over.

JAMES REA.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the demand for the regular order of business has been withdrawn by the gentleman from Ohio, and that objection is withdrawn from the consideration of the Senate bill called up by the gentleman from Michigan for the relief of James Rea.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the report of the House committee be printed in the RECORD, if it has not been read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand the report of the committee was read.

Mr. SPRINGER. No; only a portion of the Senate report was read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the report of the House committee will be printed in the RECORD.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the memorial of James Rea, of Chicago, Illinois, late United States consul at Belfast, Ireland, present the following report:

The United States has brought suit against Mr. Rea and his sureties on his official bond, to recover an alleged balance of $4,434, which suit is now pending under a temporary stay of proceedings by order of the Attorney-General to allow the memorialist to apply to Congress for such relief as may be just.

The committee, after a thorough examination of the papers submitted to them, are of the opinion that while Mr. Rea has no defense to the action now pending which a court of law would be authorized to receive and allow, yet there are items in his accounts of expenditures made by him in discharge of his official duties which should be allowed according to principles of justice and equity, which should greatly reduce, if not entirely discharge, the balance claimed against him.

Mr. Rea was appointed on the 16th of April, 1869, and took charge of the consulate on the 3d of the following August, and remained as such consul until the 7th day of August, 1873.

In the latter part of the year 1869, the German bark Oberbergermeister von Winter, Captain Carl Richard Schmidt, master, arrived at Belfast with a crew of eight American seamen—citizens of the United States. These seamen had been hired by Captain Schmidt in New York for the round voyage to Belfast and back. Upon arriving in Belfast Captain Schmidt repudiated his contract with them, forcibly put them off his ship, and turned them adrift in the streets without money or the chance of reshipment, there being a plethora of unemployed men in Belfast and no American vessel in port.

In this condition these seamen applied to the United States consul for assistance. The vessel being a German vessel, and the master German, the consul had no jurisdiction over them, but believing that the German consul would take jurisdiction and see that the seamen were protected in their rights, Mr. Rea laid the case before him. After frequent and persistent efforts to obtain redress for them from the German consul without success, Mr. Rea was advised and did bring the case before the Irish court of admiralty in Dublin, which court dismissed the suit on a demurrer to its jurisdiction on the part of the German consul and referred it back to him for adjudication. The court of admiralty, when all the parties are foreigners, will entertain jurisdiction or dismiss the case in its discretion.

The expenses paid by Mr. Rea for the board, lodging, and the necessary disbursements of the admiralty proceedings, amounted in the aggregate to £120 9s. 4d.

The laws of the United States do not provide for the payment by a consul of expenditures of this kind, however equitable and just they may be. Yet an American consul who failed to do all in his power to protect and redress American seamen, although shipped in a foreign vessel, when wrongfully discharged and left destitute in a foreign port, should receive the censure of the Government.

This is one of the items of credit which is disallowed.

Mr. Rea's predecessor has received as compensation for his services, office rent, and clerk hire, $3,700, or thereabouts. In 1869 certain fees that had been received prior to that time by consuls, and allowed for clerk hire and incidentals not otherwise provided for, were prohibited, reducing the compensation and office-rent to $2,200, a sum entirely inadequate for the service required at this port.

Upon this subject the committee have received the following letter and tabulated statement from the office of the Fifth Auditor of the Treasury:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIFTH AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
April 9, 1878.

GENTLEMEN: Referring to the memorial of James Rea, LL. D., late United States counsel at Belfast, a copy of which has been submitted to me, I beg to state—

That my official position, being in charge of the auditing of the accounts of all our consuls abroad, made me fully aware of the duties and difficulties of his position.

That the duties involved were entirely beyond the power of any one person to perform without the assistance of one or more clerks.

That for such assistance he had to pay out of his own salary of $2,000 a year, there being, during the time he was in office, no other provision for this purpose. Certain charges made by his predecessors in addition to the fees returned to the Government, and used for payment of clerk hire and other disbursements, were, about the time he entered upon his duties, prohibited by law. I know of no other case where the disparity was so great between the duties of the position and the compensation, all other consulates with the same business having a larger salary, and in most cases $1,000 a year additional from consular agencies under them. This will more clearly appear by a reference to the accompanying tabulated statement.

That this case was the subject of several conversations between the undersigned and the late Secretary of State, Hon. Hamilton Fish; that the latter, upon ascertaining the amount of fees collected and remitted to the Treasury, expressed earnest sympathy with Dr. Rea, and did all in his power to have a measure passed by Congress for his relief; that the Senate, in successive sessions, passed bills which would have afforded him the relief he needed, but they failed to pass the House; that the undersigned wrote Dr. Rea letters from time to time in reference to the measures which were being taken for his relief, which he hoped would eventuate successfully, but they did not—at least not in time to be of any practical benefit to him, (Dr. Rea,) who was recalled in the summer of 1873. The session of the winter of 1873–'74, however, passed the much-needed measure, increasing the salary of his successor by $500 per annum, and appropriating $1,500 for clerk-hire, which law is still in force.

Further, Dr. Rea was one of the most faithful, honest, and patriotic consuls in the service. His accounts were promptly and correctly rendered, and his remittances to the bankers in London were larger than those of his predecessors or successor in office.

I trust, therefore, I may be excused from expressing the hope that Congress will pass such a measure of relief as will, in justice and equity, reimburse the expenses which he incurred in the discharge of his official duties while in the service of his Government.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

GEORGE COWIE,
Chief of the Consular Bureau.

*Made up of a fee of 25 cents allowed to the consul upon each official transaction, over and above the legal fee, which was turned into the Treasury; repealed in 1869.

†Emolument derived from agencies; this consulate also enjoyed the 25-cent fee same as Belfast previous to July, 1869.

‡From agencies.

§Act giving 20 per cent. on salary for office rent went into effect July 1, 1873.

‖Act allowing $1,500 a year for clerk hire went into effect July 1, 1874.

From the foregoing statement it will be seen that during Dr. Rea's incumbency of the Belfast consulate he transmitted to the Treasury about 25 per cent. more fees, and consequently did 25 per cent. more business, than either his predecessor or successor in office, while his salary and allowances were $1,500 per annum less than those of his predecessor, and $2,300 less than his successor receives; in other words, his predecessor for doing 25 per cent. less work received $1,500 per annum more pay, and his successor for doing 25 per cent. less work receives $2,300 per annum more pay than Dr. Rea did.

It will also be seen that during the years of Dr. Rea's incumbency of the Belfast consulate its business was about equal to that of Birmingham, yet the latter received $1,550 per annum in excess of the former; that Leith, with only half the duties of Belfast, received also $1,550 per annum more than Belfast; that Leeds, with only one-fifth of the duties of Belfast, received $1,000 a year more than the latter, while Cork, with only one-eighth of the duties, received the same salary and allowances as Belfast.

It will also be seen that Dr. Rea's remittances of fees to the Treasury during his incumbency were over $2,000 per annum greater than the amounts forwarded by either his predecessor or successor in office, so that after reimbursing him all his expenses and outlay in the service of his Government there will still remain to his credit on the books of the Department a large margin as compared with the returns of either his predecessor or successor in office.

The committee also annex copies of letters of the late Secretary of State, Mr. Evarts, of dates January 26 and February 9, 1880, and of the present Secretary of State, Mr. Frelinghuysen, of February 24, 1882, all of which letters approve the equity of the claim under consideration.

Under these circumstances the committee recommend that the Secretary of State be authorized to settle and adjust with Mr. Rea his consular accounts, making such allowances as he may deem just and reasonable, and for this purpose they recommend the passage of the accompanying joint resolution.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 26, 1880.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 20th instant. It relates to your letter of the 13th instant, in reference to the claim of Mr. James Rea, formerly consul at Belfast, Ireland, and submits certain questions upon which you desire information.

In reply I have to say that Mr. Rea was appointed consul at Belfast on April 16, 1869. By the act of Congress approved March 3, 1869, it was provided that the fee for the verification of invoices should be in full payment for furnishing blank forms of declaration and for making, signing, and sealing the consular certificate; and that any consular officer who, under pretense of charging for blank forms, advice, or clerical services in the preparation of the declaration or certificate, should charge or receive any greater fee, should be punishable with fine and imprisonment. Previous to the date when that act took effect it was known to the Department that it was customary with consular officers to charge a small fee for postage and for the preparation of the papers connected with the verification of an invoice, including the declaration and certificate, and in many cases the preparation of the invoices. The usual charge for this service is understood to have been about the equivalent of twenty-five cents.

The ground for this custom, no doubt, was that, except as to the preparation of the consular certificate, the statutes seem to contemplate that the invoices and the declaration of the shippers thereto shall be brought to the consulate already prepared for the affixing of the consular certificate, and that it is not a part of the consul's duty himself to prepare these papers. This view had been concurred in by the Department, but upon the passage of the act adverted to, a circular instruction was addressed to consular officers, calling attention to its provisions and directing that they should be complied with. Mr. Rea took charge of the consulate on the 3d of August, 1869, and delivered the office to his successor on the 11th of August, 1873. Taking the consular invoice fees during Mr. Rea's incumbency as a basis of computation, the amount of the income to him from the additional twenty-five cents would, in the absence of the prohibitory statute, have been about $4,500 during the period.

While Mr. Rea was consul at Belfast no allowance was provided for clerk hire. Provision, however, was made by Congress in the year following his retirement to an amount not exceeding $1,500 a year, of which $1,200 was allowed by the Department. The salary of the consulate was at the same time also increased from $2,000 to $2,500 a year, and since that time an allowance of $300 a year has been provided by statute for the expense of shipping seamen at the consulate. None of these allowances were provided for while Mr. Rea held the office.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

WM. M. EVARTS.

Hon. CHARLES G. WILLIAMS,
Of the Committee on the Judiciary, House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 9, 1880.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 6th instant in further reference to the claim of Mr. James Rea, late consul at Belfast, for relief, now before the Judiciary Committee. In reply I have to say that it is believed that the letter addressed to you under date of the 26th ultimo on this subject contained the views of the Department on the facts in the case of Mr. Rea. It appeared therefrom that in consequence of the act of Congress passed shortly before Mr. Rea's appointment he was prohibited from receiving a part of what had theretofore been the compensation of the office, and that the allowance for clerkship and the increased salary of the consulate, both of which have been subsequently made on the recommendation of the Department, were not available during Mr. Rea's incumbency. It was stated that by the Department's computation the difference in compensation amounted at least to $4,500.

These facts were submitted to you for the information of the committee in order that such equities as the case may have might receive such attention as the committee should think proper to give them.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

WM. M. EVARTS.

Hon. CHARLES G. WILLIAMS,
Of the Committee on the Judiciary, House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 24, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to return herein the papers relative to the claim of James Rea, late consul at Belfast, which you left at the Department with a request for copies of such letters as had been addressed to the committee of Congress having the matter under consideration by my predecessors on the subject. In compliance with this request, I send you inclosed copies of the letters addressed to Hon. CHARLES G. WILLIAMS, of the Committee on the Judiciary, dated January 26, 1880, and February 9, 1880.

To the statements made in these letters I desire to add that, although there has been no material increase in the business of the office since Mr. Rea's incumbency, the salary was immediately after his retirement increased from $2,000 to $2,500; $1,200 was allowed for clerk hire and $300 for the expense of shipping seamen, aggregating $4,000 for the salary and expenses of the office, while Mr. Rea was allowed but $2,000.

From a consideration of all the facts bearing on the matter, I am inclined to the belief that the claim of Mr. Rea is a just one, and as such I recommend its favorable consideration by the committee having it in charge.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

FREDERICK T. FRELINGHUYSEN.

Hon. HENRY W. LORD, House of Representatives.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the bill be again read.

The bill was again read.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. ATHERTON. I demand a division on the passage of the bill.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 101, noes 9.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. LORD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROTESTANT ORPHAN ASYLUM OF NATCHEZ, MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. LYNCH. I ask by unanimous consent that the bill (S. No. 1939) for the relief of the Protestant orphan asylum of Natchez, in the State of Mississippi, be taken from the Speaker's table and put on its passage at this time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the accounting officers of the Treasury be authorized and required to audit, settle, and pay the claim of the Protestant orphan asylum of the city of Natchez for the use and occupation of the property of the said asylum by the United States military authorities during the late war: Provided, That the amount allowed shall not exceed the sum of $1,750, nor shall any allowance be made for any damage done to said property during such use or occupation, or otherwise.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the gentleman from Mississippi to make some explanation of the bill.

Mr. LYNCH. In the Forty-fourth Congress——

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Has that bill been considered by a committee of this House?

Mr. LYNCH. It has been.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. What is the report?

Mr. LYNCH. I will explain it in a minute.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Let the report be read.

Mr. LYNCH. I will explain it. A bill was introduced in the Forty-fourth Congress——

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. The Chair will understand the right of objection is not waived.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that objection is reserved.

Mr. LYNCH. The report was made in the Forty-fourth Congress unanimously, but the bill failed to pass in that Congress. It did not allow damages whatever, but appropriated $1,750 for occupancy of the building by the Federal forces during the war. It was reintroduced and was referred to the Committee on War Claims of the present House. This bill as it passed the Senate is the identical bill which was reported to the Forty-fourth Congress, and the report is the identical report submitted to the Senate at this time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from Mississippi will explain what this money is for. The War Claims Committee of this Congress has not acted on it. The gentleman from Mississippi ought to explain what the appropriation of this money is for.

Mr. LYNCH. The petition asked for $10,000 for damage to and for the occupancy of the building by Federal forces during the war.

Mr. WILSON. What building?

Mr. LYNCH. The orphan asylum building. It was occupied by the Federal forces——

Mr. ATKINS. Where is this building?

Mr. LYNCH. At Natchez. It was occupied by the Federal forces during the war, and the committee, although they allowed nothing for damages, thought that something should be allowed for the use of the building in the way of rent, and therefore recommended that the sum of $1,750 be allowed.

Mr. HOLMAN. They made that allowance in consideration of the character of the persons for whose benefit it was given?

Mr. MONEY. Exactly.

Mr. HOLMAN. This money is to go to the benefit of the orphan asylum?

Mr. LYNCH. Exclusively.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the bill, which was not distinctly understood when it was read, be again reported to the House, so that the House may be clearly informed that it does not contemplate or involve the question of damages, and that this is simply in the nature of a gratuity, and does not rest upon the footing of a legal demand upon the Government for damages.

Mr. HAZELTON. If there is a report from any committee of this House I would like to know what it is.

Mr. LYNCH. There is no report from a House committee of the present Congress.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be again read, at the request of the gentleman.

The bill was again read.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I understand the gentleman from Mississippi to say that this bill has been reported by a committee of this House unanimously?

Mr. LYNCH. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Let that report be read.

Mr. LYNCH. Not a report made at the present Congress. It was made in the Forty-fourth Congress.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that no report has been made from any committee during the present Congress with reference to this subject.

Mr. WILSON. I hope the gentleman from Michigan will not object to this.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Has this been considered by a committee of this House?

Mr. LYNCH. Not yet; it is now before the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I object, then, to its present consideration.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand the regular order.

Mr. COBB. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon the demand for the regular order.

Mr. HAZELTON. I want to ask the change of reference of a bill.

The SPEAKER. The demand for the regular order will cut off all requests for unanimous consent.

Mr. PAGE. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAGE. I desire to send to the Clerk's desk to be read, from the Committee on Commerce, the following paper——

Mr. COBB. I understand that there is no objection, Mr. Speaker, to the presentation of the request that I now desire to submit.

The SPEAKER. The regular order cuts off all requests for unanimous consent.

Mr. COBB. I understand that has been withdrawn. This bill simply provides for granting condemned ordnance——

Mr. CALKINS. I hope there will be no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must recognize the demand for the regular order. The gentleman from California is recognized.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. PAGE. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to submit the following for adoption:

The Committee on Commerce, after careful investigation and consideration, desire to submit the following statement and request to the House:

On Monday, the 19th instant, by unanimous consent, Mr. REAGAN, of Texas, representing the Committee on Commerce, moved to suspend the rules and pass House bill (H. R. No. 5669) to regulate immigration. The bill which he offered was handed to him by Mr. VAN VOORHIS, of New York, and purported to be the bill agreed to by the Committee on Commerce. Mr. REAGAN and the members of the committee present were misled in regard to the bill which was passed, they supposing it to be a true copy of the bill agreed to by the committee. The committee recommend and ask that the House by unanimous consent do substitute the true bill, now in possession of the committee, for the one passed.

I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to ask unanimous consent that this bill which I send to the desk, which is an original copy of the bill agreed to by the committee, be passed in lieu of the bill returned from the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state——

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I object.

Mr. PAGE. Let it be passed first.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the bill to regulate immigration passed under a suspension of the rules, and was sent to the Senate; but at the request of the House——

Mr. PAGE. I desire to make a suggestion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman in a moment. The bill was sent back at the request of the House by the Senate, and is now in possession of the House. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the vote by which this bill was passed shall now be rescinded. Is there objection?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I object.

Mr. McLANE. I rise to a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McLANE. I desire to inquire of the Chair whether the motion of the gentleman from California is not a privileged motion, and therefore not susceptible to objection? I would submit to the Chair that it is. The gentleman from California presents a question of the very highest privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state that the request of the gentleman from California may be in its character a privileged question; but to rescind the action of the House with reference to the passage of a bill by a two-thirds vote, under a suspension of the rules, cannot be a privileged motion, because no motion can be entertained to rescind it. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. McLANE. That is not the point I submit, if the Chair pleases. I understand that the motion of the gentleman from California is open to objection; but I rise to call the attention of the Speaker and of the honorable gentleman from California——

Mr VAN VOORHIS. I desire to be heard upon this as a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland is entitled to the floor.

Mr. McLANE. I did not mean, and do not now mean, to interfere with the motion of the gentleman from California, [Mr. PAGE.] He has made his statement to the House and has made his motion, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN VOORHIS] objects. But I submit that the statement which has just been read by the Clerk raises a question of privilege under the ninth rule. That statement from the committee represents that the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN VOORHIS] imposed upon the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] a false representation; that he imposed upon him a bill alleging that it was a bill which had received the indorsement of the Committee on Commerce; and the statement made by the chairman of that committee is to the effect that it was not that bill. Now I submit to the Chair that statement raises the very highest question of privilege; and it is the duty of the House to proceed to dispose of the question raised by that statement and maintain the integrity of its proceedings.

Mr. COX, of New York. I rise to a parliamentary question.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state, in order that there may be no misunderstanding——

Mr. COX, of New York. If the Chair will allow me I should like the House to understand from the Speaker what is the condition of the bill which the House passed by a two-thirds vote, and which the House recalled from the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state in answer to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLANE] that it does not rule that the statement that was sent up does not present a question of privilege. But that statement is in explanation only of the action of the Committee on Commerce. To that extent it is the right of the gentleman from California, as the Chair thinks, to present it. But it does not go beyond that, because the committee has the right to make an explanation that does not vacate the vote of the House in passing the bill. The Chair thinks that can only be vacated by unanimous consent.

Mr. CARLISLE. On that very point I wish to make a suggestion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. CARLISLE. I presume under the rules of the House there is no regular way to get rid of that vote of the House, because the time for reconsideration prescribed by the rules has lapsed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest whether a motion to reconsider could be interposed at any time——

Mr. CARLISLE. Because passed under a motion to suspend the rules. But, sir, I submit to the Chair it is by no means necessary to rescind that vote. This House has the right, as every other legislative assembly has the right, to pass two bills on the same subject if it desires to do so. That vote may stand and will not preclude the House from passing a bill containing what it considers proper provisions on this subject. And even though both bills should go to the Senate the Senate would take up and act on that bill which expressed the sense of the House. So the motion made by the gentleman from California to rescind the vote by which this bill was passed is entirely unnecessary in any parliamentary view.

Mr. PAGE. I will state to the gentleman that I do not move to rescind the vote of the House, but I move to pass the other bill.

Mr. CARLISLE. Then all this House has to do is to exercise its highest privilege to correct by its vote in passing the correct bill the error made in the passage of the former bill, and to send the corrected bill to the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is no difficulty about this. In the opinion of the Chair to rescind the action of the House in passing this bill would require unanimous consent. But the Chair agrees with the gentleman from Kentucky, that the fact this bill has passed does not cut off the House from passing any other bill on the same subject; and the Chair thinks without further action of the House this bill would remain here and not go back to the Senate. It has gone once there, and having been once recalled the officers of the House, without the action of the House, would never send it back again. [Mr. PAGE rose.] The gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN VOORHIS] claims the right to address the Chair.

Mr. PAGE. I have not yet yielded the floor. Having had the floor by recognition of the Chair on a question of privilege, I desire that the Chair will allow me to make a brief statement.

I desire simply to state to the House, without intending to reflect on anybody, and without doing so at all, that if the Committee on Commerce finds it is embarrassed or annoyed at all by the action of the House on Monday of last week, it arises from the fact that some of its members yielded to the earnest solicitations of the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN VOORHIS] without having a formal meeting of the committee, but merely consulting on the floor, and did present through the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] a bill which he supposed and which all the members of the Committee on Commerce supposed to be the bill that had been adopted unanimously by that committee, and which it had instructed the gentleman from New York, [Mr. RICHARDSON,] a member of the committee, to report to the House. Knowing the bill was important to the people of the United States, and particularly to the people of the State of New York, at the earnest solicitation of its Representatives upon this floor the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] representing the committee, reported what he supposed to be the bill adopted by the committee, and asked unanimous consent to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill. I, myself, was not consulted, because I did not happen to be in the House at the time, but came in while it was under consideration, and I made a few remarks favoring the bill. The bill as it passed was not the bill the committee could have reported under any circumstances. One whole section was stricken out, or a whole section was restored which had been stricken out, and an amendment or substitute put in its place by the committee.

I deem it just the House should consent to pass the bill as it was agreed to by the committee and let that bill go to the Senate. The Committee on Commerce could not afford to allow the bill which passed by the vote of the House to go to the Senate as the bill the committee had adopted, because they had almost unanimously rejected that bill, or had rejected some of its provisions, substituting others in their place. They could not afford to allow that bill to go as authorized by the committee because it was stated by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] my colleague, that it was the unanimous report of the Committee on Commerce, he believing conscientiously that statement was true and borne out by the facts.

I therefore ask, without reflecting upon any gentleman, without intimating that there was any desire on the part of the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN VOORHIS] to deceive the Committee on Commerce or the House, that the House now do justice to itself and to the Committee on Commerce by passing the bill which was agreed upon by that committee and let it go to the Senate.

Mr. HOOKER. Allow me to make a suggestion to the gentleman from California, [Mr. PAGE,] after what has fallen from the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. CARLISLE.] As I understand it, according to original parliamentary law, you cannot pass at the same session two bills upon the same subject-matter. Yet in all deliberative bodies governed by ordinary parliamentary rules, a supplementary or explanatory bill can be introduced and passed to correct any error or mistake in a former bill. Therefore the Committee on Commerce has it perfectly within its power to report an explanatory or supplementary bill, in just the form they may desire to have such legislation passed.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. For the last week the newspaper press of the country has been filled with publications such as I now send to the Clerk's desk to be read. I do not blame the newspapers, because the falsehoods contained in them have emanated from some member or members of the Commerce Committee of this House.

There was never a falser charge made than that I designed to deceive anybody in the passage of a bill of such momentous importance to the country. I send to the Clerk's desk the Chicago Tribune of Saturday last, and ask him to read an article I have marked therein as a specimen brick of the particular kind of bricks that have been hurled at me since the 19th of this month.

The Clerk read as follows:

The action in the House of Representatives Wednesday concerning the bill to regulate immigration is a striking instance of the folly and danger of hasty legislation. A bill on that subject was proposed by Mr. VAN VOORHIS, of Rochester, New York, which, when examined by a committee, was pronounced radically defective, and was amended in its most vital parts. The committee directed that the bill in its amended form be reported, and that the House be asked to suspend the rules and pass the bill, a legislative operation which requires but one vote. Mr. VAN VOORHIS, disliking the character of the amendments made to his bill, dexterously substituted his original bill for the one prepared by the committee, and the House unwittingly passed the bogus bill. Of course it was not read, though several speeches were made on the subject, and the bill was passed with hardly any opposition. Next day the fraud was discovered, and the Senate was asked to return the bill. The action of Mr. VAN VOORHIS was criminal, and though his purpose was merely to defeat the action of those who differed from him, it was a high-handed outrage for which no satisfactory apology can be offered. Most of the scandalous and dishonest legislation during past years was enacted in this labor-saving process of legislation. The famous act of 1873 demonetizing silver was proposed as a substitute for a pending bill, and without being read was passed by the House without opposition. The effect of that bill was not known except to a few for nearly three years after its passage. It ought to be an imperative rule that no act should be passed in either House of Congress without having been first printed and at least once read in full. Certainly no act should be passed under a suspension of the rules by a single vote without having been read or printed, or both.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. The provision of this bill which is complained of was one of the highest public concern. I believe that every patriotic member of this House, if he will read that bill, and examine the authorities and the facts, would say that the fourth section ought to be passed exactly as it is. The New York Evening Post said the other day that if the committee did not recommend that section they ought to have recommended it.

There was no motive on my part to deceive anybody. There was no money in the bill; there was no politics in it. It was simply a question of public benefit and public good.

Now, lest my voice shall give out before I am through, I will send to the Clerk's desk a brief statement of all I had to do with that bill, and then I will make some remarks concerning the charges which have been brought against me. I stand here ready to defend myself against the Committee on Commerce and all comers. I do not fear the face of a mortal man in this House on such a question as this. No man here can impugn my veracity or my integrity and get out of this House unrebuked. I ask the Clerk to read the statement I have sent up.

The Clerk read as follows:

"On the 6th of April last I introduced in the House a bill entitled 'A bill to regulate immigration.' I introduced it by direction of the New York delegation in Congress, under the following circumstances: the delegation held a meeting at the Hamilton House and spent an evening in consultation over the immigration question. They agreed upon the kind of bill that ought to be drawn, and appointed a committee of five to draft a bill, which committee made Hon. ABRAM S. HEWITT and myself a sub-committee for that purpose. We drew a bill which met the approval of every member of the New York delegation so far as I know, and upon their direction I introduced it in the House and it was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

"The chief features of the bill were, first, the laying of a duty of fifty cents on each immigrant, upon the steamship companies which bring them into the country. Second, an inspection of the immigrants upon their arrival on board the ships, to ascertain whether there are any paupers, lunatics, or criminals, &c., and to prohibit the landing of such persons from the ships. The effect of this provision would be, of course, to oblige the vessels to carry them back at their own expense. Third, a provision for the return to the countries which sent them here of such paupers, lunatics, criminals, &c., as might elude the vigilance of the authorities and get in the country, or might come here by way of Canada. It is well known that there are systematic and organized movements to send paupers, &c., from European countries and get them into the United States through the gateway of Canada, thus relieving the European countries from their support and entailing it upon us. Fourth, a provision that the expense of returning such persons as the vessels bringing them cannot be made to return upon the fund raised by the head-money tax, and then charging it upon the countries which sent such persons here.

"The further provisions of the bill are not important, except that the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to make such rules and regulations as should execute the law.

"I was anxious for speedy action on the part of the committee, supposing the committee would report back the bill without material amendment, and that prompt consideration might be secured in the House. I called a number of times at the committee-room, and learned that they were so busy upon the river and harbor bill that they could not take this bill up until that was disposed of. I supposed, inasmuch as it was known that this bill originated with the New York delegation, that I would be notified if any amendments were proposed. I received no such notice, but saw by telegraphic report on a day when I was absent from Washington that the committee had reported the bill. I returned on Monday, June 12, and on making inquiry learned that Mr. RICHARDSON was authorized to report the bill, and that he had gone home. Mr. RICHARDSON returned to Washington Friday, the 16th instant, and I saw him Saturday, the next day, and asked him about the bill, and he said he had left it with Mr. WASHBURN to report in his absence. I told him I would like to see the bill, as I had heard it had been amended. He got it and showed it to me, and I told him I wanted to go before the committee and ask them to restore the fourth section substantially as it was in the original bill.

"The committee had stricken out from that section all the persons to be returned except convicts, and also that portion which allowed the expense in the first instance to be paid out of the head-money tax. I had been strenuous upon this point. My attention had been very pointedly called to it by President Anderson, for many years a member of the New York State board of charities, and by others who have given the subject of pauperism in this country much study and attention and who have frequently urged the necessity of such legislation. The other changes were chiefly verbal, some words being erased in the first and second sections, to which I gave no attention. Mr. RICHARDSON said there would be no meeting until Tuesday. I told him I wanted, if possible, to get the bill up for passage on Monday. He advised me to go and consult Mr. REAGAN about the amendments, saying that REAGAN had taken considerable interest in the bill and in having it amended. Mr. RICHARDSON then gave me the bill for the purpose of my consulting Mr. REAGAN about it.

"As soon as I could find Mr. REAGAN disengaged on Saturday I went to his seat and told him I understood he had taken an interest in the bill, and that I wanted to get the fourth section restored to its original shape. He said the committee thought the fourth section was designed to pay the steamship companies out of the head-money tax for the paupers they carried back, so that they would be paid twice. I explained to him that that was not so. I told him that the persons who were not permitted to land would not get into the country, and that therefore there would be no occasion to send them out of the country. I told him the object he had could be made perfectly certain by adding to the second section the words "but shall be returned in such vessels to the countries whence they came at the expense of the owners of such vessels." He said that would make that portion of the bill entirely satisfactory. I told him the object of the fourth section was to reach paupers, lunatics, criminals, &c., who got into the country through Canada, or through American ports by eluding the vigilance of the officials. He said that view of the section had never been presented to the committee, and that he agreed with me exactly as to the object to be accomplished.

"I told him that I would take a printed copy of the original bill and put it in shape to meet the views that he and I had concurred in, and present it to him. On that occasion I had no bill, and Mr. REAGAN saw none except the bill that Mr. RICHARDSON had handed to me. I felt very much encouraged as to the passage of the bill, in suitable shape, after this interview.

"After that interview I was called upon in my committee-room by a gentleman connected with the New York Herald, who informed me that there was much excitement in New York over the delay in passing the immigration bill, and that the New York Herald of that day had a strong editorial in relation to it. I answered some questions which he put to me about it, and told him the substance of my conversation with Mr. REAGAN, and it appeared in the Herald of the next day, in its Washington dispatches. Speaking of the committee's amendments, the Herald of Sunday, June 18, says:

"Mr. VAN VOORHIS says that the committee had acted without consulting him. He has seen the members of the committee, however, and has assurance that the sections relating to deaf and dumb, blind, maimed, and infirm persons will be restored; and that in reference to returning all persons accused of other than political offenses, or persons suffering from mental alienation, Mr. VAN VOORHIS says: 'I am certain that the bill will be restored to its original shape, and that it will be called up and passed on Monday. The committee acted unadvisedly, but I have seen the gentleman who proposed the amendments, and have shown him the importance of the measure, its operations, and its results. He has agreed to withdraw the amendments.'

"This reporter did not use my language altogether, but he has stated the substance of what I told him. I had at that time had but little conversation with any member of the committee except Mr. REAGAN. This interview was within an hour after I had the talk with Mr. REAGAN. I have seen this reporter, and he informs me that I told him Mr. REAGAN was the gentleman I referred to, and that is my recollection. I certainly based the view I gave to the reporter upon my conversation with Mr. REAGAN less than an hour before. I went to Mr. REAGAN because I knew he had caused this bill to be amended, and I wanted, if I could, to make him see the matter as I did.

"I refer to this statement in the New York Herald to show that I had had a conversation with Mr. REAGAN on Saturday, and that he had agreed to restore the bill substantially to its original form.

"On Monday morning I took a printed copy of the original bill and put it in the shape that Mr. REAGAN and I had agreed upon. I put into it all the amendments that the committee had agreed upon in the first section except that I did not erase one or two sentences which the committee had erased. I added to the second section the words that we had agreed upon. I made the fourth section read as the original bill did, inserting the word "paupers," which had been left out by the printer. I also interlined the words "who are a public charge," it not being intended to send back any one except those who were a public charge. After doing this I went to the House, but Mr. RICHARDSON was absent. I asked to be recognized immediately upon the reading of the Journal for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to consider the bill, but did not get such consent. I then went to Mr. REAGAN, and we sat upon a sofa and examined the two bills.

"I had there, and gave to Mr. REAGAN, the bill that Mr. RICHARDSON had given to me, and also the proposed bill that I had prepared, which I have already said was substantially the original bill. He read it through, and discovered in comparing the two bills that the erasures in the first section had not been made. I went to my desk and got a pen, and he erased the words in the first section to make them correspond with the erasures of the committee. He read the second section and said it was all right. The third section had never been changed. He read the fourth section and said that the words "on arrival in this country" ought to be added to the interlineation in that section, to which I assented, and wrote them in in his presence, so that the clause read "who are a public charge on their arrival in this country." He then said "If you will show that to some other members of the committee and they assent to it, I will report the bill in that shape."

"I had previously asked him if he would not make the report in Mr. RICHARDSON'S absence, and he agreed to. He asked me to show the bill to Mr. WASHBURN and Mr. TOWNSEND. I did so, and explained to them briefly that Mr. REAGAN and I had agreed to the bill in that form and he would report it if they assented. They did so, and I informed Mr. REAGAN thereof. Up to this time there had been no suggestion that Mr. REAGAN would move the passage of the bill, but only that he should report it from the committee. I treated him as representing the committee. He took the bill and handed me the Richardson copy, which I retained, and said he would watch his opportunity and report as soon as he could.

"I left Mr. REAGAN and went elsewhere.

"I felt anxious that this bill should pass that day if possible, and a little while afterward I went again to Mr. REAGAN and asked him if he could not get the consent of the Committee on Commerce to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill. I told him Mr. RICHARDSON was absent, and such a motion could only be made by a member of the Committee on Commerce. Mr. REAGAN said he would do so if the members of the committee on the floor of the House would consent. I went with him to Mr. TOWNSEND, Mr. WASHBURN, and Mr. HORR, and they assented that Mr. REAGAN might make the motion, if the Speaker would recognize him, after Mr. TOWNSEND had made a similar motion to suspend the rules and pass the revenue-marine bill. Mr. REAGAN was recognized, and did make a motion to suspend the rules and pass the immigration bill.

"The bill was read by the Clerk at the Clerk's desk, in the hearing of all members of the House who were present.

"Mr. REAGAN made a speech in its favor, as also did Messrs. COX, GUENTHER, PAGE, and myself. Speeches were also made, against the bill, by Messrs. DUNNELL and HOLMAN."

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Mr. Speaker, the first thing I have to say is that Mr. REAGAN had a right as a member of this House to offer the bill in any form he pleased; that he was not restricted to any supposed views of the Committee on Commerce, but could exercise his own judgment in the premises; that it is a usurpation of powers which do not belong to that committee to attempt to sit in judgment upon the conduct of Mr. REAGAN because he did not offer the bill in the form some members of the committee desired.

There is not a word by which this House can know officially what was done in the Committee on Commerce. The report which was directed and drawn by Mr. RICHARDSON cannot be found; it has never been presented to the House; it is not here.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. I handed it to you.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Mr. RICHARDSON gave it to me and I handed it to the gentleman who offered the bill; and if anybody knows where it is he does. When the House passed the bill by a two-thirds vote, it is superlative arrogance for a committee to attempt to review and overthrow or defeat its action.

What Mr. REAGAN did in respect to this bill by way of offering it in a different shape from that agreed on in committee is a thing which is done in the House on almost every suspension day.

On the same day this bill passed the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. UPSON,] from the Committee on Military Affairs, moved to suspend the rules and pass a bill. Without consulting that committee he struck out of the bill important words which the committee had put there. A point of order was made that he could not do this without the consent of the committee. The point of order was not sustained by the Speaker, and the bill passed as thus altered by the member who made the motion. (See RECORD of June 20, page 62.) The Committee on Military Affairs understands its duty better than to arraign the gentleman from Texas [Mr. UPSON] for having made an important change in the bill.

Second. Mr. REAGAN had agreed with me on Saturday to do just what he did do on Monday in restoring the bill to its former condition. I cannot for a moment believe that he will dispute the fact that he had such a conversation with me on Saturday. Should he do so the fact that I gave that conversation to a reporter of the New York Herald, and that it was published in the Herald of Sunday, June 18, will, I think, settle the question that I did have such conversation. Many members of this House, probably Mr. REAGAN himself and the other members of the Committee on Commerce, read the statement in the Herald of that day, and knew that I stated that—

I have seen the gentleman who proposed the amendments and have shown him the importance of the measure, its operation, and its results. He has agreed to withdraw the amendments.

Now, it cannot be said that I manufactured that conversation on Saturday which was published in the New York papers on Sunday, for it would be very singular that the gentleman from Texas should do on Monday exactly what the New York Herald of Sunday stated that I said he would do. The gentleman referred to in the New York Herald was Mr. REAGAN. I have seen the gentleman, who was a stranger to me, who called on me in my room and to whom I made the statement. He said that I mentioned to him Mr. REAGAN's name as the man who had made the amendments and had agreed to restore the fourth section to the bill, and that is my recollection. I say again that I have here the bill which was passed, and which everybody can see. The writing in it is in red ink, except the erasures and the words added by Mr. REAGAN's request. Now, after having had the conversation with Mr. REAGAN on Saturday and having agreed with him that I should prepare a bill that should meet his views and mine, I prepared it. I did it at my room. Every mark I made on it before I came to this House was made in purple ink. I put in such amendments of the committee in the first section as they had made, except that I omitted to make an erasure, and the erasure you see in black ink was made by Mr. REAGAN while sitting upon the sofa in the back part of the House, for the purpose of perfecting this substitute for the original bill and getting it in a shape that would be satisfactory. He also, after the bill was sent to the Clerk's desk, came and got it and made some other erasures in the second section. They are to be seen in the bill in black ink, as I hold it here.

He made another suggestion. As I had prepared section 4, it read:

That all foreign paupers, convicts, or accused persons of other than political offenses, who are a public charge.

Mr. REAGAN said: "That is not sufficient; you want to add there 'on their arrival in this country.'" I went to my desk, got a pen, and wrote in those words in Mr. REAGAN's presence at his suggestion, so that it read, "who are a public charge on their arrival in this country." Can any person suppose (I do not know that Mr. REAGAN claims it) that he thought this was the Richardson bill? Here is the Richardson bill. Every amendment in this, except one which I wrote in inadvertently, supposing it was the other, is in black ink. There could be no mistake as to that.

Third. I say again that what Mr. REAGAN did on Monday was precisely what he had agreed with me on Saturday that he would do. He restored the bill to its original form so far as the fourth section is concerned, and improved it by adding a very proper restriction. Fortunately his agreement to do so had been published in the New York Herald on the preceding day.

Fourth. Mr. REAGAN knew that the bill he offered was not the bill agreed on in his committee, but was the bill agreed on between him and myself, and to which some members of his committee assented.

I supposed that if this bill was made satisfactory to Judge REAGAN, who had made these amendments, it would be satisfactory to all the rest of the committee. One or two of them were spoken to upon the subject, and said something to the effect that they had no objection to it. If in that supposition I made a mistake, it is the only mistake I made in this case.

It must be a humiliating confession for Mr. REAGAN now to claim that he did not know the contents of a bill which he took charge of, offered, advocated, and voted for. It was a short bill. It was read distinctly by the Clerk. It was discussed for a half hour. If he did not understand what he was about, how am I to blame for it? I cannot see how I am responsible for his want of understanding. I do not think, however, he can get out of so small a hole as that. He is too old in the service. His voice is heard daily in this House and upon all its varied business. He is the last man to be used as a cat's-paw. He is the last man who ought to be permitted to plead the baby act.

Fifth. The bill which Mr. REAGAN sent to the Clerk's desk has on its face evidence that Mr. REAGAN knew it was not the Richardson bill. It contained erasures made by Mr. REAGAN by his own hand. A part of these erasures he made after the Clerk had read the bill. He made them at the Clerk's desk. He certainly could not have supposed he was erasing portions of the Richardson bill. He would not alter the committee's bill that way, would he? If he says that he did, he gives away his whole case; for if he might alter that bill in one respect without consulting his committee, he might in another. He had the words "on their arrival in this country" written into the fourth section. Did he suppose then he was altering the Richardson bill?

In the Richardson bill the interlineations were all in black ink. Mr. REAGAN knew it. In the bill he sent to the Clerk's desk the interlineations were all in purple ink, almost red, except the words "on their arrival in this country," aforesaid, which were put in by his direction and were written in black.

I have another suggestion on this subject. I would be very glad to yield to my colleague, [Mr. HEWITT,] that he may say a word as to any conversation which occurred between him and Mr. REAGAN about this bill.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Does the gentleman wish me to make the statement now?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I would be very glad if you would.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I think it would be better for the gentleman to finish his statement and for the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] to make any reply he may wish to make, before I say anything.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Very well.

The bill which Mr. REAGAN presented, he informed the House, was a substitute. Now, understand, the committee had directed Mr. RICHARDSON to report the bill with amendments.

Mr. GUENTHER. That is not so. I wish to inform the gentleman that the committee authorized Mr. RICHARDSON to report a substitute for the bill; not to report it with amendments.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. GUENTHER. I am not.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. That committee happens to be a committee of record. It has a clerk, and I have here the certificate of that clerk to the action of the committee authorizing Mr. RICHARDSON to make the report. I will read it and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUENTHER] will see his error:

TUESDAY, June 6, 1882.

H. R. No. 5669 being up, was further amended, and Mr. RICHARDSON was authorized to report the same, as amended, favorably to this House.

The above is a true copy from the journal of the Committee on Commerce.

GEO. FRS. DAWSON.
Clerk of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GUENTHER. I simply see the error of the clerk; I do not see my error. I remember distinctly that Mr. RICHARDSON was authorized to report a substitute.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I do not care to be interrupted further. Of course I have no way of ascertaining what the committee did except by going to the record; and I assert that Mr. RICHARDSON's report, which I have seen, was a report of the bill with amendments.

Mr. Speaker, there was no substitute except the one Mr. REAGAN and I had agreed upon. The committee never agreed upon any substitute. The journal of the clerk of the Committee on Commerce shows that Mr. RICHARDSON was not authorized to report a substitute, but he was directed to report the bill with amendments.

The difference between a bill reported to the House with amendments and one reported with a substitute is that when amendments are reported they must be acted on by the House separately, while a substitute may pass by a single vote.

The action of the committee as certified by the clerk is the only action taken in committee authorizing Mr. RICHARDSON to make any report on that bill.

Now, the gentleman from Texas offered this bill as a substitute. He said:

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to ask unanimous consent that I may report from the Committee on Commerce, for passage at this time, a substitute for a bill of very great importance in relation to immigrants arriving on our shores.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot recognize in succession two gentlemen from the same committee for motions to suspend the rules, except by unanimous consent. The Chair will submit to the House the proposition of the gentleman from Texas, which is that the Chair may be permitted to recognize a second gentleman representing the Committee on Commerce. The gentleman from Texas desires to move to suspend the rules and pass a substitute for the bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Iowa. Is this proceeding by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It is.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

"A bill (H. R. No. 5669) to regulate immigration."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the Chair recognizing the gentleman from Texas for the purpose indicated?

There was no objection.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to suspend the rules and pass a substitute for the bill the title of which has been read. I ask the Clerk to read the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of fifty cents for each and every passenger not a citizen of the United States who shall come by steam or sail vessel from a foreign port to any port within the United States. The said duty shall be paid to the collector of customs of the port to which such passenger shall come, or if there be no collector at such port, then to the collector of customs nearest thereto, by the master, owner, agent, or consignee of every such vessel, within twenty-four hours after the entry thereof into such port. The money thus collected shall be paid into the United States Treasury, and shall constitute a fund to be called the immigrant fund, and shall be used, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to defray the expense of regulating immigration under this act, and for the care of immigrants arriving in the United States, for the relief of such as are in distress, and for the general purposes and expenses of carrying this act into effect. The duty imposed by this section shall be a lien upon the vessels which shall bring such passengers into the United States, and shall be a debt in favor of the United States against the owner or owners of such vessels; and the payment of such duty may be enforced by any legal or equitable remedy; Provided, That no greater sum shall be expended for the purposes hereinbefore mentioned at any port than shall have been collected at such port.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby charged with the duty of executing the provisions of this act and with supervision over the business of immigration to the United States, and for that purpose he shall have power to enter into contracts with such State commission, board, or officers as may be designated for that purpose by the governor of any State to take charge of the local affairs of immigration in the ports within said State, and to provide for the support and relief of such immigrants therein landing as may fall into distress or need public aid, under the rules and regulations to be prescribed by said Secretary; and it shall be the duty of such State commission, board, or officers so designated to examine into the condition of passengers arriving at the ports within such State in any ship or vessel, and for that purpose all or any of such commissioners, or officers, or such other person or persons as they shall appoint, shall be authorized to go on board of and through any such ship or vessel; and if on such examination there shall be found among such passengers any convict, lunatic, idiot, or any person unable to take care of himself or herself without becoming a public charge, or any persons who, from any attending circumstances, are likely to become a public charge, they shall report the same in writing to the collector of such port, and such persons shall not be permitted to land, but shall be returned in such vessel to the countries from whence they came at the expense of the owners of said vessel.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall establish such regulations and rules and issue from time to time such instructions not inconsistent with law as he shall deem best calculated to protect the United States and immigrants into the United States from fraud and loss, and for carrying out the provisions of this act and the immigration laws of the United States; and he shall prescribe all forms of bonds, entries, and other papers to be used under and in the enforcement of the various provisions of this act.

SEC. 4. That all foreign paupers, convicts, or accused persons of other than political offenses, or persons suffering from mental alienation, in the United States who are a public charge on their arrival in this country shall be sent back by the United States to the nations to which they belong and from whence they came. The Secretary of the Treasury may designate the State board of charities of any State in which such board shall exist by law, or any commission in any State, or any person or persons in any State, whose duty it shall be to execute the provisions of this section without compensation. The Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe regulations for the return of the dependent persons mentioned in this section to the countries from whence they came, and shall furnish instructions to the board, commission, or persons charged with the execution of the provisions of this section as to the mode of procedure in respect thereto, and may change such instructions from time to time. The expense of such return in the first instance shall be paid out of the immigrant fund created by this act. The Secretary of the Treasury shall charge the cost of the return of each person so sent back to the nation to which such person belongs, or from which such person came to the United States, and, when paid, the money so paid shall be placed to the credit of said immigrant fund.

SEC. 5. That this act shall take effect immediately.

The committee had never authorized anybody to move a substitute. Mr. REAGAN had no authority from the committee at any meeting of the committee to make any motion on that day. He only had such authority as he got from two or three members who happened to be on the floor of the House.

The committee find no fault with that; I do not find any.

Mr. RICHARDSON drew a report in accordance with the said direction of the committee, and that report I handed to Mr. REAGAN. He doubtless knows where it is. Nobody else does. It was not presented to the House and is not in the possession of the clerk of the Commerce Committee.

If Mr. REAGAN supposed he was presenting the Richardson bill, why did he not present the committee's report, drawn by Mr. RICHARDSON?

The fact that he offered a substitute is, it seems to me, conclusive evidence that he knew he was not presenting the committee's bill. He had a right to present a substitute, and when he did so every member of the committee and of the House knew, or ought to have known, that it was neither the original bill nor the bill with amendments as ordered by the committee. There was no substitute except the one that the gentleman from Texas and I had agreed upon, as I have already stated. It is a little singular that I should tell the Texas gentleman that it was the committee's bill, and he, believing it, should jump to his feet and offer a substitute.

On the 22d of June, 1882, a sub-committee of the Committee on Commerce, consisting of three members, of which Mr. REAGAN is one, and the ruling spirit, agreed on a statement to be made to the House. That statement was furnished to the press, and was published in the New York Tribune of the next day. It is as follows:

We consider it our duty to make a statement to the House in the matter of the bill to regulate immigration presented by Mr. REAGAN on Monday, June 19, 1882, and passed by the House under suspension of the rules—the Committee on Commerce, or such members thereof as were then present in the House having under misapprehension advocated or consented to its passage—and the return of which bill from the Senate has since been secured. The bill was introduced by Mr. VAN VOORHIS, of New York, April 6, 1882, and referred to the Committee on Commerce. On June 6, 1882, the committee, after carefully considering and amending the same, authorized Mr. RICHARDSON to report it as amended to the House with the recommendation that it do pass. On Saturday, June 17, 1882, Mr. RICHARDSON, at his request, handed the bill and report to Mr. VAN VOORHIS, of New York, a courtesy often extended to the authors of bills. On the following Monday, during Mr. RICHARDSON'S absence, Mr. VAN VOORHIS, with the consent of certain other members of the committee, asked Judge REAGAN to report the committee's bill, but handed to him with the accompanying report the bill afterward passed, with the statement that it was a correct copy of the bill agreed to by the said committee, when in point of fact it was a materially different bill from that which the committee had authorized Mr. RICHARDSON to report favorably to the House. Under this assurance Mr. REAGAN looked hastily over the bill and discovering what he conceived to be clerical errors of omission touching one or two amendments that he had himself offered and which had been adopted in committee, changed the phraseology to conform to his recollection of the committee's action and subsequently, still relying on the assurance of Mr. VAN VOORHIS, offered the said bill and stated that it was the bill favorably recommended by the committee.

It would seem that the committee did not know of the understanding between Mr. REAGAN and myself, had on Saturday; that they supposed the first Mr. REAGAN knew of this was when on Monday he was asked to move the passage of the bill. The fact is, the idea of his moving the bill was not thought of until Monday—after the bill had been perfected and agreed upon between him and me. We found that Mr. RICHARDSON, who had charge of the bill, was absent; and the suggestion was made to Mr. REAGAN because some member of the committee was necessary to make the motion. Not until then, not until Mr. RICHARDSON was found to be absent, not until after the bill had been perfected between Judge REAGAN and myself in a manner supposed to be satisfactory to all of the committee, not until then was there any suggestion that Mr. REAGAN should make this important motion.

In the statement Mr. REAGAN charges me with handing him a bill with the accompanying report with the statement it was the correct copy of the bill agreed to by the committee, as if he had not heard of it up to that time. Is it not a false pretense to omit all that occurred before that in respect to this bill?

Several questions suggest themselves here. Is it not a little singular that Mr. REAGAN should be placed on a sub-committee to investigate a question in which his own veracity was involved? Why did not Mr. REAGAN present Mr. RICHARDSON'S report, which would show what the committee directed? Why did he offer a substitute when the committee had not authorized any substitute? I was not a member of the committee and he was. Why should I inform him of what he himself had done in committee at a time when I was not there?

Why, Mr. Speaker, this is all a tempest in a tea-pot. This mountain, after a week's labor, has brought forth a very small mouse. It all comes of a desire some men have to shift the blame of all their offenses or supposed offenses on to some one else. It is the old story of Macbeth after he had murdered Duncan, with the damned spot upon his hand, which all the waters of old Neptune's ocean could not wash out, exclaiming, "Thou can'st not say I did it; never shake thy gory locks at me." It is the old story of the cowardly Adam, who, when confronted with his sin, sought to lay the blame upon a woman.

Would it not have been more manly in the gentleman from Texas to have assumed the responsibility of his act, instead of trying to sneak out of it in this humiliating manner? I have not language to fitly describe the ineffable meanness of the accusation the gentleman from Texas has brought against me. He has raised the issue, and I am ready for it. I say to him,

Lay on, Macduff;
And damn'd be him that first cries, "Hold, enough!"

He has taken the sword, and if he perish by it, it will be the result of his own folly.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I demand that the words uttered by the gentleman from New York in the last two or three sentences be taken down.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia will indicate the words which he wishes to be taken down.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Where he used the words "sneaking" and "ineffable meanness." I wish the sentences in which these words occur to be taken down.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I withdraw these words. I did not intend to say anything objectionable. If anybody thinks——

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I do not desire them withdrawn. The House should take notice of such language on the floor. They were written out and read by the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The words referred to will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

I have not language to fitly describe the ineffable meanness of the accusation the gentleman from Texas has brought against me. He has raised the issue, and I am ready for it. I say to him,

"Lay on, Macduff;
And damn'd be him that first cries, 'Hold, enough!'"

The SPEAKER. It will be proper to say that the gentleman from New York states that he withdraws the remark as applied to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. The Clerk did not read the whole of the language which I asked to be taken down.

Mr. KASSON. The words are not applied personally, and after their withdrawal I hope the gentleman from Georgia will withdraw his point. It does not touch the person of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. As I understand the language it characterizes the conduct of Mr. REAGAN as "sneaking." The Clerk did not read all. It referred also to the conduct of the gentleman from Texas as "ineffable meanness."

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Oh, no!

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I think that is what it means, and I wish it reread, carrying it back several sentences.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will direct the words to be read which the gentleman from Georgia has indicated.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I ask that the two or three sentences be taken down in which the words "sneaking" and "ineffable meanness" occurred. The Clerk has only read the latter sentence. The gentleman from New York said it would be more manly to do a certain thing than the "sneaking" thing he had done.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the words.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Would it not have been more manly in the gentleman from Texas to have assumed the responsibility of his act, instead of trying to sneak out of it in this humiliating manner? I have not language to fitly describe the ineffable meanness of the accusation the gentleman from Texas has brought against me. He has raised the issue, and I am ready for it. I say to him,
>
> "Lay on, Macduff;
> And damn'd be him that first cries, 'Hold, enough!'"

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. That certainly applies to the gentleman from Texas, if language means anything.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the language as read was not at all parliamentary; but the gentleman from New York very promptly stated that he withdrew the offensive words.

Mr. McMILLIN. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McMILLIN. My point of order is this, that when a member rises in his place and asks that certain words which he deems unparliamentary shall be taken down, it is inevitable that they shall be taken down and reported to the House; and the Speaker has not, I submit in all deference, the power to determine what the action of the House shall be in the premises, or the right to say whether the words excepted to are liable to the point of order made against them or not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not undertaken to do anything of the kind. The gentleman from Tennessee certainly does not expect to have the words written out again, simply because the rule requires it, when they are already in writing and have been read to the House.

Mr. McMILLIN. Not at all; but I make the further point of order that, pending the motion, or the demand that the words shall be taken down, the gentleman from New York, without the unanimous consent of the House, could not have been recognized for the purpose of withdrawing them. When exception is taken to language, as in this case, it is his duty to take his seat, under the rule, and remain silent until the House determines what its action shall be.

The SPEAKER. When called to order for words spoken in debate, it is of course the duty of the gentleman occupying the floor to suspend his remarks until the House shall determine what action shall be taken in the premises. The Chair awaits the action of the House in this matter.

Mr. KASSON. Allow me to say to the gentleman from Georgia that the words objected to being written, and the gentleman from New York not being called to order, but merely a request made to have the words taken down, and the gentleman from New York having, when his attention was called to them, promptly withdrawn them, seems to me, in view of the action taken by the House in a similar case lately, should be considered amply sufficient to satisfy any gentleman on the subject. It will be remembered that there was no call of the gentleman to order, but simply a demand that the words which he had then uttered should be taken down. They were already down, and were read from the desk, and immediately after they were read to the House all personal references or offensive terms were promptly withdrawn. I hope, therefore, that withdrawal will be considered sufficient, as it seems it ought to be. I repeat that no point of order was made; and therefore the gentleman, not having been called to order, was on the floor for the purpose of either continuing his remarks or withdrawing, as he did withdraw promptly, the language claimed to be offensive.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the argument of the gentleman from Iowa is extremely technical. The gentleman from New York in a written speech, calmly, coolly, and deliberately prepared, in its two last sentences uttered language which every gentleman on this floor knows was unparliamentary and indecent in the presence of this House. As soon as uttered the words were promptly requested to be taken down under the rule for the purpose of having the House pass upon his conduct in uttering them; and now we are told by the gentleman from Iowa that he was not "called to order." The language itself to which exception was taken was the last of his utterances; and it was in order as soon as he became silent to request that it be taken down, which request was made the moment he uttered the sentence. That request that his words be taken down, I submit, was of itself a call to order under the rule. Now, Mr. Speaker, it has been said that the gentleman from New York has withdrawn the offensive language. That may be entirely satisfactory to the House. I do not pretend to know whether it is or not; but the question whether it will satisfy the House ought to come before the House formally. Gentlemen may get upon the floor and violate the rules of decency and propriety by using language repugnant to every sense of good taste or order, and simply evade the responsibility for it by saying, "I withdraw the language." If this is satisfactory to the House, let the House so declare by its vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not declined to entertain any proposition upon the subject.

Mr. McCOOK. May I ask the gentleman from Georgia a question?

Mr. CALKINS. This I submit is not debatable under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks this is not debatable.

Mr. CALKINS. The rule provides that it shall be decided by the House without debate.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I offer the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Resolved, That the language of the gentleman from New York, as follows: "Would it not have been more manly in the gentleman from Texas to have assumed the responsibility of his act, instead of trying to sneak out of it in this humiliating manner? I have not language to fitly describe the ineffable meanness of the accusation the gentleman from Texas has brought against me," was unparliamentary, and that he should receive the censure of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. KASSON. I think, sir, the House should reflect a little before adopting a resolution of that character. The House will remember that the words which are objected to were applied not to the gentleman from Texas but were applied to an accusation made against the gentleman from New York, which he believes firmly, as far as human minds can conjecture his meaning, to be entirely unjust and untrue. Believing this, can the House say that he had no right or that it was not natural and proper in him to condemn in strong terms such an accusation against himself? The distinction has always been drawn.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. KASSON. In a moment. The distinction has always been drawn against an offensive adjective applied to an act and an offensive adjective or qualification applied to a person. This did not apply to the author of the act but to the accusation which he had recited as made against him. The only accusation that I know of and which he cited was one contained in a newspaper, and he quoted from that newspaper, which he supposes was inspired, I imagine. But it was the accusation contained in a newspaper upon his conduct which he characterized in that way. I am not willing to say a member of this House who believes a gross injustice has been done to him has not the right to characterize it in words no worse than those.

Gentlemen know I am no advocate of unparliamentary language. They know I would co-operate with either side of the House in censuring unparliamentary language applied to members on the floor. But I do not wish to say by voting for a resolution like this that a gentleman who supposes himself grossly wronged by a report in a newspaper, or in any other way, and characterizes an accusation of that sort in terms no stronger than this, ought to be censured by the House. I appeal to the good judgment of gentlemen to make a discrimination before they adopt such a resolution which must establish a rule and a precedent on this floor.

And further, when no sooner are the words out of his mouth than he promptly withdraws them, as was done the other day on this floor, and under all the circumstances that surround this case, without one word being applied to the character of the gentleman from Texas, and the words being based on an accusation made against him in newspapers which he connects undoubtedly in his mind with some action we do not yet know and of which we wait to hear an explanation from the gentleman from Texas, I am not willing to pass a resolution of censure for those words.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. The language is this:

> Would it not have been more manly in the gentleman from Texas to have assumed the responsibility of his act, instead of trying to sneak out of it in this humiliating manner?

How the gentleman from Iowa can justify this is inexplicable to me except upon the idea that he did not know what the language was. The further language of the gentleman from New York was:

> I have not language to fitly describe the ineffable meanness of the accusation the gentleman from Texas has brought against me. He has raised the issue, and I am ready for it, &c.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am very tolerant of what gentlemen say in the heat of debate; and yet I would not lay it down as a proposition that this House ought not to censure unparliamentary language even uttered in the heat of debate. For I maintain that gentlemen here and everywhere should so far restrain their tempers as to use proper and decent language. No man has a right under the heat of debate to indulge in language that is unparliamentary on the floor of the House. To do so is insulting the dignity of the House, and the House should vindicate its dignity in some proper way.

The gentleman from New York does not say this was not intended as a personal attack upon the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] but I repeat the gentleman from Iowa could not, if he had remembered the exact language which I have read, taken the ground he did.

I make this motion with no feeling as to either of these gentlemen. I think it perfectly right to make it now lest the gentleman from Texas should be betrayed in the heat of debate into like language. I would like to stop it in the bud. I think gentlemen ought not to be allowed to use any such language when characterizing the conduct of each other on this floor. This was in writing, deliberately made, and we have nothing to do but simply to see whether we approve it or disapprove.

Mr. HISCOCK. While this statement was in writing every member on the floor must appreciate the fact that there has been a great deal of excitement in reference to this matter, and a great deal which would tend to arouse the feelings of a gentleman who has been attacked as Mr. VAN VOORHIS has been on this subject. I do not indorse the utterances he made. Inflamed, doubtless, as he has been by these attacks which have been made upon him, he made use of the language which has been taken down at the request of the gentleman from Georgia. But promptly, when his attention was called to it, he withdrew the words which were deemed to be offensive.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the gentleman from New York if he understands I have ever made an attack on Mr. VAN VOORHIS anywhere?

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not understand that the gentleman from Texas has done so. I do not understand that any particular individual has made an attack upon him. But in consequence of the unfortunate occurrence of a week ago Monday he has been severely criticised by the press, and has been severely criticised in private conversation—I do not say by members of this House—and prompted by that, excited by that, he employed the language which has been taken down at the instance of the gentleman from Georgia. I believe, in this whole occurrence, he never for a moment intended an act which would reflect, however closely scrutinized, upon his honor or his integrity. Knowing him as I do, and as I have done for years, it is with the greatest pleasure that I give this indorsement to his character and to his honor——

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. The gentleman from New York should not understand me as making any reflection on the character of his colleague; that is not the question.

Mr. HISCOCK. And feeling that this matter should be disposed of as rapidly and as promptly as possible, and that this House ought not to pass a resolution of censure, I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. BLAND. I desire to submit a few remarks on that motion.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. CALKINS. I ask the gentleman from New York, if there is any doubt as to his colleague [Mr. VAN VOORHIS] having withdrawn the language, to withhold the motion to lay the resolution on the table until his colleague can be recognized; because I think it is due to the House, before the motion to lay on the table is adopted, that it should be understood the language of the gentleman has been unqualifiedly withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The motion to lay on the table is not debatable, and the Chair could not recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN VOORHIS] pending that motion without permission of the House.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understood the gentleman to withdraw the language unqualifiedly, and it was for that reason that I made the motion to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. MCMILLIN. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] will yield to me for a moment——

The SPEAKER. The motion to lay on the table is not debatable.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I understand that; but I desire the gentleman to withhold it for a moment.

I think it proper to state, having made the point of order, that I did so without any desire either to persecute or to prosecute any member of this House. I did so with the desire, which I trust will ever animate me, to try and keep aloft, above everything else here, the dignity and decorum of the House and the observance of the rules of the House.

Now, I submit in all candor to the gentleman and to the House that, when language is used that is unparliamentary, this House cannot do itself justice by simply passing it over in silence when the words are withdrawn. It is the duty of the gentleman from New York and those who do not want him censured, and it ought to be the pleasure of us all, for him not simply to withdraw the remarks, but to apologize to the House for their use, especially where they have been so deliberately used as in manuscript.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot recognize the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KENNA and Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts, asked that Mr. VAN VOORHIS have an opportunity to speak.

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I did not intend to use an unparliamentary word. It did not occur to me that any such criticism could be made on anything that I said. The instant that anybody made the suggestion I withdrew the words, and I said what I considered was enough to amount to an apology to the House for their use. I did not intend to use a word that anybody could criticise as unparliamentary. I am glad of the opportunity to withdraw them, and to state to the House what I have said in that respect.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] to lay on the table the resolution of the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. HAMMOND.]

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope the gentleman will now withdraw that resolution.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. As the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN VOORHIS] pleads that he did not know that that language was unparliamentary, I think it would be cruel to press the resolution to a vote, and withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the resolution will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] is recognized.

Mr. PAGE. Before the gentleman proceeds I desire to say a word. It is but due to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] that I state to the House that the action taken by the Committee on Commerce was not sought at all by the gentleman from Texas. As soon as the Committee on Commerce found that they had been imposed upon by the passage of a bill not authorized by that committee, a meeting of the committee was called, and it was unanimously agreed that a resolution should be introduced into the House to recall the bill from the Senate, which was done.

There was another meeting of the committee, at which the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN VOORHIS] was invited to be present. In response to the question as to why he had presented to the gentleman from Texas a different bill from the one given him by his colleague, [Mr. RICHARDSON,] he stated that he was opposed to the bill as reported by the Committee on Commerce and did not want that bill passed at all. The gentleman from Texas never pressed the Committee on Commerce to take any further action in the matter than such action as in the unanimous judgment of the committee was required in order to protect itself before the House. The words of the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN VOORHIS] were entirely uncalled for when he charged the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] with endeavoring to persecute him in this matter.

Mr. REAGAN. I know of nothing, Mr. Speaker, which could be more unpleasant to any one than to have to come before the House on an occasion of this kind. Certainly nothing could be more unpleasant to any one who is self-respecting than to be placed in a position where he is obliged to contradict or to be contradicted by another. I shall confine my remarks mainly to a statement of what has occurred in relation to the action taken by the Committee on Commerce and by myself on this bill. Before I do that I desire to say that I feel especially obliged to the chairman of the committee [Mr. PAGE] for what he has stated in regard to my action.

I was amazed when the gentleman from New York, [Mr. VAN VOORHIS,] instead of meeting the resolution presented by the committee, not at my seeking, chose to go out of the way and assume to make an issue with me, and to charge that I and others of the committee had caused newspaper publications to be made, and that I had endeavored to persecute him. I have sense of propriety enough to know that it would not be proper for me to give to the newspapers any account of the action or of the contemplated action of a committee upon a subject-matter like this, pending its consideration by the committee.

I have never said a word to newspaper men or to others that could be used against the gentleman from New York. I have never said a word or done an act that could in the most remote degree excuse or justify the course he has pursued this morning.

I shall be obliged to be a little tedious in this matter. The gentleman from New York has, not for the first time this morning, made an issue against me personally, and made it under circumstances and with a purpose and logical effect which he does not seem himself to have seen or understood.

The question is as to the irregularity by which this bill came before the House, as to the impropriety of the means by which it was brought before the House. The gentleman admits his part of it, and then undertakes to make an issue with me, and to cast odium upon me, because he says that I aided him in executing his purpose. If his statement were true, all the effect it would have legitimately and logically would be to make me infamous along with himself.

I send to the Clerk's desk the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle, and ask to have read an interview and an editorial which appear in this paper. They are rather long; but I ask members to give them attention.

The Clerk began the reading of the article, but was interrupted by

Mr. REAGAN, who said: Mr. Speaker, the reading of these articles would occupy some time, and as there is considerable business before the House I will not have the articles read by the Clerk, but will ask to have them printed in my remarks, together with an editorial in the Rochester Herald. Both these papers were published on the 21st of this month.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to have certain newspaper articles published with his remarks. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The articles are as follows:

THE HEAD-MONEY BILL—INTERVIEW WITH HON. JOHN VAN VOORHIS—HE MAKES A CLEAR AND UNANSWERABLE STATEMENT OF FACTS.

Hon. JOHN VAN VOORHIS, Representative in Congress, arrived in this city last evening and will return to Washington to-night. A representative of the Democrat and Chronicle waited upon him shortly after his arrival, and the following conversation was had in regard to the passage of the head-money bill, concerning which there is so much talk:

R. When did you introduce the bill?

Mr. V. V. On the 6th of April last.

R. Under what circumstances did you introduce it?

Mr. V. V. I introduced it by direction of the New York delegation in Congress, under the following circumstances: the delegation held a meeting at the Hamilton House, and spent an evening in consultation over the immigration question. They agreed upon the kind of a bill that ought to be drawn, and appointed a committee of five to draft a bill, which committee made the Hon. ABRAM S. HEWITT and myself a sub-committee for that purpose. We drew a bill which met the approval of every member of the New York delegation, so far as I know, and upon their direction I introduced it in the House, and it was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

R. What were the chief features of this bill?

Mr. V. V. First. The laying of a duty of fifty cents on each immigrant, upon the steamship companies which bring them into the country. Second. An inspection of the immigrants upon their arrival on board the ships to ascertain whether there are any paupers, lunatics, or criminals, &c., and to prohibit the landing of such persons from the ships. The effect of this provision would be, of course, to oblige the vessels to carry them back at their own expense. Third. A provision for the return to the countries which sent them here of such paupers, lunatics, criminals, &c., as might elude the vigilance of the authorities and get in the country, or might come here by way of Canada. It is well known that there are systematic and organized movements to send paupers, &c., from European countries and get them in the United States through the gateway of Canada, thus relieving the European countries from their support, and entailing it upon us. Fourth. A provision that the expense of returning such persons as the vessels bringing them cannot be made to return upon the fund raised by the head-money tax and then charging upon the countries which sent such persons here.

R. Were there any further provisions in the original bill?

Mr. V. V. Nothing of any moment, except that the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to make such rules and regulations as should execute the law.

R. After the bill went into the hands of the committee, what became of it?

Mr. V. V. After it was referred, I called a number of times upon Mr. RICHARDSON to see if the committee would not act upon it, and I went to the committee-room several times and learned that they were so busy upon the river and harbor bill that they could not take any bill up until that was disposed of. I suppose, inasmuch as it was known that this bill originated with the New York delegation, that I would be notified if any amendments were proposed. I received no such notice, but saw by telegraphic report on a day when I was absent from Washington that the committee had reported the bill. I returned on Monday, June 12, and on making inquiry learned that Mr. RICHARDSON was authorized to report the bill, and that he had gone home. Mr. RICHARDSON returned to Washington Friday of last week, and I saw him Saturday, and asked him about the bill and he said he had left it with Mr. WASHBURN to report in his absence. I told him I would like to see the bill, as I had heard it had been amended. He got it and showed it to me, and I told him I wanted to go before the committee and ask them to restore the fourth section substantially as it was in the original bill.

R. What change had the committee made in this section?

Mr. V. V. The committee had stricken out from that section all the persons to be returned except convicts, and also that portion which allowed the expense in the first instance to be paid out of the head-money tax. Both the New York delegation and myself had been strenuous upon this point. My attention had been very pointedly called to it by President Anderson, for many years a member of the State board of charities, and by others who have given the subject of pauperism in this country much study and attention and who have frequently urged the necessity of such legislation.

R. What other changes did the committee make?

Mr. V. V. None of any importance. They were chiefly verbal, some words being erased in the first and second sections, to which I gave no attention.

R. What did Mr. RICHARDSON say to your request to go before the committee?

Mr. V. V. He said there would be no meeting until Tuesday. I told him I wanted, if possible, to get the bill up for passage on Monday. He advised me to go and consult Mr. REAGAN about the amendments, saying that Mr. REAGAN had taken considerable interest in the bill and in having it amended. Mr. R. then gave me the bill for the purpose of my consulting Mr. REAGAN about it.

R. What did you then do?

Mr. V. V. As soon as I could find Mr. REAGAN disengaged, on Saturday, I went to his seat and told him I understood he had taken an interest in the bill and that I wanted to get the fourth section restored to its original shape. He said the committee thought the fourth section was designed to pay the steamship companies out of the head-money tax for the paupers they carried back, so that they would be paid twice. I explained to him that that was not so. I told him that the persons who were not permitted to land would not get into the country, and that therefore there would be no occasion to send them out of the country.

I told him the object he had could be made perfectly certain by adding to the second section the words "but shall be returned in such vessels to the countries whence they came, at the expense of the owners of such vessels." He said that would make that portion of the bill entirely satisfactory. I told him the object of the fourth section was to reach paupers, lunatics, criminals, &c., who got into the country through Canada, or through American ports by eluding the vigilance of the officials. He said that view of the section had never been presented to the committee, and that he agreed with me exactly as to the object to be accomplished. I told him that I would take a printed copy of the original bill and put it in shape to meet the views that he and I had concurred in, and present it to him. On that occasion I had no bill and Mr. REAGAN saw none except the bill that Mr. RICHARDSON had handed to me. I felt very much encouraged as to the passage of the bill in suitable shape, after this interview.

R. What next occurred?

Mr. V. V. Nothing until Monday morning. That morning, at my room, I took a printed copy of the original bill and put it in the shape that Mr. REAGAN and I had agreed upon. I put into it all the amendments that the committee had agreed upon in the first section, except that I did not erase one or two sentences which the committee had erased. I added to the second section the words that we had agreed upon. I made the fourth section read as the original bill did, inserting the word "paupers," which had been left out by the printer. I also interlined the words "who are a public charge," it not being intended to send back anyone except those who were a public charge. After doing this I went to the House, but Mr. RICHARDSON was absent. I asked to be recognized immediately upon the reading of the Journal for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to consider the bill, but did not get such consent. I then went to Mr. REAGAN, and we sat upon a sofa and examined the two bills I had there, and gave to Mr. REAGAN the bill that Mr. RICHARDSON had given to me, and also the proposed bill that I had prepared, which I have already said was substantially the original bill. He read it through and discovered in comparing the two bills that the erasures in the first section had not been made.

I went to my desk and got a pen and he erased the words in the first section to make them correspond with the erasures of the committee. He read the second section and said it was all right. The third section had never been changed. He read the fourth section and said that the words "on arrival in this country" ought to be added to the interlineation in that section, to which I assented and wrote them in in his presence so that the clause read "who are a public charge on their arrival in this country." He then said "if you will show that to some other members of the committee and they assent to it, I will report the bill in that shape." I had previously asked him if he would not make the report in Mr. RICHARDSON's absence, and he agreed to. He asked me to show the bill to Mr. WASHBURN and Mr. TOWNSEND. I did so, and explained to them briefly that Mr. REAGAN and I had agreed to the bill in that form and he would report if they assented. They did so and I informed Mr. REAGAN thereof. Up to this time there had been no suggestion that Mr. REAGAN would move the passage of the bill, but only that he should report it from the committee.

I treated him as representing the committee. He took the bill and handed me the Richardson copy, which I retained, and said he would watch his opportunity and report as soon as he could. I felt anxious that the bill should pass that day, and it occurred to me that possibly the consent of the Commerce Committee might be got, that some member might move to have the rules suspended and pass the bill. I went to Mr. REAGAN and asked him if he did not think that could be done. Suffice it to say such an arrangement was made.

R. Did he move the bill?

Mr. V. V. He did, and it was sent to the Clerk's desk and read.

R. Were there any speeches made upon it?

Mr. V. V. Mr. REAGAN made a speech in its favor, as also did Messrs. COX, GUENTHER, PAGE, and myself, and I dwelt especially upon that provision of the bill that gives authority to return criminals and paupers to the countries that sent them here at their expense, this being the portion of the bill about which the committee now affect to be surprised. Speeches were also made against the bill by Messrs. DUNNELL and HOLMAN, the former particularly attacking this portion of the bill.

R. I understand that there is a question of veracity between you and Mr. REAGAN. Can you give me any further facts that corroborate your statements?

Mr. V. V. Yes. Mr. HEWITT told me that Mr. REAGAN came to him before he offered the bill and said he had altered it upon consultation with me. The erasures in the first section of the bill are in Mr. REAGAN's handwriting. Mr. REAGAN is an experienced parliamentarian, and it would not be in the power of any man to deceive him in the manner he now professes to have been deceived. After my interview with Mr. REAGAN on Saturday, I told a reporter of the New York Herald who called on me that I felt confident of having the bill restored to its original shape, and I noticed in Sunday's Herald it was so published. I made this statement solely on what had occurred between Mr. REAGAN and myself.

R. Have you noticed the report of the sub-committee of the Commerce Committee virtually charging responsibility upon you, and what do you propose to do in view of it?

Mr. V. V. I have noticed it in the papers. There is no one on the sub-committee except Mr. REAGAN who has any knowledge of the facts. I was given no hearing by it. I shall denounce the statement that I said to Mr. REAGAN that the bill I handed him and which was passed was the one given to me by Mr. RICHARDSON as false, and I am prepared to have that subject investigated judicially and have no fear of the result. In all I did I acted in perfect good faith, without any suspicion that the committee would go back on Mr. REAGAN. I had no motive whatever, except to accomplish what I deemed to be a great public good.

[From the Rochester Herald.]

MR. VAN VOORHIS'S IMMIGRATION BILL.

It has been charged in the New York Tribune and some other journals that the Hon. JOHN VAN VOORHIS, of this district, had clandestinely altered an immigration bill after it had been considered by the committee and procured its passage with the amendments surreptitiously introduced. Mr. VAN VOORHIS arrived in this city last evening, and in a conversation with a representative of this journal submitted the following statements, which we give as he gave them to us. Upon his explanation the blame, if there is any, clearly rests upon Mr. REAGAN, who was a member of the Committee on Commerce, and who, with other members of the committee, consented to the amendment.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS introduced a bill on the 5th of April providing for a tax of 50 cents on immigrants, an inspection of the vessels bringing them to the country, for the prevention of the landing of paupers, idiots, criminals, and insane persons, and for the return to the countries that sent them here of such persons named as might get into our territory through Canada or any of the ports of the United States.

The design of the fourth section of the bill was to prevent and stop the systematic importation of the criminals and paupers of Europe into this country, and prevent their making of this country a poorhouse and a penal colony. The Committee on Commerce amended the bill, and the most important amendment destroyed the effect intended to be given to the fourth section. Mr. VAN VOORHIS was not a member of that committee, and learning that Mr. REAGAN, a member of that committee, had taken an interest in amending the bill, called upon him on Saturday last and had a consultation, in which Mr. REAGAN expressed himself as desiring to accomplish the same result as intended by the bill as originally drawn, but thought under the original bill the steamship companies could claim pay for paupers which they had brought over. An amendment to the second section was agreed upon, which was as follows:

"But shall be returned in such vessel to the countries from whence they came at the expense of the owners of said vessel."

The fourth section was then examined and approved by Mr. REAGAN as well as Mr. VAN VOORHIS. At that time there was no bill present except the bill that Mr. RICHARDSON had given to Mr. VAN VOORHIS. It was arranged that Mr. VAN VOORHIS was to take a printed copy of the original bill and shape it so as to correspond with the views upon which the two gentlemen named agreed. On Monday Mr. VAN VOORHIS presented Mr. REAGAN such a bill and also the committee's bill which had been given to Mr. VAN VOORHIS by Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. REAGAN went through the bill carefully, made erasures in the printed part of the first section, and suggested the words "on their arrival in this country" should be introduced into the fourth section, and said he would report the bill in that shape if Mr. TOWNSEND and Mr. WASHBURN, two members of the committee, would agree to it.

Those gentlemen did agree to it, and Mr. REAGAN then went through the bill again, word by word and line by line, reading it aloud and examining it with great care. Afterward, instead of reporting it to the House so that it would go on the Calendar as at first intended, he moved to suspend the rules and pass the bill. The bill was read in full by the Clerk in the hearing of Mr. REAGAN and every other member present. Mr. REAGAN, Mr. PAGE, and Mr. GUENTHER, from the committee, each made speeches in favor of it. Mr. VAN VOORHIS spoke especially in favor of the provision contained in the fourth section for the return of paupers, criminals, and lunatics. Other members discussed that provision.

Mr. REAGAN knew the bill he sent to the Clerk's desk was not the bill that the committee had authorized RICHARDSON to report, and he knew that it was the bill he and Mr. VAN VOORHIS had fixed and agreed upon and to which other members of the committee had assented.

[From the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.]

MR. VAN VOORHIS'S STATEMENT.

No fair-minded person can read the very clear and explicit statement made by Mr. VAN VOORHIS to a representative of this journal without being convinced that he is wholly in the right, and that the charges of bad faith concerning the head-money bill are without foundation. He is sustained in his averments by a number of corroborating circumstances—the dispatch to the New York Sunday Herald, his own speech when the bill was before the House, the testimony of Mr. HEWITT, and the parliamentary experience of Mr. REAGAN. It is, indeed, absurd, as Mr. VAN VOORHIS intimates, to imagine that a man of Mr. REAGAN'S legislative knowledge could be used as a cat's paw to pull anybody's chestnuts out of the fire. Mr. VAN VOORHIS had no motive either to tamper with the bill or to make any false statements about its passage. Mr. REAGAN'S motive is found in the fact that, when the Commerce Committee took him to task for assuming an undue responsibility, he sought to lay the burden upon the shoulders of Mr. VAN VOORHIS. The shoulders of our Representative are pretty broad, but he naturally objects to carrying all the sins of the late postmaster-general of the confederacy upon them.

The reputation of every public man is dear to him, and he is especially sensitive in regard to anything that affects his honor. It is not to be wondered at that Mr. VAN VOORHIS, who has had an exceptionally good character since he has been in Congress, should rebel at the insinuations that have been made against him by the Commerce Committee and by certain too eager representatives of the press. It is a matter for the congratulation of his friends that he is able to present so clear a refutation of injurious allegations as he is able to do by his own words and by corroborating circumstances. The latest dispatches indicate also that the Commerce Committee are ready to modify something of their strictures, and are likely to conclude that no case can be made against Mr. VAN VOORHIS.

There are one or two reflections that are pertinent to this business, outside of Mr. VAN VOORHIS'S connection with it. The pretensions of the Commerce Committee should not be passed over without notice. Here is a bill put upon its passage. It is distinctly read section by section, line by line, by the Clerk, and several members speak upon it on either side, one at least calling particular attention to the section about which the fuss is made subsequently, and then the committee get together, discover that it isn't precisely the bill as formulated by them, and induce the House to recall it from the Senate. For what? Not because it was not adopted in due and regular form, but because it was not in exactly the shape that certain members thought it was in, or afterward averred that they thought it was in. And right here there seems to be a suspicious circumstance connected with the indignation of the committee. The bill was printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and in the New York Herald in full, Tuesday morning; but it was not until Wednesday that the committee found how grossly they had been swindled, and vented their surprise and wrath. It may be unkind to suggest, but the thought will obtrude itself, that during the twenty-four hours that intervened between Tuesday and Wednesday mornings the agents of the steamship companies, whose enormous profits may be somewhat cut down by the section which Mr. VAN VOORHIS favored, had time to arrive upon the ground and ply their persuasive arts with the committee.

There is no doubt that the Van Voorhis bill is considerably better than the Richardson bill. Its inspiration was from men who have made the immigration abuses a special and a profound study and know what is needed. It meets the approval of the commissioners of immigration and was approved by the New York Congressional delegation. Senator MILLER, who is a member of the Senate Commerce Committee, has made an examination of the two bills, preferred that of Mr. VAN VOORHIS, and will introduce it in the Senate and urge its passage. The House should repass it, and it is to be hoped it will, now that the matter has been thoroughly ventilated. The House, as well as the committee, we take it, has some rights in the premises. If the airing that has been had shall have the effect somewhat to curb the despotism of committees and inform the House with a higher appreciation of its own sovereignty, it will not have been in vain. Meanwhile, our Representative is quite serene, and courts the fullest investigation of his conduct.

Mr. REAGAN. The Committee on Commerce some time back authorized the gentleman from New York [Mr. RICHARDSON] to report to the House a bill relating to immigration. On Monday of last week, the day for committee motions to suspend the rules, Mr. VAN VOORHIS came to me and told me that the committee or a portion o the committee desired me, in the absence of Mr. RICHARDSON, to report the bill to the House, stating to me that he and Mr. RICHARDSON had carefully compared or copied—I do not know which word was used—the bill, and he brought with it the report which had been prepared by Mr. RICHARDSON recommending the passage of the bill. I understood the gentleman to deny this morning that he brought me that report.

Mr. KASSON. No; he said he gave it to you.

Mr. REAGAN. I am glad to be corrected, because I thought he said he did not give it to me.

Mr. KASSON. No; he said he gave it to you.

Mr. REAGAN. After hearing what was said about the report, I had inquiry made. The officers of the House who have charge of these documents went to the Senate to get the report, which they tell me was sent there; and the gentleman who went for it, Mr. Lloyd, was informed that it was put in a committee room, but in what committee room he does not know, but the gentleman said that he would bring the report here at a later hour to-day.

Thus it will appear that the report sent up with the bill has been in the hands of the proper persons from that time to this, has not been lost sight of or carried away or in any manner displaced by the authority of any one.

The gentleman from New York says that he came to me on Saturday and talked over the provisions of the bill before the House and of the bill that he desired should be passed. Mr. Speaker, it is exceedingly unpleasant to have to squarely contradict anybody; but I am obliged to say that when the gentleman came to my seat on Saturday and said to me that he desired to talk to me about a bill—he may have mentioned the bill he wished to talk about—I stated to him that I was so much occupied that it was out of my power then to talk with him; that I would have to see him another time. He went away, and the subject of that bill was not mentioned between us that day. Why he should now go so far back to construct an argument to justify his conduct may possibly be apparent in the end, while it may not be altogether apparent on the surface. It is enough for me to say that he brought the bill purporting to be the bill of the committee and brought the report which had been prepared in writing by Mr. RICHARDSON, and delivered them to me with the statement that the bill was the committee's bill, except that a portion of it relating to immigration over the Canadian border had by the consent of the committee, or members of the committee, been agreed to be changed from the committee's report if I assented to it. I said "We did not discuss that in committee; but if it is the wish of the committee to change it I have no objection."

I want to say another thing. The gentleman avers that he brought to me the committee's bill and his own bill on Monday last, and that we examined and discussed them both. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman brought to me but one bill, and that was the one which he said was the committee's bill and which passed the House. He did not bring me the committee's bill. He did not tell me that there was any other bill in the hands of Mr. RICHARDSON than the one he brought along with the report. I saw no such bill and acted upon no such bill. When I looked over the first section of the bill I saw there were some words in that section which the committee had stricken out, and I said to him, "Mr. VAN VOORHIS, you have made a mistake in copying this, for here are words which were stricken out by the committee." The words referred to were "for the return to the country from whence they came of criminals, lunatics, and paupers." I told him those words had been stricken out; that there had been a mistake in copying the bill. He said if that was so to strike them out, and I did strike them out, because it appeared from his statement that there had been a mistake made, taking his allegation, between himself and Hon. Mr. RICHARDSON in copying the amendments made by the committee.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it came to the knowledge of the committee subsequently, but none of the committee then knew it, that after the committee had acted upon the bill and proposed its amendments, the gentleman from New York made serious complaint to the clerk of the committee that the committee had ruined his bill—showed feeling and temper at the fact that the committee had changed his bill. That, however, we did not then know.

On the day—I believe it was that day—when the resolution asking the Senate to return the bill was adopted, the gentleman was invited before the committee, and inquiry was made of him about the circumstances under which this bill had been placed in my hands and by me brought before the House. When asked by the honorable gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] why he did not give Mr. REAGAN the real bill instead of giving him the one he did, his answer was before the whole committee that he would not have voted for the committee's bill. Now, finding perhaps that that was a dangerous ground to take, and abandoning the position that he took deliberately before the whole committee, he comes in here and plants himself away behind that upon an interview which he states he had with me on Saturday, and upon a statement that he had delivered to me the committee's bill on Monday, although in answer to a question in the committee as to why he did not deliver to me the proper bill instead of the one he did he said to the committee that he would not vote for the committee's bill.

These circumstances show the motive which the gentleman had for misleading the members of the committee, and a purpose to pass a bill in opposition to the judgment of the committee, instead of the bill recommended by the committee, and that bill he prosposed to pass, as a means of misleading, accompanied by the report prepared by Mr. RICHARDSON to accompany the proper committee's bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with a charge like this made by the gentleman from New York, I feel, whether it be humiliating or not, a necessity for saying a single word in the line of defense. I had agreed to the committee's amendments in the committee. I had proposed some of them, and I agreed to the bill as it was amended; was in favor of the bill as it was amended; had no motive to pass any other kind of bill and no disposition to pass any other kind of bill; did not know I was recommending any other kind of bill except as to a provision in the bill which he told me the committee had proposed to change in relation to the admission of immigrants over the Canadian border, a question which we had not discussed in the committee before.

I have copies of the two bills. Here they are. You will see there is a small amendment in the first section, both alike. This is the committee's bill, and this is his bill. There is an amendment in writing across here, and there is an amendment in writing. Here words are interlined. That is the committee's bill. Here now in the bill he handed to me you will see is an amendment in writing there, the striking out of those words, he telling me it had been agreed to by the committee, and he had made a mistake in copying it. The interlineations in his bill are in his own handwriting, except as to the words stricken out by me. I submit that as evidence. I thought I was passing the committee's bill when I had the words referred to stricken out to make it conform to their action. You see the other interlineations. So, with the exception of the third and fourth sections, a casual observation of the bill might have misled any one.

The gentleman has said through the newspapers, in his interviews, and repeated it to-day, that I am too experienced a parliamentarian to be misled in a matter of this kind.

Mr. Speaker, I thank God my experience has been with that class of men generally who when they come to me on a fair business proposition, especially gentlemen clothed with the high position of members of Congress, and state to me a fact—my experience and my instincts have been to recognize the gentleman and what he utters, and to accept it. If I had to look on every member of this House as intending to cheat and defraud in his action, then I might rigidly scrutinize everything that came to me and give faith to nothing until it was proved.

I ask who it is in this House or in any other equally dignified body, when one of his associates comes to him and makes a statement, feels a disposition to cross-examine him and put him to the proof of the statement which an honest man, a truthful man, instinctively makes, and would recoil instinctively from being questioned about?

Sir, all I did was to accommodate the gentleman from New York, to help him to get a bill through that he and his colleagues attached great importance to; a bill I approved because it seemed to me it would be promotive of the public good. I accepted his suggestions supposing they were truthful, acted on them, and since that time, sir, notwithstanding all these newspaper interviews on me, my mouth has been sealed until I came here to speak before his associates and mine. I did not choose to go into the newspapers on a subject like that, especially pending an inquiry. I made no assault on him, but the gentleman, while in his interviews he distinctly attacks other members of the committee, and several of them here this morning, has leveled his attacks at me. Perhaps he thinks I live further from him than they do. Perhaps he thinks by parading the question that he is attacking the ex-postmaster-general of the confederacy he can excite popular sectional or partisan prejudice. Perhaps so. Why should he make this attack on me when I have done nothing to provoke it, done everything to serve him I could do in kindness, in good faith, with a desire to benefit him and advance his views? Yet my reward for believing his statements, my reward for having faith in his honor, is that he goes back and impeaches me with great folly for being imposed on, great weakness in being imposed on; insists, in fact, I could not have been imposed on.

Now, further, Mr. Speaker, when I introduced this bill before the House I stated that I reported the committee's substitute for the House bill. It stands so on the record, with the gentleman from New York standing by allowing me to make the statement to the House, to deceive the House and to deceive my associates on the committee, and never said a word to correct it then.

Now, sir, if he had been animated by such frankness as it seems to me ought to characterize the conduct of every member of this House, when he heard me make to the House the statement that it was the committee's bill, accompanied by the committee's report, knowing, as he declared a while ago, it was not the committee's bill, and that he never understood or meant it should be the committee's bill, would it not have been his duty to rise in his place and say I was mistaken? Would not common fairness, would not common candor, have required that course to be pursued?

Mr. Speaker, it is bad enough for gentlemen to have to disagree in their statements; but I submit, sir, that the actions of the man who invokes the confidence of another; who secures belief in himself and secures the aid and co-operation of another, cheerfully and frankly given, and then turns upon him for the purpose of relieving himself against the consequence of his own acts and assails him, as that man assails me, cannot be characterized in this House as it should be without a violation of the rules which govern the House. I like fair, manly, and straightforward dealing; I shrink from controversy; I am opposed to strife; but if I have an enemy, or dissent from what a man says, I always appeal to him as the person to whom I should first express that dissent, and make known my dissatisfaction. I would not feel well to invoke the kindly office of any man and then deceive him into doing an improper thing, and then turn upon him and try to shield myself by taking advantage of his political antecedents or party affiliations or his geographical position to change the issue to one personal to him and invoke prejudice to his disadvantage.

There is one other fact that I ought to state, which passed from my recollection in its proper sequence in this connection. The bill which I offered in the House was given me by Mr. VAN VOORHIS, with the request, as he said, coming from the committee, that in the absence of Mr. RICHARDSON I should introduce it on Monday in the House. When it was presented to me I suggested that perhaps the committee had other business which had precedence or that they would prefer to offer and I could not do it without consulting other members of the committee. I did consult with other members of the committee, and was informed by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. TOWNSEND,] a member of the Committee on Commerce, that he had a bill which had precedence and which he desired to introduce at that time. Then it was agreed, since the committee could not probably be recognized, to move a suspension of the rules except in a single case, that I should ask unanimous consent of the House to extend to me the privilege in behalf of the committee of moving the suspension of the rules for the passage of this other bill.

Mr. PAGE. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Texas that he now read in this connection what the Speaker said as to the character of the bill.

Mr. REAGAN. I will do so. It is as follows; I read from the RECORD:

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I think this bill is so well understood that no time will be required for its discussion.

Mr. DUNNELL. Does this bill come from the Committee on Commerce?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. DUNNELL. Is it in here by unanimous consent, or on a motion to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. The motion is to suspend the rules and pass the bill which has been read.

Mr. DUNNELL. I would like to inquire if the Committee on Commerce has instructed the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] to move to suspend the rules and pass this bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is so informed.

Mr. REAGAN. I was so instructed by the Committee on Commerce.

I believe I called the attention of the reporter that such was the instruction of the Committee on Commerce, or that I had been authorized to make the motion. After that, and before the bill had been presented, Mr. RICHARDSON came into the House and took his seat. As soon as I saw him in his seat I went to him and took the bill which was given to me by Mr. VAN VOORHIS to report during his absence, and said I was requested in your absence to introduce this bill, but now that you are present I will hand it to you, so that you may introduce it yourself. He suggested then that perhaps I had better keep it and offer it if occasion presented itself, for the reason that possibly if I introduced the bill it might have the effect of obviating some objections which might otherwise be made on this side of the House. And upon his suggestion I brought the bill back, taking it for granted that it was the proper bill, and kept it for the purpose of introducing it myself as the bill of the committee. It was distinctly understood to be the bill of the committee, and Mr. VAN VOORHIS stood by and heard that statement made, that it was the committee's bill, but made no correction and made no question. And I want to call the attention of members to the fact that when the committee assembled to take action in reference to this matter, and called him before it, when this was a subject of inquiry before the committee, and all this was over, and inquired why he had not given Mr. REAGAN the true bill, or called attention to its not being the proper bill when it was passed, his answer was: "I would not have voted for the committee's bill." So that it will be seen, I trust, by my going to Mr. RICHARDSON and offering him again the bill and report that there was no purpose upon my part to mislead the House, or do anything but obey the wish of the committee according to the way that it was expressed by the committee.

I see in one of these interviews that Mr. VAN VOORHIS complains that we did not take action until Wednesday morning, (this matter having occurred on Monday,) and it is suggested either by him or his interviewer that in the mean time the steamship companies might have found it practicable, or words to that effect, to show the committee why they should insist upon the committee's bill and repudiate his; a direct charge upon the committee of corrupt motives and corrupt purposes. Now, what does that stand upon?

The committee when it considered the bill found in it a section providing for a charge at the rate of 50 cents a head on the immigrants as a fund for taking care of them in this country, and containing a provision that they should be returned where they were found to be improper persons to be landed here; the expenses of their return to be defrayed out of this fund primarily. When that came before the committee the committee said, "We think that is not best, because it would be an inducement to steamship companies to bring people here that should not be brought, to get double fare—fare here and fare back." To obviate that, and not in the interest of steamship companies, as I understood it, but directly the reverse, we struck that out and provided when steamship companies brought improper persons they should return them to the country whence they came at their own expense. That was our provision, not the provision of the original bill.

How under such a state of facts it could be suggested, how the motive came into the mind of any one to suggest that the committee had acted corruptly, that they had been corrupted by the steamship companies, especially when our action had been directly against their interest in correcting the provisions of the bill, I leave it for those who hear me and know the facts to determine.

The gentleman from New York, either in his interviews or his speech—I do not remember which—speaks of the fact of my having been arraigned before the committee and making an issue with him to excuse myself. Mr. Speaker, I have but to appeal to my fourteen associates that I never was arraigned before the committee or questioned before it, that I never made any issue with Mr. VAN VOORHIS or anybody else to excuse myself; and that I was even favoring the mildest possible action and going as far as we could do to excuse his act and get over it without strife rather than have such a scene as that we are now going through of personal explanation and contradiction.

These things my associates will justify me in saying, and they will show with what propriety this labored assault has been made upon me when I had given no provocation for it whatever. Perhaps the gentleman concluded there was no way to vindicate his own conduct but by assailing me in a manner that would be injurious to my reputation as a man and a member of this House. If such was his motive, God forgive him. The man who would accept friendship and then attempt to sacrifice his friend to protect himself against the effect of his own act is to be both pitied and forgiven by God and by man.

The gentleman also said I had the right to introduce any bill I chose to introduce before this House. I had no such right on that day and at that time under the rules of the House, and I knew it and if he knew the rules he would know it too. It was the day and the hour of the day for the committees to move to suspend the rules. I was acting in the capacity that became the hour, acting as I understood it under the instructions of a committee, obeying as I understood the behest of the committee to which I belonged. I knew I had no right, or would have known if such a question had arisen in my mind, to introduce a separate bill, and above all things I would not have been willing to introduce such a bill and palm off on this House the falsehood that it was the committee's bill and introduced by authority of the committee.

The gentleman says he never pretended that was the committee's bill. I have said to you what I have to say on that subject. When he brought the report to me and the bill with it, which was the only bill he brought, he gave me to understand—of course I will not undertake to say precisely what were his words, for I had no reason to charge my memory with them—but he gave me to understand it was the committee's bill. On my examining it and finding the language to which I have referred, he gave me to understand it was the committee's bill with the exception of an amendment which he said had been agreed to by the balance of the committee in relation to immigrants coming from the Canadian border. That I assented to, because he said the other members of the committee had done so.

The gentleman says in his interview that other members of the committee, Mr. TOWNSEND and Mr. WASHBURN, and others, examined the bill, and knew it was not the committee's bill. All I can say on this subject is what I have already said. He brought but one bill to me, with the one report, and that bill purported to be the bill reported by the committee to the House.

The gentleman charges the committee with sending reports to the newspapers. I can only speak for myself. I have sent no report to a newspaper, nor made any statement, public or private, to be used to his discredit and to his injury.

The gentleman closes by saying it must be a humiliating confession for me to make that, having read a bill and having introduced and advocated it, I did not know what was in it. Mr. Speaker, I have told the House the circumstances. It came to me, and was but once hastily read; and the long rigmarole the gentleman gives about ceremonious examination I repeat to the House is absolutely untrue. It came to me, sir, in that way. It is possible that I ought to have been more vigilant.

There was another circumstance which I have not stated to the House, which ought, perhaps, to have placed me on my guard; but I have not learned to distrust and require proof from a member of this House of a statement he may make. In addition to the change I made of the words in the first section of the bill when it was read at the Clerk's desk, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUENTHER] and the chairman of the committee called attention to the fact that there were some words in another section which had been stricken out by the committee.

Mr. GUENTHER. Allow me to correct the gentleman. I was not present when the bill was read; I was in the committee-room and was informed by the clerk that this bill was under discussion. I then came down here and examined a copy of the bill, and did not find in it this amendment. I then went to the Clerk's desk and discovered that some of the amendments which I had offered were not in the bill. I then called the attention of the Speaker and afterward of the gentleman from Texas to that fact.

Mr. REAGAN. The point I desire to make is that my attention was called by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUENTHER] and by the chairman of the committee [Mr. PAGE] to the fact that there were other words still in the bill which the committee had determined to strike out. We examined the bill and endeavored to make it conform to the committee's bill by striking out the words which the committee had directed to be stricken out of the bill.

Now, I confess that when I found two changes in the bill I was perhaps more credulous than I ought to have been in allowing it to go on. But it simply occurred to me that there had been mistakes in copying the bill, and it never occurred to me that there had been a willful attempt to deceive the committee or myself.

I cannot, therefore, hold myself utterly blameless, for perhaps, after discovering the errors in the bill, greater prudence ought to have put me and others more upon our guard than we were. All that I can say is, that from the beginning to the end I acted in perfect good faith, with an honest purpose to carry out the wishes of the committee and to serve the gentleman from New York.

The reward I get for that service is seen in the reviews he has published in the papers and in his speech made from the Clerk's desk this morning.

Mr. PAGE. I now ask that the bill on the Clerk's desk be read and substituted for the bill which was passed under a misapprehension of the facts, and which has been recalled by this House from the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The substitution cannot be made.

Mr. PAGE. Then I ask to put that bill on its passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, [Mr. PAGE,] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill to regulate immigration, and states that the bill now reported from the Committee on Commerce is the one agreed upon by that committee.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I object, unless——

Mr. McLANE. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I object, unless I can have one moment to make a statement.

Mr. McLANE. When the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN VOORHIS] interposes an objection to this bill——

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. One moment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can recognize but one gentleman at a time.

Mr. McLANE. I submit to the Chair that under Rule IX it is a question of the highest privilege for this House to maintain the integrity of its proceedings.

A statement has been submitted to the Chair that under the representation of the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN VOORHIS] such and such a paper, which he placed in the hands of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] was such and such a bill. The gentleman from Texas under that representation moved that the House by a suspension of its rules proceed to its consideration. The House proceeded to consider and to pass another bill than the one intended. The House then sent to the Senate and brought back the bill which it did not mean to pass.

That bill is now before the House, a bill which it considered—I will not say under false representations, because I want to confine myself to the strict fact—but a bill which it considered under a misapprehension. The House will remember that the gentleman from Texas stated that the bill which he asked to have passed under a suspension of the rules was such and such a bill. Now, to make no issue with the gentleman from New York——

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. McLANE. In a moment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that there is no difficulty about this matter. The House has heard gentlemen for above two hours on the question of explanation, and the Chair thinks that is now disposed of. The question is whether the House will proceed to consider the bill which the Committee on Commerce asks shall be considered. Is there objection?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McLANE. What I say is that the House is not bound——

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I will withdraw my objection if——

Mr. McLANE. I must ask the Chair to submit the question to the House.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I desire to say that I will withdraw my objection in half a minute if the gentleman will allow me. I have been in favor of passing the best bill that we could pass on this question. If we could not pass my bill, I have been in favor of passing something which would begin Federal legislation on the subject.

I am satisfied now, in the present condition of things, that only this bill can become a law, in all probability, in the form which the Committee on Commerce desires. I do not wish to resist the committee; I never have. And if I had not supposed that the committee were entirely satisfied with the bill in the form in which it went through the House I certainly should have had nothing to do with it.

Mr. MILLS. Now let us vote on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands there is no objection to the consideration of this bill, and the Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of fifty cents for each and every passenger not a citizen of the United States who shall come by steamer or sail-vessel from a foreign port to any port within the United States. The said duty shall be paid to the collector of customs of the port to which such passenger shall come, or if there be no collector at such port, then to the collector of customs nearest thereto, by the master, owner, agent, or consignee of every such vessel, within twenty-four hours after the entry thereof into such port. The money thus collected shall be paid into the United States Treasury, and shall constitute a fund to be called the immigrant fund, and shall be used, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to defray the expense of regulating immigration under this act, and for the care of immigrants arriving in the United States, for the relief of such as are in distress, and for the general purposes and expenses of carrying this act into effect. The duty imposed by this section shall be a lien upon the vessels which shall bring such passengers into the United States, and shall be a debt in favor of the United States against the owner or owners of such vessels; and the payment of such duty may be enforced by any legal or equitable remedy: Provided, That no greater sum shall be expended for the purposes hereinbefore mentioned at any port than shall have been collected at such port.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby charged with the duty of executing the provisions of this act and with supervision over the business of immigration to the United States, and for that purpose he shall have power to enter into contracts with such State commission, board, or officers as may be designated for the purpose by the governor of any State to take charge of the local affairs of immigration in the ports within said State, and to provide for the support and relief of such immigrants therein landing as may fall into distress or need public aid, under the rules and regulations to be prescribed by said Secretary; and it shall be the duty of such State commission, board, or officers so designated to examine into the condition of passengers arriving at the ports within such State in any ship or vessel, and for that purpose all or any of such commissioners or officers, or such other person or persons as they shall appoint, shall be authorized to go on board of and through any such ship or vessel; and if on such examination there shall be found among such passengers any convict, lunatic, idiot, or any person unable to take care of himself or herself without becoming a public charge, they shall report the same in writing to the collector of such port, and such persons shall not be permitted to land.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall establish such regulations and rules and issue from time to time such instructions not inconsistent with law as he shall deem best calculated to protect the United States and immigrants into the United States from fraud and loss, and for carrying out the provisions of this act and the immigration laws of the United States; and he shall prescribe all forms of bonds, entries, and other papers to be used under and in the enforcement of the various provisions of this act.

SEC. 4. That all foreign convicts, except those convicted of political offenses, upon arrival shall be sent back to the nations to which they belong and from whence they came. The Secretary of the Treasury may designate the State board of charities of any State in which such board shall exist by law, or any commission in any State, or any person or persons in any State, whose duty it shall be to execute the provisions of this section without compensation. The Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe regulations for the return of the aforesaid persons to the countries from whence they came, and shall furnish instructions to the board, commission, or persons charged with the execution of the provisions of this section as to the mode of procedure in respect thereto, and may change such instructions from time to time. The expense of such return of the aforesaid persons not permitted to land shall be borne by the owners of the vessels in which they came.

SEC. 5. That this act shall take effect immediately.

The bill (H. R. No. 6677) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PAGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. TALBOTT, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 4222) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 5559) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION.

Mr. KELLEY. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation, upon which the previous question has been ordered. The question is first upon agreeing to the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. KELLEY moved to reconsider the votes by which the amendments were adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. KELLEY. I now call the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. Pending that I submit the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation be recommitted to the Committee on Ways and Means with instructions to report a bill at the earliest time practicable repealing all internal-revenue laws and abolishing all internal-revenue offices, except section 3413 of the Revised Statutes and all amendments thereto, imposing a tax of 10 per cent. on certain circulating notes, and except also the laws relating to distilled spirits, the repeal to take effect on each particular subject of taxation at such time in the future as the committee may deem expedient, but not later on all subjects and offices than January 1, 1884; and to so reorganize the system of collecting taxation on distilled spirits as to dispense with all supernumerary officials and to secure the most economical and efficient method of raising such revenue.

Mr. ANDERSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order to call for a division of the question on this resolution, so that we may vote upon the motion to recommit as distinct from the instructions?

The SPEAKER. The motion is an entirety.

Mr. ANDERSON. Then I would like to ask another question. Is this motion subject to amendment?

The SPEAKER. Under the rules one motion to recommit is in order at this stage, and it has been held in practice that the motion cannot be amended.

Mr. ANDERSON. After this motion is disposed of, will it be in order to submit a simple motion to recommit?

The SPEAKER. It will not.

Mr. ANDERSON. So that we are compelled to vote this or nothing.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the resolution to recommit with the instructions read.

Mr. CARLISLE. I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] who has charge of this bill that we go on with the discussion before the vote is taken upon the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kentucky that the motion to recommit is made pending the demand for the previous question; and the hour for debate could not be taken at this time except by unanimous consent.

Mr. CARLISLE. My suggestion was that by consent the hour for debate might be consumed now and afterward the vote be taken upon recommitting with instructions and upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no objection to that.

Mr. KELLEY. We had better proceed in regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the yeas and nays on agreeing to this motion to recommit with instructions.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 57, nays, 126, not voting 108; as follows:

So the motion was not agreed to.

During the roll-call the following pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. LEEDOM with Mr. DAWES.
Mr. MARSH with Mr. EVINS.
Mr. SHERWIN with Mr. ROBERTSON.
Mr. DINGLEY with Mr. CONVERSE.
Mr. W. A. WOOD with Mr. NOLAN.
Mr. CORNELL with Mr. BLACK.
Mr. LACEY with Mr. LADD.
Mr. LINDSEY with Mr. MURCH.
Mr. FORD with Mr. HARDENBERGH.
Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, with Mr. DUNN.
Mr. BREWER with Mr. CLARDY.
Mr. MCCOID with Mr. CLARK.
Mr. GROUT with Mr. HERNDON.

Mr. SIMONTON with Mr. HUTCHINS, on final vote on internal-revenue reduction bill.
Mr. SKINNER with Mr. BEACH.
Mr. MCKINLEY with Mr. PAGE, on internal-revenue reduction bill.
Mr. HOUK with Mr. CHAPMAN.
Mr. FISHER with Mr. ERMENTROUT, except on tariff and internal-revenue bill.
Mr. MASON with Mr. WILLIS.
Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, with Mr. BRAGG.
Mr. FARWELL with Mr. HUTCHINS.
Mr. DWIGHT with Mr. MONEY, on the tax bill and political questions.
Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York, with Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina.
Mr. LOWE with Mr. HERNDON.
Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois, with Mr. CURTIN.
Mr. HENDERSON with Mr. HARDY.
Mr. RYAN with Mr. LE FEVRE.
Mr. HALL with Mr. BARBOUR.
Mr. LYNCH with Mr. BELTZHOOVER.
Mr. BARR with Mr. RANDALL.
Mr. HASKELL with Mr. ATHERTON.
Mr. HENDERSON with Mr. STEPHENS.
Mr. FROST with Mr. COX of New York.
Mr. BARR. My pair with Mr. RANDALL excepts this bill.
Mr. BELFORD. I desire to state that I was paired with Mr. BLACKBURN yesterday on this question, but as I am told the gentleman did not vote, I withdraw my vote.
Mr. KNOTT. Mr. BLACKBURN has voted.
Mr. BELFORD. Very well; then let my vote stand, and I withdraw the pair.
Mr. SIMONTON. I agreed to pair with Mr. HUTCHINS on the final vote on this bill, but that has been arranged and Mr. BELFORD substituted.
Mr. KNOTT. I voted under a misapprehension as to the scope of the instructions, and therefore change my vote.
Mr. FISHER. I am not paired on this vote with Mr. ERMENTROUT. I was paired on the Flower substitute and the Scales amendment, but, as Mr. ERMENTROUT is in favor of the bill, I have voted.
Mr. WASHBURN. I am not paired on this bill, and have voted.
On motion of Mr. KELLEY, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.
The vote was then announced as above recorded.
Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. The motion was made to recommit with instructions; would it be in order to commit without instructions?
The SPEAKER. It would not.
Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. Then I shall vote against the bill.
Mr. KELLEY. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.
Mr. WHITE. Is it in order to move to recommit without instructions?
The SPEAKER. It is not.
Mr. WHITE. I should like to know when it will be in order.
Mr. SPRINGER. If the demand for the previous question is voted down, would it not then be in order to move to recommit?
The SPEAKER. The Chair had better decide questions only as they arise.
Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to call attention to the fact that I will ask for a division on ordering the previous question.
The SPEAKER. The Chair might occupy a great deal of time and fall into error in deciding abstract questions.
Mr. MILLS. I demand the yeas and nays on ordering the previous question.
Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to have a division on ordering the yeas and nays, because, if the previous question is not ordered, a motion to recommit will be in order.
Mr. MILLS. I withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays.
The House divided; and there were—ayes 102, noes 48.
So the previous question was ordered.
Mr. KELLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.
The latter motion was agreed to.
Mr. KELLEY. According to an arrangement made last evening, I propose to give half an hour to the other side, and hand it over to my friend from Kentucky, [Mr. CARLISLE.]
Mr. CARLISLE. Mr. Speaker, I have no disposition to discuss this matter further myself, and therefore, as there are gentlemen on this side of the House who do wish to be heard upon it, I will yield to them. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT.]
Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Mr. Speaker, it will be recollected by the House that when the tariff bill came over from the Senate it contained a provision that the commission should have jurisdiction, not only over questions relating to the customs, but of the internal-revenue laws as well. It will be also remembered that the Committee on Ways and Means reported the bill to the House with the clause referring to the question of internal-revenue taxation stricken out; and the explanation was made that they intended at this session of Congress to take up the internal-revenue subject and reduce the burden of taxation upon the people in that respect. More than that, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, in his individual character, outside of this House, had gone round the country and made speeches and had written letters advocating the repeal of the whole system of internal-revenue taxation. We had reason, therefore, to believe that the Committee on Ways and Means were in earnest, and that the party which they represented were in earnest in their promise and their assurance to the country that the question of internal-revenue taxation should be taken up and substantial reforms inaugurated. Mr. Speaker, if there was ever a case in the world's history where the mountain has been in labor and the mouse has been born, it is in the bill which the gentlemen on the other side have very nearly engineered through this House. As I said at an earlier stage of the debate upon this bill, it gives no practical relief to any of the great industries of this country; and every time that an effort has been made to improve upon it it has been resisted by the solid vote of gentlemen upon that side of the House. This the country will not be likely to forget. Even on the question of free alcohol, an article which enters into many of the most important industries of the United States, in regard to the propriety of which legislation there is no possible controversy; in regard to which the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means admitted that relief should be given, and in regard to which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] said he would gladly co-operate with this side of the House to give relief, although we proposed to put it absolutely in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury to say upon what terms the relief should be given, it was resisted also by the solid vote of the Republican side of the House, and the extraordinary spectacle was presented to this House and to the country—a spectacle I have never witnessed before—of a House divided politically as to the question of whether relief should be given to the consumers of alcohol in the industrial arts or not; a question with which party affiliations can have no more to do than with the cavities in the moon.

Let the country recognize the fact that it is not right; it is not even good judgment; it is not even the recognition on both sides of the fact that relief should be given, that is any longer to rule here in Congressional legislation. It is the caucus which rules; it is the machine which dictates; and when the people of the country, now suffering from one end of the land to the other, when labor and capital are arrayed as they are in hostile ranks against each other through a considerable part of the country, and when they come to this House and ask relief they are told that the steering committee of the Republican majority of the House have forbidden action against the judgment, against the conscience of the House at large, and against the protest of gentlemen upon this side of the House. There is only one remedy, Mr. Speaker, I say to my fellow-countrymen. There is but one remedy. The Republican majority are dead to conscience; they are dead to the appeals of the suffering industries of the land; and there is left but one effectual remedy which the people can now apply—"smash the machine." I call upon the capitalists; I call upon the laborers now upon strikes; I call upon every man who does not want to arrest the prosperity of this country to come forward in the fall elections, and smash the Republican machine; and if they can find a Democratic machine, which I have never been able to do, on this side of the House or anywhere else, I want them to smash that, too. But for once let the interests and welfare of the country come to the front. Let the intelligence of this country see that the reforms demanded by every consideration of justice and public interest are achieved by their votes at the polls. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FLOWER. Mr. Speaker, I have voted for every amendment to this bill which looked toward a reduction of taxation. Failing in getting it amended, I shall vote for it, believing that half a loaf is better than no bread.

I am heartily in favor of the repeal of the whole system of internal-revenue taxation, except the tax on distilled spirits, and I believe our finances are in proper shape for its repeal at this time. I believe, sir, in a reduction of these taxes in the interest of public economy and in the interest of pure elections.

[Mr. CURTIN addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. CARLISLE. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. MCLANE.]

Mr. MCLANE. I can follow the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN] in their regrets that this bill does not afford all the relief that is desired. For myself, I have not waited for this bill to develop my earnest desire to wipe out the entire internal-revenue tax system. I regard it as the war tax of the country; and it was the duty long ago of Congress to have effaced it.

There is not now any necessity for one dollar of internal-revenue taxation. The indirect tax upon imports, even with a reduction of not less than from 30 to 50 per cent. of the present tariff duties, with a revenue duty upon articles now free from duty, will give this country $250,000,000 annually. Not a tax in the tariff list need be raised, in my judgment. I believe that without raising any tariff duty 1 per cent., but, as I have said, by reducing the tax on many articles, provided all are subject to a revenue duty according to value, the tariff on imports will yield more than $250,000,000 a year.

On another occasion I said to the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] what I now repeat, that his well-earned reputation would have been greatly increased if he had effaced the entire internal-revenue taxation and relied altogether upon indirect taxes for the support of the Government, taking all the time necessary for a gradual reduction and reform of our revenue system.

In the few moments which I have left I do not choose to leave any doubt upon the mind of my honorable friend that I expected him to provide fully for the national debt, for a liberal support of the Government, for pensions included, not that immense mass of arrears of pensions, amounting in the future to more than $300,000,000, for that was a proper subject for debt. But the debt of the country, whether for war or for pensions, and an economical administration of the Government, can be amply provided for by revenue derived from indirect taxation.

I will vote for this bill, because I am ready to vote for any bill that reduces internal taxation. If I did not vote for the resolution to recommit, it was because I could not face my constituency with a vote in favor of taking the tax off tobacco and refusing to take it off banks. I am ready to take it off both, and have so voted. My constituency could never have excused me if I had had so little intelligence as not to perceive that a reasonable construction of the honorable gentleman's proposition would have released tobacco from taxation, but would not have released banks from at least five millions of taxation imposed by the national banking law and released by this bill.

Mr. FLOWER. We supposed it took everything off.

Mr. McLANE. I would have released both banks and tobacco from taxation, and the resolution to recommit is ambiguous and unsatisfactory. This being a substantive bill for the release of banks from taxation, I shall vote for it. In voting for this bill I am at liberty, not to reproach, but to express my sincere sorrow that the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] who has so often led us on with the promise that he would efface all this internal-revenue taxation still leaves it on the country.

Mr. FLOWER. I voted for the proposition with the understanding that it took off everything.

Mr. McLANE. It did not, in my opinion.

Mr. FLOWER. That it took off all internal taxation, including the tax on banks.

Mr. McLANE. It is open to the construction that at least five millions per annum of tax imposed by the national banking law on the banks, repealed by the law under consideration, will be left undisturbed and unrepealed.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. We do not so understand it.

Mr. McLANE. It is so, in my opinion, nevertheless, and just as the honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] may have to explain his vote, I will have to explain mine.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I understand that it relieves the banks. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CARLISLE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota. [Mr. DUNNELL.]

Mr. DUNNELL. The bill now pending and upon which we are soon to vote purports to be a relief bill. Its object is a reduction of taxation. The bill does not, however, relieve the burdens of the people. It does not at all meet the expectations or demands of the people.

I have believed that this Congress ought to have relieved the people of more or less of taxation. As you know, Mr. Speaker, I insisted in the early part of the session, when the tariff-commission bill was under consideration, that the tariff of the country should have undergone some revision by this Congress and at this session of Congress. Congress, however, decided to refer that question to a commission.

We now have this bill before us reducing internal taxes by some $20,000,000, but in a direction which I think will not fully meet the approval of our constituents. I am in favor of some portions of this bill, but I am not in favor of the bill as a whole. It is not unlikely that I may address my constituents in different parts of my district during the approaching campaign. To illustrate, suppose that at some quiet gathering there be two hundred voters present. They will be representative men; they will represent the farms; they will represent the shops; they will represent the industries of the district. In that meeting of two hundred voters there will be a couple of bankers, two or three druggists, and a few mechanics; four-fifths out of the two hundred will be farmers.

In the presence of these men I must give some account of my votes here given. Those farmers will not be especially anxious to know what relief my votes have given to the one or two bankers that are in my audience, for they are the most thrifty men whom I shall address in that meeting. They are the least burdened of the men who are listening to what I may have to say. And the other men we relieve by this bill are not sufferers from the system of internal-revenue taxation.

When I speak to the farming element of my audience, and say that I have voted to take off the stamp tax on matches, some intelligent man in that crowd may say to me, "If you had taken off 25 per cent. of the duty on sugar, then by the savings of a single week I could have bought all the matches I need in a year."

It will be a very poor reply to say to these men that we have relieved them from the tax on matches. It is but a mere drop compared with the relief that might have been given in some other way.

I have no war to make on the banks. I think we ought not to be under the necessity of going home and be compelled to announce that we have simply relieved the banks of their burden; simply that and nothing more. We cannot expect to meet the approval of the people.

I said the other day, Mr. Speaker, that this Congress had expended large sums of money. We shall find the appropriations of this session, when footed up, will be very large. I was sorry this morning that we had not saved more largely of our income for the past year when a proposition was made before the Committee on Ways and Means by a banker from New York to take $200,000,000 of our national debt at 2 per cent., payable after one year at the option of the Government. I would rather vote to retain these $20,000,000, that we may have funds on hand with which to meet these grand opportunities for the reduction of the national debt. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, In the short period of five minutes I can submit but few words on this measure. I suppose it is hardly worth while to attempt any argument whatever, as it is perfectly manifest that it is to become a law regardless of all argument.

This bill is brought to us with the statement that the country demands reduction in taxation. But, sir, while I am willing to admit that the taxes of this country are in a measure burdensome, the relief proposed in this bill is not the relief desired or demanded. It is not relief to those who are burdened; it is a reduction in the wrong direction, a reduction of taxes without relief to the masses of the people.

This legislation will be regarded by the great body of our people—those engaged in the development of our agricultural and the various industrial interests of our country, those busy workers who lay, broad and deep, the foundations of prosperity, and whose broad shoulders bear the burdens of taxation—as one more response by the Republican party to the demands of the money-power.

Every effort made by the Democratic side of the House to amend this bill in order that the laboring people—those who toil on the farm and in the workshop, those who really feel the burdens of taxation—might have some small measure of relief, has been resisted by a solid vote from the Republican side, with one or two honorable exceptions. King Caucus was invoked to bind your conscience upon this measure. You there solemnly declared that no amendment was to be permitted; that no substantial relief should be given to those who need it; but only the capitalists and corporations should receive consideration at your hands. This fact will not escape the attention of the people; and I am greatly mistaken if many of you will not find it hard to give your constituency a satisfactory explanation when called upon, as you surely will be.

This measure is in full accord with the legislation the Republican party has given the country, affecting the banking corporations and money-power, during the last twenty years.

The people will not fail to remember that the same power that dictates and demands this legislation demanded the exception clause in the legal-tender act, the result of which was a tremendous discount upon greenbacks, to the great detriment and injury of the country. They will remember that when the national banking system was organized their circulation was limited to $300,000,000, but the bankers came forward and demanded unlimited circulation, and the Republican party willingly granted it.

The people will remember that the banks (constituting the money-power of the country) were required to keep on deposit 25 per cent. of their circulation, but they regarded that as an onerous restriction. They came forward and demanded that they be relieved from it; and in obedience to the demand the Republican party hastened to remove the restriction to the extent of 20 per cent., requiring them to keep on deposit but 5 per cent.

The people will remember that the bonds were payable in the lawful money of the United States, but the gentry were fearful that they might be paid in greenbacks, and they demanded that their bonds should be made payable in coin, and it was done. They also demanded that their bonds should be exempt from taxation, and that was granted. Their bonds being payable in coin, could be discharged in silver as well as gold. They did not like this, so they secured the passage of an act demonetizing silver, thus making their bonds payable only in gold, thereby destroying one-half of the money of the country, and doubling the value of their bonds, as well as the debt which the people must eventually pay.

Neither will the people fail to remember that it was these bondholders and money-sharks, whose power is so potent in securing the passage of this bill, who secured the repeal of the law levying an income tax. This was the only tax that directly reached the bondholder and the capitalist of the country.

The people will see in the light of past legislation for the special benefit of the banking interest of the country that this measure is a fitting sequel to what has gone before.

This Congress, under the lash of a Republican caucus, in obedience to the demands of the money-power, are, by this bill, to remove the last remnant of taxation upon banking institutions, whereby they were compelled to contribute something toward defraying the expenses of this Government and liquidating our large national debt.

There is scarcely a member in this House but what would be willing to remove the stamp tax on bank checks, drafts, orders, and vouchers, as well as the tax on matches. But in removing these taxes, which should be removed, you couple it with the removal of the tax on bank capital and bank deposits, and the reduction of taxes on cigars and cigarettes, as well as a reduction of the tax upon dealers and rectifiers of whisky, and dealers and manufacturers of tobacco. Coupled with these provisions, the whole bill becomes odious in the extreme and an insult to the great mass of tax-payers in this country.

It is legislation for the benefit of the few and against the many. It is of the same class and a fitting companion for that legislation given to the country by the Republican party for the past twenty years, under which has been built up the great corporations and monopolies which have robbed the people of more than two hundred million acres of the public domain and are fast absorbing the entire wealth of the land. They have virtually taken control of the Government. They dictate all legislation in which they are interested, and, as in this case, they command and it is obeyed.

It is well for us to remember the warning words of Daniel Webster, that great statesman and expounder of the fundamental principles of our Government, when he said "the freest government cannot long endure where the tendency of the law is to create a rapid accumulation of property in the hands of a few and to render the masses of the people poor and dependent." Neither should we, as legislators, disregard those just and patriotic sentiments uttered by General Jackson, in his veto message of the United States Bank, when he said:

> It is to be regretted that the rich and powerful too often bend the acts of government to their selfish purposes. Distinctions in society will always exist under every just government; equality of talents, of education, and of wealth cannot be produced by human institutions.
> In the full enjoyment of the gifts of Heaven, and the fruits of superior industry, economy, and virtue, every man is equally entitled to protection by law. But when the laws undertake to add to these natural and just advantages artificial distinctions, to grant titles, gratuities, and exclusive privileges; to make the rich richer and the potent more powerful; the humble members of society, the farmers, mechanics, and laborers, who have neither the time nor the means of securing like favors to themselves, have a right to complain of the injustice of their government. There are no necessary evils in government. Its evils exist only in abuses. If it would confine itself to equal protection and as Heaven does its rains shower its favors alike on the high and low, the rich and poor, it would be an unqualified blessing.

In conclusion let me say to my Republican friends, this privileged and class legislation by which the rich are exempted from taxation and the burdens of government are imposed upon the poor, by which the laboring people are robbed of the just reward of their toil and labor; by which the rich are made richer and the poor are made poorer; by which you refuse to give relief to the overburdened and suffering, and by which you manifest a complete subserviency to the will of the corporations and money-power is producing its legitimate results.

Look abroad over our land to-day. Thousands of laboring-men, unable to earn a living, have gone on a strike, and are walking the streets of your cities and manufacturing towns.

The balance of trade is against our country, and our entire commercial and business interests are justly alarmed.

Sirs, your unjust legislation has disturbed the relations of capital and labor, and have arrayed one against the other, or rather you have permitted the money-power to dictate the legislation of the country, by which it has secured to itself exemptions and special privileges by which labor is robbed of its just reward. And to-day, notwithstanding incessant toil from early dawn until the shades of night shut out the light of day, the poor laborer finds himself without even the necessaries of life. He returns to his humble abode to meet his companion in sorrow and his children in rags and poverty.

Let me say to the Republican party a day of reckoning will come, and woe to that party when it does come. A long-suffering people will sooner or later call you to an account for your stewardship. And when they do you will call upon the rocks and mountains to fall upon you and hide you from the presence of an indignant and outraged people.

Mr. KELLEY. I yield five minutes of the remaining half hour to the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. BLANCHARD.]

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I have voted in favor of every amendment that has been offered to perfect or improve this bill; and had a motion to recommit the bill with proper instructions been made, I would likewise have voted to recommit. But now when all these amendments have been voted down, now when the motion which was made to recommit has failed and the question recurs upon the final passage of the bill, I find it to be within the line of my duty to support the pending measure.

Mr. FLOWER. That is just my position.

Mr. BLANCHARD. In giving my vote for the bill I act upon the policy of taking what I can get, if I cannot get all I want or am entitled to. There is just a sufficient amount of kernel in this bill to address it to my judgment in the sense of making it incumbent upon me in the line of my duty to support it.

In saying that I will support the bill I desire at the same time to protest against it. I say that the Republican majority upon the Committee on Ways and Means have been derelict in their duty to the country in failing to present here a bill adequate to meet the demands of the people. But, sir, that is a matter for the Republican majority of the Committee on Ways Means to be responsible for before the people, and I trust that at the elections this fall, when the people of the country come to consider the issues before them and the legislation of this Congress, they will hold the Republican party strictly accountable for giving them what is well-nigh a stone when they asked for bread. A loaf was demanded, but this bill meagerly and begrudgingly gives only a crumb.

But, sir, the crumb they hold out to us as their ultimatum I am constrained to take for the people I represent, on the basis that when a starving man asks for a loaf and a crumb is tendered to him he is not to refuse that crumb because the loaf is withheld. I will take it, serving notice upon the Republican majority that at a more propitious time a fuller measure of justice will be exacted. I represent a constituency which, while composed of a majority of agriculturists, there is yet a large percentage of mercantile men among them, and in their interest I shall vote for the bill, because that portion of it which provides for taking off the stamps on bank checks and bank capital and deposits will be directly beneficial to them, and to that portion of my constituency who are agriculturists it will be an indirect benefit at least, because it is in the line of cheapening money.

If these taxes on bank capital, bank checks, and bank deposits are taken off, the merchants can go to the banker and say to him, "You must loan me money at a less rate of discount than I have been before paying for it;" and when he gets his money at a less discount he can afford to loan it to the farmer and planters in the way of advance and supplies to enable them to make their crops at a less rate of interest.

It is for these reasons, Mr. Speaker, that I shall vote for this bill. Then, too, that portion of the bill which takes off the tax on matches and the tax on proprietary medicines is at least some paltry benefit to the people whose welfare is to be consulted.

Now, sir, protesting against the inadequacy and insufficiency of the bill, I shall yet vote for it on account of the small benefit, at least, to result to the people from it.

Mr. WHITE. Will the gentleman let me ask him how much of this twenty-six millions and a half the farmer will have the benefit of?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. KELLEY. I yield for ten minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, the internal-revenue bill now under consideration provides for the removal of all internal taxes except the tax upon tobacco, distilled spirits, and malt liquors, and reduces the income of the Government from this source about $26,000,000. With due regard for the prospective receipts of the Government, the large demand upon the Treasury for thepayment of pensions, and the uncertainty as to the effect of a revision of the tariff upon the receipts from customs duties, it is as far, in my judgment, as we should go at this session of Congress in the reduction of internal taxation.

We shall, by regular appropriations for the different Departments of the Government for the next fiscal year, including deficiencies for pensions and other items in 1882, appropriate at this session about $266,000,000. The permanent annual appropriation, including $65,000,000 for interest on the public debt, and $45,611,714.22 for the sinking fund, will amount to $126,000,000. This, added to the regular appropriations, will amount in round numbers to about three hundred and ninety-two million dollars. Deduct from this $42,000,000 for receipts from the Post-Office Department and we have a net expenditure of $350,000,000.

The estimated revenue from all sources under existing law, in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, is $400,000,000. Deducting the estimated expenditures as above, we have an estimated surplus of $50,000,000. Deduct from this the $26,000,000 reduction proposed by this bill, and we have but $24,000,000 surplus for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883. With this showing, is there real cause for alarm at the prospective surplus in the Treasury?

Although the interest on the public debt will be less year by year as liquidation goes on, it is estimated that it will require for the payment of pensions in the year 1884 $150,000,000, or an increase over the year 1883, just provided for, of $50,000,000. Should the bill now under consideration become a law, unless there should be a large increase in the revenue from customs and the tax on distilled spirits and tobacco, we should not be able to meet the demand of the sinking fund in 1884. I therefore have opposed further reduction of the internal-revenue taxes.

It is proposed to revise the tariff. We have already begun the work for that purpose in the establishment of the commission. No man or body of men can tell what effect such a revision will have upon the receipts from customs; it may increase them or it may reduce them. It is expected that the tariff will be changed on raw material; perhaps some on which we nowreceive a revenue will be put upon the free list, and on others a reduction may be made, and the changes made upon manufactured goods may increase or decrease importation and thereby affect the revenue. Until the tariff is revised and business adjusts itself to the new laws I submit that we should not make radical changes affecting the revenue from internal taxation as now remaining upon the two great luxuries, tobacco and whisky.

It is claimed in the discussion on this bill that it affords no relief to the poor man save on the single item of matches, but is in the interest of capital. I deny this. Take the tax on proprietary medicines, &c., amounting to $2,000,000. I claim that this class of goods is used to a greater extent by the poor than by the rich. These remedies are used mainly, whether wisely or not, by those who can ill afford to consult a physician for their minor ills.

The stamp tax on checks is paid largely by merchants and is an expense which must be added to the cost of the various kinds of merchandise sold to and used by all classes.

The removal of the tax upon bank capital and deposits is in the interest of all classes of our citizens. The tax is a burden upon business, and in the end is paid by the consumer, whoever he may be. Although the bank may in the first instance pay the tax levied, nothing can be plainer than the fact that it is next paid or assumed by the borrower of the bank's money, who is the merchant and manufacturer, and he in turn adds it to the cost of his goods, when it finally reaches the consumer, and the poorer the consumer the more burdensome the tax.

The capital in banks of deposit is largely owned in my section of the country by the savings-banks, and to the extent of relief this affords it is directly in the interest of the wage laborer, for, as I had occasion to show in my speech on the tariff, about three-fourths of the deposits in our savings-banks belong to the wage laborers.

Mr. MILLS. Do I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts to say that of the two hundred and forty millions of deposits in the savings-banks in Massachusetts three-quarters is owned by the wage laborers?

Mr. RUSSELL. That may not be true in all sections of New England. My statement and figures relate to the manufacturing cities of Lawrence and Lowell, where $16,000,000 is deposited in savings-banks so largely to the credit of wage laborers.

Mr. MILLS. Then I must say that they are very rich wage laborers.

Mr. RUSSELL. They are, and are made so by the operation of the protective tariff. It has been urged by some in this debate that relief should have been afforded at this session of Congress to the industries of the country through changes in the tariff. Now, you all know how difficult it is to deal with the tariff by piecemeal. If a single item of relief should be brought in here and considered in Committee of the Whole the whole tariff system would be loaded on to it and it would fall of its own weight.

The several attempts to afford relief by new legislation to certain industries destroyed by or suffering under errors in the law or the rulings of the Departments on technical points have not received the fair and considerate judgment of the House.

The other side of this House, or a majority of you, who are for a tariff for revenue only, have declared in speech and conversation that you would not remove all duties and destroy manufacturing industries; yet, whenever an opportunity occurs, you attempt to strike deadly blows at them when they come to Congress to seek relief.

Your votes the other day on the knit-goods question show conclusively how futile it is to expect, at your hands, fair dealing for industries that are stricken down by mistakes and technical points of law.

And your attempts on June 6, by the introduction of a bill, under a suspension of the rules, to put trace-chains on the free list when there is a duty upon the raw material used in their manufacture which makes it impossible for our manufacturers to compete with the foreign manufacturer even at the same rate of wages, show how empty are your words of promise for encouragement to home industries.

The argument in favor of rapid and large reductions in the revenue to prevent an overflowing Treasury, which might invite lavish expenditures, will be fully met and answered by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee before the close of this session.

Mr. ORTH. Mr. Speaker, taxes are regarded, and properly so, as among the necessary burdens incident to government, whether municipal, State, or national.

Those who enjoy protection to life, liberty, and property must contribute to the support of the government which gives this protection. While taxation is burdensome, it should be so regulated that its burdens fall as lightly and as equitably as possible upon the people. This is a most important and difficult duty, but it is a duty devolving upon the legislator, and his aim should be to discharge it faithfully and impartially. He should see to it that taxation shall be placed equally and fairly upon the property and pursuits of our citizens.

In a country like ours, where the material interests of the people are diversified and frequently conflicting, the difficulties incident to this duty of the legislator are correspondingly increased. To legislate for fifty millions of people occupying a continent with almost every variety of climate, soil, and production known to the world, a people possessing tireless energy, indomitable perseverance, and exhibiting unexampled progress in every pursuit of life, is a task requiring deliberate judgment, patient research, a thorough acquaintance with the wants of the people, and a disposition to act with the utmost fairness and impartiality toward all classes, interests, and sections of the country.

These suggestions are peculiarly applicable to all questions affecting revenue. It has been most truly said that "the power to tax is the power to destroy." How exceedingly important is it, therefore, that this great power shall be exercised with cool judgment and enlightened patriotism. And this remark applies with equal force to the repeal as to the levying of taxes.

Extraordinary emergencies may arise in the lifetime of a nation requiring extraordinary action, but when the emergency no longer exists, the action occasioned thereby should also cease.

In our history we have had and now have two systems of taxation for the purpose of raising national revenue. The one has been constant and enduring, the other exceptional and temporary; the one raising revenue by means of duties upon articles imported from foreign lands, the other by internal taxation upon the business of the country.

The American people have long been familiar with the tariff system, and it has always commended itself to their favor, because it is an inexpensive method for raising revenue, and if properly adjusted is equitable in its operations; besides it affords to the Government the means for protecting the various industries of the country from the injurious effects of cheap labor and low rates of interest which obtain abroad.

A discussion of the present tariff in its details would not be in order during the consideration of this bill, yet I cannot forbear saying that in my judgment, remaining substantially as when enacted in 1864, it needs thorough revision and many changes. This can be done quite well without on the one hand impairing its efficiency as a means of providing revenue, and on the other hand of affording adequate and proper protection to our various mechanical, manufacturing, and agricultural interests.

The ever varying changes in the mode and manner of business operations; the introduction of improved machinery; the application of new principles and methods; the opening of avenues of commerce; changes in the habits, tastes, and pursuits of our people, with many other causes, not only suggest but require important modifications in financial legislation. It is eighteen years since the adoption of our present tariff, and these have been years of extraordinary activity, progress, and improvement in almost all the business relations of life. The prices of fabrics, property of almost every description, together with labor, have not been exempt from the general change, and all these are potent arguments for a revision of our present tariff.

Congress during this session should have entered upon this important work, and for this reason I voted against the "tariff-commission bill," which recently became a law, because I saw in it a postponement for probably a year or two of the work which should be done now, besides, in a great measure, delegating to another body (the tariff commission) the work which under the Constitution is devolved upon Congress.

The other system of revenue by internal taxes is, as I have stated, exceptional in our history. We have adopted it three several times—during the revolutionary war, the war of 1812, and that for the suppression of the rebellion. It has never been favorably received by our people, because there are of necessity features connected with its assessment and collection, in addition to its expensive character, which are annoying to the citizen, subjecting him to a species of espionage at variance with the principles of popular government. After the Revolution and the war of 1812, when the necessity for internal taxes had ceased, the laws providing for them were repealed.

Our people then submitted to such taxation because the exigencies of war required extraordinary taxation, and so the law passed when rebellion was inaugurated is gradually becoming smaller in its proportions, and the comparatively few items remaining will, except the tax on spirits, doubtless cease altogether in the near future.

While the war and its necessities continued I voted for every dollar of internal tax necessary, and when the necessity lessened I voted from time to time to lessen such tax. It is upon this principle that I shall vote for this bill, although in some of its features it could, as I believe, be much improved.

The bill, however, is a step in the right direction—it is a reduction of taxes. Every dollar of reduced taxation lifts a dollar from the burdens of the people, and whenever we can alleviate these burdens it is our bounden duty thus to legislate.

This has been the practice and policy of the Republican party for the last twenty years, and is one of the bright spots in its history. Whenever taxes became a vital necessity we did not hesitate to assess them, trusting to the patriotism of the people for support, and the support was cheerfully given. When the necessity ceased, and we could reduce taxes, we did not hesitate to do so.

It is somewhat amusing to listen to some of our Democratic friends denouncing the reductions contained in this bill, especially so when we remember the Democratic opposition to these very taxes when national necessity required they should be assessed and collected.

THE PUBLIC DEBT AND ITS REDUCTION.

In this connection it is both interesting and instructive to glance briefly at the past and present condition of our public debt, and especially as such glance will exhibit to the people the manner in which the Republican party has managed the fiscal affairs of the Government since its accession to power.

At the close of the war our national debt had reached the highest point known in our history, the astounding sum of $2,381,530,294.96, or, speaking in round numbers, the sum of twenty-three hundred millions of dollars. This was its amount on the 31st day of August, 1865. The mind can hardly comprehend the immensity of these figures. The contemplation of the task of entering upon its reduction and final extinction might well appal the wisest statesmanship.

The Republican party was, however, pledged by every sense of national honor and of justice to our creditors to such reduction and payment, and in the face of discouragement from the timid, and whisperings of repudiation from the dishonest, it addressed itself bravely and unhesitatingly to the accomplishment of this more than herculean task. A reliance upon the patriotism and inherent honesty of the great mass of our citizens, and a firm determination to retrench the public expenditures, to enforce a rigid economy, were the means by which the Republican party expected to succeed in accomplishing the duty thus imposed upon them.

What has been the result of these efforts? The amount of our interest-bearing national debt at the close of the fiscal year, June 30, 1882, is only $1,463,810,400, showing a reduction of $917,719,894.96 in the last seventeen years, or at the rate of $53,983,523.23 each year.

Not a month, nor scarcely a day during all that time, has passed without witnessing a reduction. With this most excellent record the Republican party has justly merited the plaudit of "good and faithful servant."

The reduction in the interest of the national debt shows an equally good record.

At the foregoing date, August 30, 1865, we were paying an annual interest of $150,977,697.87, and now at the close of the fiscal year, June 30, 1882, the amount of our annual interest is only $57,360,110.75, showing a reduction of $93,617,587.12, or at the rate of $5,506,915.71 per year during the last seventeen years.

But probably the most gratifying part of this review is the fact that in 1865 the average rate of interest was 6 per cent., while now the average rate is less than 4 per cent.

This is the true financial barometer of our national credit: as the rate of interest diminishes, in the same proportion our credit rises.

A policy and a party producing these great results are not to be hastily abandoned or set aside. "Let well enough alone" is a wise maxim, applicable to all the relations of life. In fact, the financial success of the Republicans is not only without a parallel in history but stands forth as a reminder to the Democracy of their continued financial blunders and failures.

THE REDUCTION OF TAXES.

The national debt has not only been reduced, as I have already shown, but there has also been a very great reduction in the national taxes.

On the 13th of July, 1866, Congress passed the first act providing for the reduction of internal-revenue taxes, and this has been followed by other acts in time and amounts as specified in the following table, compiled from official sources, namely:

Act of July 13, 1866	$65,000,000
Act of March 2, 1867	40,000,000
Act of February 3, 1868	23,000,000
Act of March 31, 1868, } Act of July 20, 1868, }	45,000,000
Act of July 14, 1870	55,000,000
Act of June 6, 1872	21,131,000
	249,131,000

To which is to be added the reduction made in the revenue from customs by the following acts of Congress:

Act of July 14, 1870	30,000,000
Act of May 1, 1872, } Act of June 6, 1872, }	31,215,409
Making a grand total of reduction of taxes since 1866 of	310,346,409

Or, speaking in round numbers, an annual reduction of over three hundred million dollars, from which the people have been relieved by the action of the Republican party.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, I repeat, "by the action of the Republican party," for although the Democratic party had control of this House of Congress from March 4, 1875, to March 4, 1881, they have, with one or two insignificant exceptions, made no reduction in the taxes or taken any steps to relieve the people from their burdens, notwithstanding their constant professions of special friendship for the people.

THE CLAIMS OF THE SOLDIERS.

Due care must be exercised that the revenues shall not be reduced to a point which would embarrass the Government in meeting promptly all the demands legitimately made upon it, and for which appropriations are made by Congress. One of the largest, as well as the most praiseworthy, of all our appropriations is that which is passed every year to meet the claims of our soldiers. The nation has made, and must continue to make, liberal provision for those who deprived themselves of the comforts of home and risked life and health to save it from destruction. Our pension-roll, larger than that of any other country, is the proudest memorial ever erected by the justice and generosity of a nation to the bravery and heroism of its defenders. We shall continue to add to that sacred list hereafter, and death alone can lessen its numbers. The number of pensioners now is, in round numbers, 272,000. The number of unadjudicated claims for pensions now pending before the Commissioner is about 260,000, and the number of new claims now being filed is about 25,000 per month. Of the number on the pension-rolls, 15,289 reside in the State of Indiana, the annual value of whose pensions amounts to the sum of $1,638,325, and the annual payment, with arrears added, amounts to the sum of $3,106,817.

The number of pensioners residing in the ninth Congressional district of the State, by counties, is as follows:

County.	Number of pensioners.	Annual value of pensions.	Annual payment, with arrears.
Boone	209	$22,336	$42,438
Clinton	152	16,312	30,993
Hamilton	175	18,768	35,659
Madison	161	17,248	32,771
Tippecanoe	344	36,832	69,981
Tipton	158	16,856	32,026
Total	1,199	128,352	243,868

In 1862 the amount of money paid to our pensioners was $790,384.76, and during the last twenty years the amount thus paid was $506,345,044.21.

This Congress has appropriated for the ensuing fiscal year, to pay pension and arreages, the sum of $100,000,000.

My colleague, [Mr. BROWNE,] who as chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions is in a position to make a reasonable estimate on the subject, said in a recent speech in this House:

> We have already paid more than $500,000,000, and what is there before us that admonishes us to be vigilant while we are being just? According to the estimates more than $300,000,000 are yet to be paid for arrearages. If at the end of seven years the survivors of the Mexican war are added to the rolls at $8 per month, the grand total at the end of twenty-five years yet to be provided for will reach the enormous sum of $1,347,651,593.
> Add to this sum the amount already paid, and the pension-roll at the end of the year 1906 will have taxed our resources $1,853,996,637, or to an amount exceeding our present national debt. To be sure this is an estimate only, but it is as likely to be under as above the sum that will be demanded.

CAN WE SAFELY REDUCE OUR TAXES.

In my judgment, even taking the most cautious view as to our probable revenues during the coming year, making allowances for temporary deficiencies which may arise from causes beyond legislative control, we can with perfect safety to the public interest, honor, and credit, proceed in relieving the people from taxation of not less than $50,000,000 per annum. We can do this and still provide for all legitimate and reasonable demands upon the national Treasury, and also for a continued monthly payment of the principal of our debt.

We have now an overflowing Treasury. This presents a constant temptation for all kinds of projects which will tend to its depletion without any corresponding benefit to the people. An overflowing Treasury is used as an argument for extravagance in appropriations, for so-called liberality in so-called public schemes, and the tendency is constantly to wild and visionary projects, which usually result to the benefit of the few at the expense of the many.

Prudence, economy, and retrenchment should constantly characterize the nation to the same extent as a prudent citizen manages his own private affairs.

We want no overflowing Treasury; we want no wild or visionary schemes to be undertaken by the Government simply because we have plenty of money on hand.

We must not forget that every dollar received in the shape of revenue by the Government comes directly from the people, and especially from that large and most meritorious class of the people, the producer, whose labor is the foundation of all our wealth.

At the present rate of taxation our entire debt will be extinguished inside of the next ten years. While it is at all times most excellent and praiseworthy both for individuals and nations to pay their debts, when in their power to do so, yet this generation has already been burdened by taxation to a most extraordinary degree, and the postponement of the final payment of our debt for ten or fifteen years would be a great relief to the present generation and would not entail inconvenience, much less hardship, to those who would by this course be called upon to pay comparatively a very small portion of the public debt, incurred to save a government whose benefits they will enjoy.

Let us examine the figures respecting our revenues and expenditures, and see whether I am not correct in this position.

Estimated resources for fiscal year:

Receipts from customs for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882	$219,000,000 00
Receipts from internal revenue for the same period	146,265,486 56
From all other sources for the same period	35,000,000 00
Total of revenue	400,265,486 56
To which add "cash balance in Treasury"	140,604,474 26
Making a total of	540,869,960 82

Expenditures for fiscal year:

Pensions	$100,000,000 00
Legislative, executive, judicial, War and Navy, Indians, postal service, Agricultural Department, rivers and harbors, and miscellaneous, as appears by appropriations already made and estimates of Secretary of the Treasury	131,296,000 00
Sinking fund	45,000,000 00
Interest on public debt	57,360,110 00
Total expenditures	333,656,110 00
Surplus in Treasury	207,213,450 82
	540,869,560 82

Take from the above surplus in the Treasury the sum of one hundred millions, to remain as an available cash balance to meet any emergency, and it leaves a surplus of nearly $107,000,000.

From these figures, and they are approximately correct, founded upon official data and estimates carefully prepared by the Secretary of the Treasury, and my position is fully sustained, that Congress would be perfectly safe in making an annual reduction in our taxes, internal and tariff, of not less than $50,000,000, and still have an abundance of means to meet all demands on the Government, and a large annual reduction of our debt.

THE PROPOSED REDUCTION.

The bill now before us to "reduce internal-revenue taxation" proposes to repeal the following taxes, to wit:

First. The stamp tax on bank checks, drafts, orders, and vouchers.

Second. The tax on the capital and deposits of banks and bankers.

Third. The tax on the capital and deposits of national banks.

Fourth. The tax on matches, perfumery, medicinal preparations, &c.

Fifth. Reduction of tax on dealers in and manufacturers and peddlers of leaf tobacco and cigars.

Sixth. Reduction of the tax on cigars.

The annual reduction effected by this bill on the foregoing items will amount to the sum of $23,922,790.

It was hardly to be expected that such a diversity of opinion should exist in this House even as to this exceedingly small reduction and the articles and business embraced in this bill. The Government does not need this revenue. Indeed the reduction could easily be made much larger than is provided in this bill, and I shall cheerfully vote for it, because reduction is necessary and because, as I have already said, the internal-revenue system was inaugurated as one of the necessities of the war, and as the necessities cease the tax should cease.

In conclusion, permit me to add that I trust this "little bill" is but the beginning of efforts by Congress to revise most thoroughly our entire revenue laws, tariff and internal, to eradicate whatever defects may exist and to remedy any unjust or unequal operation, if any, of their provisions. Taxation is not one of the most desirable things of life, and especially so when we consider that its burdens ultimately rest most heavily on the producing class. You may assess your taxes upon the capitalist, upon the wealth of the country, whether of individuals or corporations, but you must not lose sight of the great fact, that however your taxes may be assessed, upon what particular business or property, it eventually but most surely is paid by the labor of the country. Let those who for the time being are charged with the management of the affairs of our Government see to it that the money of the people is prudently appropriated and honestly expended; let the people be assured that justice, wisdom, and patriotism pervades and controls such management, and all will be well.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I ask that general leave be given to print remarks upon the pending bill.

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that the bill upon which we are soon to vote is, as was shown a day or two ago by the eloquent gentleman from Maine, but the continuation of a process begun just after the close of the war for the abolition of the internal-tax system. The process had gone on with a good degree of rapidity, until the financial crisis embarrassed our revenues and necessitated the restoration of some of the war taxation. We enter again, under Republican auspices, upon the work of extinguishing the war taxes known as the internal-revenue system of taxation. I would have been glad, Mr. Speaker, could the bill have made a more sweeping reduction, and I hope gentlemen on that side of the House will meet me in the December session and consider the bill I have proposed for fixing a day on which all taxes imposed on tobacco and articles produced from it shall be repealed.

Mr. SPRINGER. Why not vote upon that now?

Mr. KELLEY. The trade assembled in national convention protested against two things. One was successive repeals leaving them with stock on hand on which high taxes had been paid, while new beginners, or men whose stocks had been exhausted, would be benefited by the diminished rates. The other was against too sudden a wiping out of all, and that trade then named the 1st day of January, 1884, or the 1st of July, 1883, as the proper time for terminating it. Depending upon the condition of the finances in December, I hope to have the pleasure of having this bill reported by the Committee on Ways and Means, and stand shoulder to shoulder with those free-traders on that side who will promote a reduction of internal taxes.

My friend from Minnesota asks "What shall I say to these people when they point to your bill?" I will give him a speech ready made. On page 38 of to-day's RECORD he will find the eloquent utterances of the young Democrat from Missouri, [Mr. FROST,] and if he will commit it to memory and go before his constituents and repeat it word for word with his sonorous elocution he will answer all the questions propounded to him.

Mr. CAMP. It will be the best speech on the subject they ever heard.

Mr. KELLEY. And he will be applauded by them on that speech as he has not been at any of his six elections. As gentlemen may not be able readily to turn to it I will include that speech here:

Mr. FROST. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words of section 2. It has been repeatedly asserted in the progress of this debate that this is a measure solely in the interest of the banks, of capital, and of monopolies throughout the country. The gentlemen urge upon us that we should begin at the other end to relieve the labor of this country from the burdens that at present bear with overpowering weight upon it. Now, sir, it is because I consider that this bill does something toward relieving the laborer of this country and removes some of his burdens that I propose to support it. Sir, if there is anything of wisdom in all the science of political economy it must be considered as established beyond question that in their ultimate effects taxes fall eventually upon labor. The state draws its revenue from wealth. Wealth is the production and creation of labor, and therefore under these circumstances it is apparent that taxes must be paid and can be paid by labor alone.

Does the wealth invested in bank capital and in bank deposits or represented by these things offer any exception to this rule? Mr. Chairman, what are banks? They are great reservoirs into which pour continually a myriad of tiny rivulets, for the most part the savings of the frugal, industrious laborer, mechanic, and retail tradesman. These rivulets are collected in these banks, the reservoirs, in order that they may be thence directed in sufficient quantity into the fructifying channels of commerce.

In these banks is contained the greater portion of the circulating capital of the country; and from circulating capital are paid the wages of labor. If the national coffers absorb from this great reservoir the circulating capital, $16,000,000 or $20,000,000, or any other amount, is it not apparent that just so much is subtracted from the wage-fund from which the laborer draws the necessities of his existence? Is it not apparent that by just so much labor is burdened, either by diminished employment or diminished wages, by this form of taxation as by every other?

Sir, the process is this: it is true that the bank pays the taxes in the first instance; but be sure the bank does not fail to charge it on the borrower. The borrower seeks the loan for the purpose of investing it in his business, either by maintaining the labor he already employs, or by bringing in additional labor to extend his business. And when the bank charges him with the tax, it just to that extent diminishes his borrowing capacity. It is a tax on credits, and it diminishes his borrowing capacity and his wage-paying capacity. And just so far it diminishes the necessities of life to the laborer who depends for employment on that wage-paying capacity.

It has also been repeatedly iterated upon this floor that this is a measure in favor of monopolies. It is an open secret, Mr. Chairman, that two of the most gigantic monopolies of this country and age of monopolies—the match monopoly, which, like death, spares in its exactions neither the palace of the rich nor the hovel of the poor, and the stamp-printing monopoly, which draws its profits alike from enthusiastic youth enthralled in the glamor of a first check-book, and from the wearied old age, whose physical infirmities find their only solace in a patent medicine—through their agents, are prowling about these lobbies, the most active and strenuous opponents of this bill. I do not blame them for it. They have got a good thing, and with the assistance of this Congress they mean to hold on to it. But for one, believing that this measure does relieve labor from some of its burdens, I will take what I can get, if I cannot get all I want.

Sir, the match tax is the most unpopular tax ever imposed by this or any other government. Gladstone's attempt to impose a tax on matches, the mere attempt to do it, paved the way for his defeat and brought in the Disraeli administration, which ended with the magnificent career of the Earl of Beaconsfield. It was the match tax more than any other one of Gladstone's mistakes which brought that about, and he had to withdraw his bill. During the war our Democratic friends in the mining districts, and wherever labor concentrated, said, "Look at them, how you are taxed; you cannot light your pipe without paying a tax. The poor, widowed mother cannot light the shavings and chips under her tea-kettle to make a warm cup in the morning without paying a tax on the match."

Now, when we propose to repeal those taxes, when those taxes have come to amount to millions a year, when the manufacture of matches has become one of the vilest monopolies in the country, when looking around upon the galleries, thin as they are, I can name members of its lobby that I see here, when to save the tax for one year they could pay one million and make four millions by the operation, I think if the gentleman from Minnesota will add those facts to Mr. FROST'S speech they may bring him an extra cheer or two.

I have no fear of going before my constituents with this bill as an entering-wedge and with the tobacco bill pending; and I shall not shrink if I go into the rural districts from planting myself straight in aid of the election of my Republican brethren on our achievements in the repeal of internal taxes and the protection of the revenues for all the vital purposes of the Government.

If I have any time and my friend from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] will use it, I gladly give it to him.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has five minutes remaining.

Mr. KASSON. I had not intended or expected to speak even five minutes in the close of the debate. There is one feature, however, of the discussion of to-day that is calculated to produce surprise in the minds I think of gentlemen on both sides of the House, and that is that for the first time in the history of any country where the government avows itself in need of far less revenue than it receives and demands from the representatives of the people that they reduce the burdens bearing upon the people, there is almost an organized party on one side of this House that protests against reducing taxation.

It has been the ground of opposition to executive governments in all time that they put burdens upon the people and were not disposed to take them off, but to increase them to meet the increasing wants of the government. This Republican administration has come to the popular branch of Congress and has said, "We do not want all the money that you give us; take off the taxes;" and all the speeches that we have heard against this bill have been in protest against taking taxes and burdens from the people of this country. On one side it is said you ought not to take off that, but you ought to take off something else. But the great fact that the people will understand is that it is proposed by this side of the House to take off now $25,000,000 of taxation at this session of Congress, with the hope distinctly avowed by the organs of the opinion of the majority on the floor that we will take off millions more next session. And are gentlemen willing to go back to their constituents and to say, "We refuse to take off the taxes that are burdening you, because in doing so we would take off taxes on somebody else we did not want to relieve?" Are you to go to tobacco manufacturers, as laborious, diligent, and honest a class of men as any in this country, most of them barely earning a living, and say to them, "We voted against reducing your license taxes because a paltry sum of $400,000 was in the bill stricken off the capital of national banks?" Is that the principle of statesmen or of patriots? Do we tax people because we do not like their professions, or do we tax them because we want the money for the purposes of the Government?

The whole theory of the bill is to get rid of all the taxes on all the industries of the country that it is possible to do with safety to the public interest. And I regretted to hear my honored friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN] devote nearly all his time to the objection that we have not given the right to the producers of leaf tobacco to sell it in the open market without restriction, and he could see no reason for maintaining that restriction. I may be permitted to remind my friend that when he was struggling with the rest of us in war-times to create a revenue to keep our soldiers on foot in the field neither he nor I found any objection at that time to a system that was indispensable to the collection of the tax on manufactured tobacco.

We knew that it would escape us unless it could be followed from the field to the workshop; and hence it had to be traced, under the provisions of law, the purchaser usually paying the tax, and the producer being required to sell only to a licensed dealer, in order to be sure that tobacco would not escape the tax in the manufacturers' hands. Gentlemen know to-day that we would take it off if it could be done before we take the tax off manufactured tobacco also. It is like the license, a means of securing the tax on manufactured articles from manufacturers, so as to avoid frauds on the revenue. [Mr. CURTIN rose.] I have so short a time that I regret that I must ask the gentleman to excuse me.

The proposition is simply this: will you go upon record, and go home to your constituents and say to the farmer, "I will still make you pay two cents on every check you draw on your little fund in the bank, because if I took it off that I would have to take the tax off something else I did not want." To-day, in our part of the country, it is the farmer who makes the deposits in the banks. Will you go home and say to your constituents that you refused to take the tax off their bank checks because you did not want to take off the capital of national banks the little tax of $400,000 which was collected last year? We go for a reduction of tax to the largest possible extent.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER and others called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 128, nays 80, not voting 83; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. LOWE with Mr. HERNDON.

Mr. CAMP with Mr. BLACKBURN.

Mr. FARWELL, of Illinois, with Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois.

Mr. STEELE with Mr. KLOTZ.

Mr. TAYLOR with Mr. TURNER of Georgia.

Mr. CONVERSE with Mr. UPDEGRAFF of Ohio.

Mr. ROBESON with Mr. HARDY.

Mr. STEPHENS with Mr. HENDERSON.

Mr. PAGE. I am paired with Mr. MCKINLEY, of Ohio. If he were here, he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. LE FEVRE. I am paired with Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I do not know how he would vote if present; but I should vote "no."

Mr. SIMONTON. I am paired with Mr. HUTCHINS, of New York. If Mr. HUTCHINS were present, he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. CAMP. I should vote "yea" on the passage of this bill if I were not paired with Mr. BLACKBURN, who would vote "no."

Mr. AIKEN. I was paired for a week with Mr. WARD, of Pennsylvania. That week passed and another week has intervened, during which I have continued the pair with him. He is still absent, and I do not know whether it is desired that the pair shall continue to stand, for I have not seen Mr. O'NEILL, who made the arrangement with me. I have voted on the passage of this bill, but rather than disappoint Mr. WARD I will withdraw my vote, stating that if I voted I should vote "no."

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. KELLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed, and requested the concurrence of the House in, bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. No. 482) for the relief of Alexander Smiley; and

A bill (S. No. 1829) to amend an act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CRAPO. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees.

The motion was agreed to; two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask unanimous consent that the evening session for this evening be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] asks consent that the standing order of the House which requires a recess to be taken from five o'clock to eight o'clock in the evening be vacated for to-day.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. CRAPO. I now move that the House proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were--ayes 100, noes 22.

Mr. HATCH. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HATCH and Mr. CRAPO were appointed.

During the count by tellers,

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, said: I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. Would it be in order to antagonize this motion with a proposition to take up the naval appropriation bill? I understand that all gentlemen on this side are ready to take up that bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not in order; the House is dividing.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 112, noes 35.

So the motion of Mr. CRAPO was agreed to.

DONATIONS OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

The first business on the Speaker's table was the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2202) donating condemned cannon and cannon-balls to the Soldiers' Monument Association of Birmingham, Connecticut.

The amendments were read, as follows:

In line 3, after the word "condemned," insert "cast iron."
In line 5, strike out "to be used" and insert "for use and ornamentation."

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let the report be read.

The SPEAKER. There is no report. These are Senate amendments to a House bill.

The question being taken on concurring in the amendments of the Senate, there were—ayes 101, noes 5.

Mr. SPARKS. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. PHELPS and Mr. SPARKS were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 149, noes none.

So the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. PHELPS moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. No. 3082) granting condemned cannon to Anna M. Ross Post No. 94 of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Philadelphia.

The amendments were read, as follows:

In line 2 strike out "brass" and insert "iron."
Add to the bill "for use and ornamentation of cemetery lot."

Mr. O'NEILL. In behalf of my colleague, [Mr. RANDALL,] who is absent on important business, I move that these amendments be concurred in.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. O'NEILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN IOWA.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4166) to divide the State of Iowa into two judicial districts.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Page 2, line 14, strike out "four" and insert "three."
Page 2, line 16, strike out "and."
Strike out all after "Black Hawk," in lines 16 and 17, down to and including "of," in line 19.
Page 4, line 3, strike out "four" and insert "three."
Page 4, line 3, strike out "Davenport."
Page 4, line 5, strike out "and."
Strike out all after "Louisa," in line 5, down to and including "of," in line 8.
Page 4, line 8, strike out "Mahaska, Monroe."
Page 4, line 14, after "Decatur," insert "Monroe."
Page 4, line 15, strike out "in" and insert "for."
Page 4, line 17, strike out "Guthrie."
Page 4, line 23, strike out "provided by" and insert "named in."
Strike out all after "that," in line 26, on page 4, down to and including line 5, on page 5, and insert "courts under this act shall be held at Dubuque, Keokuk, Des Moines, and Council Bluffs, at such times as are now fixed by law; at Fort Dodge on the third Tuesdays in January and June, and at Sioux City on the second Tuesdays in February and July."
Page 6, line 8, after "therein," insert "and all offenses against the laws of the United States before the passage of this act shall be cognizable in the district where committed."

Mr. McCOID. I move that the House non-concur in these amendments.

Mr. WILSON. I wish to inquire whether this bill interferes at all with holding court at Keokuk?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. It does not.

The amendments were not concurred in.

Mr. McCOID moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were non-concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LOAN OF TENTS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3278) to authorize the Secretary of War to loan tents to the Northwestern Missouri and Southwestern Iowa Veteran Soldiers' Association.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After "and," in line 11, insert "the whole."

The amendment was concurred in.

JAPANESE INDEMNITY FUND.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1052) in relation to the Japanese indemnity fund.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Page 1, lines 12, 13, and 14, strike out "out of the fund now under control of the Department of State, known as the Japanese indemnity fund," and insert "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."
Page 1, lines 3 and 4, strike out "$1,516,364" and insert "$785,000.87 in legal coin, through the United Sates minister to Japan."
Page 1, line 5, strike out "in" and insert "and all."
Page 1, line 8, after "fund," insert "shall be canceled and destroyed."
Page 1, line 11, strike out "254" and insert "140."

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I desire to move that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I think my motion is in order.

Mr. WILSON. There is no reason for that.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. There are a great many reasons for it—reasons which have been developed by the debate in the Senate, as well as outside.

The SPEAKER. The motion to non-concur takes precedence of the motion to refer.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Is it in order to move to non-concur with instructions to the conference committee——

The SPEAKER. There is no conference committee on this bill; perhaps there never will be any.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I hope we shall vote down the motion to non-concur.

The amendments were not concurred in.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were non-concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry, whether it would be proper at this time to ask to have a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses?

Mr. KASSON. That is not in order now.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Allow me to say, Mr. Speaker, I have been informed at this late hour of the session it has been formerly the practice to economize time in that way.

The SPEAKER. The regular practice is after the Senate has insisted on its amendments. The Chair does not undertake to decide it cannot be done by the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I understood that was formerly the practice.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. The Senate might recede.

The SPEAKER. And then there would be no necessity for a conference committee.

MILITARY CEMETERY, MOUND CITY, ILLINOIS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the following amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6004) making appropriation to construct a road and approaches from Mound City, Illinois, to the military cemetery, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 1, strike out $25,000 and insert $15,000.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I move the amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL BANKING ASSOCIATION.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. No. 4167) to enable national banking associations to extend their corporate existence; returned from the Senate with sundry amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendments.

Mr. ANDERSON. I reserve all points of order.

The Clerk read the amendments, as follows:

First amendment: Page 2, line 20, after the word "law," insert "or unless here after modified or repealed."

Mr. CRAPO. I move that amendment be concurred in.
The amendment was concurred in.

Second amendment: Page 2, section 3, line 3, strike out the words "may, if he deems it necessary," and insert in lieu thereof the word "shall."

Mr. CRAPO. I move to concur in that amendment.
The amendment was concurred in.

Third amendment: Page 4, section 5, line 19, after the word "due," insert "and be forthwith paid."

Mr. CRAPO. I move the amendment be concurred in.
The amendment was concurred in.

Fourth amendment: Page 4, section 5, lines 20 and 21, strike out "until paid."

Mr. CRAPO. I move to concur in the amendment of the Senate.
The amendment was concurred in.

Fifth amendment: Page 5, section 6, line 10, strike out the following words: "and when the amount of such notes shall be reduced to 5 per cent. of the capital stock of the banks issuing the same" and in lieu thereof insert the following: "at the end of three years from the date of the extension of the corporate existence of each bank."

Mr. CRAPO. I move concurrence in that amendment.
The amendment was concurred in.

Sixth amendment: Page 5, section 6, lines 15 and 16, strike out "all of its outstanding circulation" and in lieu thereof insert "the remainder of the circulation which was outstanding at the date of its extension."

Mr. CRAPO. I move to concur in that amendment.
The amendment was concurred in.

Seventh amendment: Page 6, section 6, lines 23 and 24, strike out "or lawful money deposited therefor, as provided by law such notes," and in lieu thereof insert "they."

Mr. CRAPO moved to non-concur in that amendment.
The amendment was non-concurred in.

Eighth amendment: Page 6, section 6, line 26, strike out the words "Comptroller of the Currency" and insert "Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. CRAPO. I move to concur in that amendment.
The amendment was concurred in.

Ninth amendment: Page 6, section 6, line 30, strike out "pay" and insert "reimburse to the Treasury."

Mr. CRAPO. I move to concur in that amendment.
The amendment was concurred in.

Tenth amendment: Page 6, section 6, strike out these words: "and all other costs incident to the substitution of such new circulating notes for the old, in addition to the tax now imposed on the banking association by law."

Mr. CRAPO. I move to concur in that amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the House will not concur in that amendment, and I ask that the proviso be read as it went from the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, however, That each banking association which shall obtain the benefit of this act shall pay the cost of preparing the plate or plates for such new circulating notes as shall be issued to it, and all other costs incident to the substitution of such new circulating notes for the old, in addition to the tax now imposed on the banking association by law.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts so as to non-concur.

The SPEAKER. The question will be put on concurrence.

Mr. HOLMAN. Of course. Now, the effect of this amendment is to relieve the banks getting the benefits of this law from almost all of the costs necessary in making the change. As the section passed the House the banks were to pay the cost of the plates and all other expenses incident to the substitution of the new currency for the old. That proposition was so fair and just that I believe my friend from Massachusetts acquiesced in it immediately without question. It is now proposed, however, by this Senate amendment, as I understand it, to limit the expenditure on the part of the banks for the substitution of this new currency merely to the cost of the plates. That is a comparatively simple item, as the gentleman must know. I think it is clear that the banks should pay the entire cost of the substitution of the new currency, and I do not think any argument can be addressed to the House in conflict with that position. Why should they not? Here is a large amount of money withdrawn from circulation and new notes substituted for it. The banks are the beneficiaries of this legislation, and certainly the cost of the change of the circulation should not be borne by the Treasury instead of these corporations themselves. The banks can afford to bear it; and I trust my friend from Massachusetts will see the absolute injustice of imposing this tax upon the general Treasury of the country rather than upon the banks.

Mr. CRAPO. There is a practical difficulty in carrying out the law, if the words to which I have referred are left in the bill. There cannot conveniently be, in other words, two systems of estimating the cost and paying the expense of the change of the circulating notes of the banks of those going on by the operation of existing law, and those that are privileged to extend their charters under this act. This is a question of convenience simply. It extends to only a few dollars. There would be great inconvenience in attempting to keep the two sets of accounts of banks which are authorized to extend their charters, and those whose charters have not expired, but have circulation granted to them, organizing under the law generally. The expense, too, of keeping the accounts will be greater than any possible saving that can accrue to the Government by the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. COX, of New York. This item involves pretty nearly $1,000,000.

Mr. CRAPO. How much?

Mr. COX, of New York. I think about $1,000,000.

Mr. CRAPO. Oh! nothing like it.

Mr. COX, of New York. It is an item that is not unknown to our side of the House. We have considered the matter before.

Mr. HOLMAN. It was stated at the time that this matter was in contemplation in the Forty-first or Forty-second Congress that the substitution of new notes would cost in the neighborhood of a million dollars. I have not the data myself, but when the attempt was made to substitute new currency these figures were obtained, and the cost approximately determined.

Mr. CRAPO. By the striking out of these words the banks whose charters are expiring would have circulating notes issued to them, and will pay just as the banks do now for the plates and the expense of redemption.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HUMPHREY. It is impossible, there is so much confusion in the House, to hear anything that is going on.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will please be seated or retire to the cloak-rooms, who desire to converse.

Mr. CRAPO. Since 1874 there have been $1,165,000,000 of national-bank bills redeemed. By a law passed at that time the expense of redemption was placed upon the banks, and they have paid since 1874 $1,842,057.72 up to the end of the last fiscal year on that account. It is proposed by this that they shall continue to pay this expense; and that there shall be no difference between banks that obtain circulation under existing laws and those which obtain it by the extension of their charters under the pending bill. The gentleman from Indiana, as I understand it, proposes that there shall be a difference.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir; I propose that the law shall be as it was before. When the attempt was made before, on account of certain alleged forgeries of national-bank circulation, to reissue the circulation, and when it was proposed to substitute new currency for the old, no person pretended but that the charge was a proper one against the national banks; and the House by an overwhelming vote declared the banks should pay the cost, not merely of the plates, but the entire cost of the substitution.

I admit that the bill did not pass the Senate, because the national banks and the Treasury decided that the currency should remain as it was. But now when you propose, with reference to the large body of the banks, to withdraw their entire currency and substitute new, it does seem to me that in addition to the small tax they now pay they should pay the cost of the substitution. That is all the original proposition contemplated. But by this Senate amendment they go to the extent of proposing that the banks shall pay only the cost of the plates, which is a small item, and leave the great cost of substitution entirely out of the bill. I think the banks should pay the entire cost; and therefore I hope that the Senate amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. CRAPO. Let us have a vote.

Mr. COX, of New York. If my friend from Massachusetts desires a vote I shall not take up much time.

Mr. CRAPO. I do not wish, of course, to deprive the gentleman from New York the privilege of being heard.

Mr. COX, of New York. I simply desire to say, then, that my friend from Massachusetts should give some figures to show just what this thing would cost. I think the amendment of the Senate has stricken out altogether the idea of the banks paying this cost; or, supposing there may be new plates required——

Mr. CRAPO. New plates must be paid for under this bill by the bank.

Mr. COX, of New York. Then the data the gentleman may have may not be correct. The new plates will cost a large sum.

Mr. CARLISLE. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] will yield to me, I wish to put a question to the gentleman from Massachusetts. I am not sure I understand the precise effect of this provision which the Senate has struck out. The gentleman from Massachusetts has referred to the total amount of redemption since 1874, and the cost of it. I wish to ask him whether it is not a fact that the amount of currency redeemed and the amount substituted will be largely increased under this bill over what it was heretofore? This bill proposes to extend the charters of all the national banks in the country. Therefore as a matter of necessity the currency of all the national banks in the country will have to be redeemed at the Treasury Department and a new currency substituted. It seems to me it will make a large increase in the labor of the Department.

Mr. CRAPO. And every dollar is assessed on the banks, whether the amount be greater or less.

Mr. CARLISLE. I understand that is so by the bill as it passed the House; but the Senate has stricken out that provision.

Mr. CRAPO. It is so by the act of June 20, 1874. All the cost of the redemption, the express charges, the sorting, the sending back, is all borne by the banks.

Mr. CARLISLE. Out of the 5 per cent. redemption fund?

Mr. CRAPO. No; as an independent charge. In 1881 these expenses cost the banks $2.69 for every thousand dollars of their circulation.

Mr. CARLISLE. But that is imposed on all the banks, as I understand. That is to say, if the notes of the First National Bank of New York are redeemed, the cost of redeeming them falls on all the banks of the country.

Mr. CRAPO. Oh, no; the cost for the whole year is computed, and that is divided and assessed upon the banks.

Mr. CARLISLE. But is it assessed in proportion to the amount of their notes?

Mr. CRAPO. No, sir; the banks in existence have to pay the cost of redemption for the banks that have failed.

Mr. CARLISLE. That is what I understood.

Mr. CRAPO. Twenty-six per cent. of the total redemption of bank bills is of bills of banks that have gone out of existence, and the remaining 74 per cent. of banks have to pay the whole 100 per cent. of expense.

Mr. CARLISLE. I think then I was not mistaken in my statement of the law, that whenever the notes of a bank are redeemed under the act of 1874 that bank individually is not called on to pay the cost of the redemption, but all the banks of the country are called on to pay it. Now, under this bill as it passed the House, when a bank has its charter extended and has its old notes redeemed and new notes substituted, that particular bank would pay the cost of the substitution, and that I think is correct.

Mr. CRAPO. That is provided by a subsequent section.

Mr. COX, of New York. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CRAPO] concurred in this when it passed the House, and the Senate has stricken it out. What is it they have stricken out? It is these words:

And all other costs incident to the substitution of such new circulating notes for the old, in addition to the tax now imposed on the banking association by law.

We have done something to-day to relieve these banks. We have not a perfect idea now of the cost, whether more or less, of this substitution; and I cannot see why my friend from Massachusetts should consent to give away this proposition of the House to the Senate without some reason. If there has to be a change in these notes why should not the banks, who are the beneficiaries of the change, pay for all the cost? I hope the sense of the House will not concur in this amendment of the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to call attention to another fact, that even as to reimbursement to the Treasury of the cost of the plates it is not provided that shall be "in addition to the tax now imposed by law." Those words are expressly stricken out by the Senate. Now, when the House bears in mind this whole arrangement is made for the benefit of the banks, I do insist the whole cost of the substitution of the new currency for the old shall be borne by the banks. I trust, therefore, the House will not concur in this amendment.

Mr. KASSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] or the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CRAPO] whether the question is not between assessing the slight additional cost on the entire banking associations as is now done, or making separate accounts and putting the individual expense in a given case on the individual bank; in other words, whether it is not an expense imposed on all banking associations in one case and an expense imposed under a new system of accounts on the individual bank in the other. If so, it is not a question that affects the public Treasury, but is one that affects the banks themselves.

Mr. BUCKNER. I will remark to my friend from Iowa that what is provided for here is that each bank shall pay for the new plates, and shall also pay for the cost of the substitution.

Mr. KASSON. I see that; I was speaking of the additional cost.

Mr. BUCKNER. The question of redemption is different altogether. This is to provide for the cost of the substitution of the new currency for the old.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CRAPO] to concur in the amendment of the Senate.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 78, noes 50.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. COX, of New York, called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being 36 in the affirmative, more than one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. COX, of New York. In order to save time, (and I understand that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CRAPO] will agree to the proposition,) I ask that the amendment of the Senate be non-concurred in and go to a committee of conference.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think we had better have the yeas and nays anyhow.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have been ordered, but by unanimous consent the order can be vacated and the question be put on the motion to non-concur.

Mr. CRAPO. I will withdraw the motion to concur.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to vacating the order for the yeas and nays on the motion to concur, which motion the gentleman from Massachusetts withdraws, and the question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to non-concur.

The motion to non-concur was agreed to.

The eleventh and twelfth amendments of the Senate were to section 7, to insert after the word "existence" and before the word "shall" the words "has expired or," and after the word "shall" insert the word "hereafter;" so that it would read:

SEC. 7. That national-banking associations whose corporate existence has expired or shall hereafter expire, and which do not avail themselves of the provisions of this act, shall be required to comply with the provisions of sections 5221 and 5222 of the Revised Statutes in the same manner as if the shareholders had voted to go into liquidation, as provided in section 5220 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. CRAPO. I move that the amendments be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

The thirteenth amendment of the Senate was to insert, after the word "associations," the words "except as modified by this act;" so that portion of the section would read:

And the provisions of sections 5224 and 5225 of the Revised Statutes shall also be applicable to such associations except as modified by this act; and the franchise of such association is hereby extended for the sole purpose of liquidating their affairs until such affairs are finally closed.

Mr. CRAPO. I move that that amendment be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

The fourteenth amendment of the Senate was, to strike out section 8, as follows:

SEC. 8. That national banks now organized or hereafter organized, having a capital of $150,000 or less, shall not be required to keep or deposit with the Treasurer of the United States United States bonds in excess of $10,000 as security for their circulating notes; and such of those banks having on deposit bonds in excess of that amount are authorized to reduce their circulation by the deposit of lawful money as provided by law.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That national banks now organized or hereafter organized, having a capital of $100,000 or less, shall not be required to keep on deposit or deposit with the Treasurer of the United States United States bonds in excess of one-third of their capital stock as security for their circulating notes; and such of those banks having on deposit bonds in excess of that amount are authorized to reduce their circulation by the deposit of lawful money as provided by law: Provided, That the amount of such circulating notes shall not in any case exceed 90 per cent. of the par value of the bonds deposited as herein provided: Provided further, That all national banks which shall hereafter make deposits of lawful money for the retirement in full of their circulation shall at the time of their deposit be assessed for the cost of transporting and redeeming their notes then outstanding a sum equal to the average cost of the redemption of national-bank notes during the preceding year, and shall thereupon pay such assessment; and all national banks which have heretofore made or shall hereafter make deposits of lawful money for the reduction of their circulation shall be assessed and shall pay an assessment in the manner specified in section 3 of the act approved June 20, 1874, for the cost of transporting and redeeming their notes redeemed from such deposits subsequently to June 30, 1881.

Mr. CRAPO. I move to non-concur in that amendment of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CRAPO. I now move that the House non-concur in all the Senate amendments to section 9 of the bill.

Mr. HATCH. Let the amendments be read; I want to hear them.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to have them read.

The amendments of the Senate to section 9 are as follows; strike out the words in brackets and insert the words printed in italics:

SEC. 9. That any national banking association now organized or hereafter organized, desiring to withdraw its circulating notes, upon a deposit of lawful money with the Treasurer of the United States, as provided in section 4 of the act of June 20, 1874, entitled "An act fixing the amount of United States notes, providing for a redistribution of national-bank currency, and for other purposes," or as provided in this act, [shall be required to give ninety days' notice to the Secretary of the Treasury of its intention to deposit lawful money and withdraw its circulating notes] is authorized to deposit lawful money and withdraw a proportionate amount of the bonds held as security for its circulating notes in the order of such deposits; and no national bank which makes any deposit of lawful money in order to withdraw its circulating notes shall be entitled to receive any increase of its circulation for the period of six months from the time it made such deposit of lawful money for the purpose aforesaid: Provided, That not more than [five] three millions of dollars of lawful money shall be deposited during any calendar month for this purpose: [And provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to bonds called for redemption by the Secretary of the Treasury, but when bonds are called for redemption the banks holding such called bonds shall surrender them within thirty days after the maturity of their call.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CRAPO] moves to non-concur in all the amendments to the ninth section of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The twentieth amendment was read, as follows:

After the words "that upon a deposit of bonds as described by sections 5159 and 5160" insert the following:

"Except as modified by section 4 of an act entitled 'An act fixing the amount of United States notes, providing for a redistribution of the national-bank currency, and for other purposes,' approved June 20, 1874, and as modified by section 8 of this act."

Mr. CRAPO. I move to concur in that amendment of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The twenty-first amendment of the Senate was to add to the bill the following:

SEC. 11. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to receive at the Treasury any bonds of the United States bearing 3½ per cent. interest, and to issue in exchange therefor an equal amount of registered bonds of the United States of the denominations of $50, $100, $500, $1,000, and $10,000, of such form as he may prescribe, bearing interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, payable quarterly at the Treasury of the United States. Such bonds shall be exempt from all taxation by or under State authority, and be payable at the pleasure of the United States: Provided, That the bonds herein authorized shall not be called in and paid so long as any bonds of the United States heretofore issued bearing a higher rate of interest than 3 per cent., and which shall be redeemable at the pleasure of the United States, shall be outstanding and uncalled. The last of the said bonds originally issued under this act, and their substitutes, shall be first called in, and this order of payment shall be followed until all shall have been paid.

Mr. CRAPO. I move to concur in that amendment of the Senate.

Mr. CARLISLE. That section provides for the issue of $200,000,000 of 3 per cent. bonds——

Mr. CRAPO. It fixes no amount.

Mr. CARLISLE. That is correct. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to receive 3½ per cent. bonds and to issue in exchange for them 3 per cent. bonds to any amount whatever.

Mr. CRAPO. Without extending the time and subject to call.

Mr. CARLISLE. I want to state to the House a fact which has already been stated to-day on this floor by the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL,] that there is now pending before the Committee on Ways and Means a proposition made by a New York banker to take $200,000,000 of bonds at 2 per cent., with the option on the part of the Government to pay them after the expiration of one year. That is to say a gentleman has come before the Committee on Ways and Means and stated distinctly that he was authorized by gentlemen in New York to make that proposition, and that he would communicate to the Secretary of the Treasury from whom we expect to receive a communication upon the same subject. Now, I think that in view of the pendency of such a proposition as that this House ought to non-concur for the present in this amendment and let it go to a committee of conference.

Mr. CRAPO. This section will facilitate just that operation. If these 3½ per cent. bonds are converted into 3 percents, there is nothing in this section which will prevent the Secretary of the Treasury, if Congress passes the law, from taking up these 3 percents the very next day and funding them in 2 percents. This section will facilitate the funding of the three-and-a-halfs into twos.

Mr. CARLISLE. I do not see how that can facilitate the transaction by multiplying the number of transactions that must take place before the one we desire is accomplished. According to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CRAPO] we will facilitate funding by first funding the three-and-a-halfs into threes and then funding the threes into twos.

Mr. KASSON. My colleague on the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. CARLISLE,] I think, ought to add that it was a mere verbal statement before the committee by a single gentleman from New York.

Mr. CARLISLE. I so stated, or intended to do so.

Mr. KASSON. It was accompanied by no guarantee, and at the suggestion of the Committee itself he was referred to the Secretary of the Treasury to put into writing anything he had to suggest, with such evidence of the validity of the proposition as might satisfy the Secretary of the Treasury or the House. I therefore do not think that it should be regarded as a pending proposition; it was hardly so formal as that.

Mr. CARLISLE. I stated, Mr. Speaker, or endeavored to state, that this proposition was merely an incipient one for the present——

Mr. KASSON. Rather a suggestion.

Mr. CARLISLE. That this gentleman came before the committee and said he would make a formal communication to the Secretary of the Treasury upon the subject, the committee expecting to call upon the Secretary for such information as he might be enabled to afford it.

Mr. KASSON. And the gentleman from Kentucky will remember that this gentleman did not name a single person who was behind him. I want the House to understand this fact in order that members may see the proposition is not important enough to stop the legislation of the House.

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question. When 4 per cent. bonds of the Government can be bought at such a premium that they will yield almost 3 per cent. interest, and when some man, whose name is not given, comes and offers to take $200,000,000 at 2 per cent. with an option on the part of the Government to call in the loan at the end of a year, I want to know whether the gentleman does not think such a man is a "crank" or a fool?

Mr. CARLISLE. No, sir; I do not. I have every reason to believe that this gentleman made the proposition in good faith. My whole purpose in asking the House now to non-concur in this amendment is, that the matter may go to a committee of conference, and that in the mean time we may ascertain how much substance there is in the proposition.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman referred to is Mr. C. C. Norvall, of New York. He is not a banker, making the proposition for himself. He comes representing himself as speaking for bankers in New York who have authorized him to say this to the Secretary of the Treasury and to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. KASSON. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania remember that he did not use the word "authorized," but said, "after consultation with bankers in New York?"

Mr. KELLEY. I will state that officers of national banks, who find their bonds are being called in, have said to me that 2 per cent. bonds redeemable by the Government on call, after it shall have exhausted the market of 3½ percents, would be gladly taken by them, and that this would be better than for them to go into the market and buy 4 per cent. bonds at the existing premium, and especially at the premium to which they would go if the banks were forced to compete for the purchase of the 4 percents. So that whatever there may be in Mr. Norvall's proposition, I have myself, as chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, had the proposition made to me by presidents of national banks that we should relieve them by the issue of a 2 per cent. bond. Therefore, I think it would be well for us to retain at least the option of taking advantage of such an offer, without closing the door against it.

Mr. CRAPO. This does not close the door——

Mr. KELLEY. I do not know what is the phraseology of the amendment we are considering. I was out for a moment while the amendment was read.

The question being taken on concurring in the amendment, there were—ayes 74, noes 47.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. CRAPO. I move to non-concur in the next two amendments of the Senate, which are to add two new sections, numbered respectively 12 and 13.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the sections covered by this motion may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to receive deposits of gold coin with the Treasurer or assistant treasurers of the United States, in sums not less than $20, and to issue certificates therefor in denominations of not less than $20 each, corresponding with the denominations of United States notes. The coin deposited for or representing the certificates of deposit shall be retained in the Treasury for the payment of the same on demand. Said certificates shall be receivable for customs, taxes, and all public dues, and when so received may be reissued; and such certificates, as also silver certificates, when held by any national banking association, shall be counted as part of its lawful reserve; and no national banking association shall be a member of any clearing-house in which such certificates shall not be receivable in the settlement of clearing-house balances: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall suspend the issue of such gold certificates whenever the amount of gold coin and gold bullion in the Treasury reserved for the redemption of United States notes falls below $100,000,000; and the provisions of section 5207 of the Revised Statutes shall be applicable to the certificates herein authorized and directed to be issued.

SEC. 13. That any officer, clerk, or agent of any national banking association who shall willfully violate the provisions of an act entitled "An act in reference to certifying checks by national banks," approved March 3, 1869, being section 5208 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, or who shall resort to any device, or receive any fictitious obligation, direct or collateral, in order to evade the provisions thereof, or who shall certify checks before the amount thereof shall have been regularly entered to the credit of the dealer upon the books of the banking association, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction thereof in any circuit or district court of the United States, be fined not more than $5,000, or shall be imprisoned not more than five years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CRAPO] is to non-concur in section 12 as well as section 13.

Mr. CRAPO. That is my proposition, for the purpose of perfecting the section. It should be enlarged in some particulars. For instance, it provides "that the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to receive deposits of gold coin." I think that provision should be enlarged so as to include gold bullion as well as gold coin, so that these certificates may be issued upon deposit of bullion without requiring parties to go to the expense of having that bullion coined.

Mr. HOLMAN. I fully agree with the gentleman in that view.

Mr. CRAPO. I am in sympathy with the purpose of the section; but I think it needs to be perfected.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then the committee of conference will understand that the House favors the proposition so far as it goes.

Mr. SPRINGER. I wish to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts why a distinction is made between silver certificates, as mentioned in line 11, and the certificates mentioned in the first part of the section?

Mr. CRAPO. They are put upon a perfect equality.

The amendments of the Senate to add sections 12 and 13 were non-concurred in.

The SPEAKER. There is another amendment which relates merely to the renumbering of the last section of the House bill. If there be no objection this will be non-concurred in. The Chair hears no objection. There is also an amendment to the title, which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to enable national banking associations to extend their corporate existence, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection this amendment will be concurred in.

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAPO. I move to reconsider the several votes concurring and non-concurring respectively in the amendments of the Senate; and that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I rise to a privileged question. I submit the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill. There are some fifty-four amendments, and the report is quite lengthy. If there be no objection, I will state in a few words the result of the conference. The amount of the bill as it passed the House was increased by the Senate $128,125. The conference report reduces that $70,500. So the bill as reported is an increase of only $57,725. There is no new legislation in it whatever. It is a unanimous report.

The conference report and accompanying statement are as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3830) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 11, 18, 19, 20, 21, 32, 33, 34, 38, 41, 45, 51, and 52.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 14, 16, 17, 25, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 35, 36, 37, 39, 40, 42, 43, 44, 47, 49, 50, and 54.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert in lieu of the words stricken out by said amendment the following: "Switzerland, Denmark, and Portugal;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$25,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the paragraph proposed to be inserted insert the following: "For salary of chargé d'affaires to Paraguay and Uruguay, $5,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 22, 23, and 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 22, 23, and 24, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following: "For the consuls-general at St. Petersburg, Frankfort, and Halifax, at $3,000 each, $9,000," and insert as a new paragraph, after line 10, page 3 of the bill, the following: "For secretaries of legation and consuls-general at Vienna, Rome, and Constantinople, at $3,500 each, $10,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$332,100;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out from the first clause of said amendment the words "fifty-seven thousand four hundred" and insert in lieu thereof "fifty-nine thousand five hundred," and insert after the word "Havre," in line 9 of said amendment, the word "Crefeld;" and after the word "Naples," in line 22 of said amendment, insert the word "Genoa;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, strike out, in line 2, page 13 of the bill, the word "ten" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

J. C. BURROWS,
GEO. M. ROBESON,
S. S. COX,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,
JAS. B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill submit the following detailed statement in explanation of the conference report submitted.

The effect of the action recommended on the amendments of the Senate will be, if ratified by the two Houses, as follows:

On amendments 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, and 9: Provides for ministers-resident at the Netherlands and Venezuela at $7,500 each; provides for a minister-resident and consul-general at Bolivia at $5,000, and corrects a total.

On amendment 10: Changes title of the minister-resident to Guatemala, Costa Rica, Honduras, Salvador, and Nicaragua to envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary.

On amendments 1, 6, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15: Provides for ministers-resident and consuls-general at Switzerland, Denmark, and Portugal, and a chargé d'affaires at Paraguay and Uruguay at $5,000 each; corrects a total and fixes salary of the minister-resident and consul-general at Roumania, Servia, and Greece at $6,500.

On amendments 16 and 17: Restores secretary of legation at St. Petersburg and corrects a total.

On amendments 18, 19, and 20: Strikes out provision for a secretary of legation to Austria and to Italy and corrects a total.

On amendment 21: Fixes salary of agent and consul-general at Cairo at $5,000.

On amendments 22, 23, 24, and 25: Provides for secretaries of legation and consuls-general at Vienna, Rome, and Constantinople at $3,500 each, and fixes salary of consul-general at St. Petersburg at $3,000; corrects a total and strikes out provision for a consul-general at Copenhagen.

On amendment 26: Corrects statement of the aggregate amount appropriated by the bill for consuls.

On amendments 27 and 29: Provides for a consul at Panama and Colon at $3,000 each, in lieu of one for both places at $3,500.

On amendments 28 and 37: Increases salary of consul at Ottawa from $1,500 to $3,000.

On amendments 30, 31, 32, and 38: Increases salary of consul at Leith from $2,000 to $2,500, and decreases salary of consul at Coaticook from $2,000 to $1,500.

On amendments 33 and 34: Strikes out a consul at Lisbon at $2,000 and strikes out the consuls at Tripoli and Tunis.

On amendments 35 and 42: Provides for a consul at Jerusalem at $1,500.

On amendments 36 and 39: Provides for consuls at Amherstburg and at St. Stephens at $1,500 each.

On amendment 40: Strikes out consul at Copenhagen.

On amendments 41 and 43: Provides for a consul at Milan and Venice at $1,500 and $1,000 respectively.

On amendments 44 and 45: Strikes out consul at Christiana at $1,000 and provides for a commercial agent at Gaboon at $1,000.

On amendments 47, 48, 49, and 50 strikes out the following:

"To be expended for consular clerk hire, under the direction of the Secretary of State, a sum not exceeding $65,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

And inserts what follows in lieu thereof:

"For allowance for clerks at consulates, $59,500; as follows:

"For the consul at Liverpool, a sum not exceeding the rate of $2,500 for any one year; and for the consuls-general at London, Paris, Havana, Shanghai, and Rio de Janeiro, each a sum not exceeding the rate of $2,000 for any one year; for the consuls-general at Berlin, Frankfort, Vienna, and Kanagawa, and for the consuls at Hamburg, Bremen, Manchester, Lyons, Hong-Kong, Havre, Crefeld, and Chemnitz, each a sum not exceeding the rate of $1,500 for any one year; for the consul-general at Montreal, and the consuls at Bradford and Birmingham, each a sum not exceeding the rate of $1,200 for any one year; for the consuls-general at Calcutta and Melbourne, and for the consuls at Leipsic, Sheffield, Sonneberg, Dresden, Marseilles, Nuremberg, Tunstall, Antwerp, Bordeaux, Colon, (Aspinwall,) Glasgow, and Singapore, each a sum not exceeding the rate of $1,000 for any one year; for the consuls at Belfast, Barmen, Leith, Dundee, Matamoras, and Halifax, each a sum not exceeding the rate of $800 for any one year; for the consul-general at Mexico, and for the consuls at Beirut, Naples, Genoa, Stuttgart, Florence, Mannheim, Prague, Zurich, Panama, and Demerara, each a sum not exceeding the rate of $600 for any one year.

"For an additional allowance for clerks at consulates, to be expended at the above-named places in the discretion of the Secretary of State, $4,000.

"For an additional allowance for clerks at consulates, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, at consulates not herein provided for in respect to clerk hire, no greater portion of this sum than $400 to be allowed to any one consulate in any one fiscal year, $6,000: Provided, That the total sum expended in any one year shall not exceed the amount herein appropriated."

On amendments 51 and 52 provides as follows:

"For boat for official use of United States consul at Osaka and Hiogo, and for pay of boat's crew, $500.

"For hiring of steam-launch for use of the legation and consulate-general at Constantinople, $1,000."

On amendment 53: Appropriates $30,000 to meet the necessary expenses attendant upon the execution of the neutrality act, to be expended under the direction of the President pursuant to the requirements of section 291.

On amendment 54: Appropriates $20,000 for publication of consular and commercial reports.

The aggregate amount of the bill as agreed upon in conference is $1,256,655, being an increase of $57,625 over the bill as originally passed by the House, and $70,500 less than as passed by the Senate.

J. C. BURROWS,
GEO. M. ROBESON,
S. S. COX,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was adopted.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SLOOP-OF-WAR PEACOCK.

Mr. JONES, of New Jersey, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6678) to authorize the Court of Claims to adjust and settle the claims of the heirs of the crew of the sloop-of-war Peacock; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON TO HATFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. NORCROSS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6679) donating condemned cannon to the town of Hatfield, Massachusetts, for monumental purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

TERRITORIAL COURTS, ETC.

Mr. NORCROSS (by request) also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6680) amending chapter 80 of the laws of the United States approved April 7, 1874, entitled "An act concerning the practice in Territorial courts and appeals therefrom;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

LAND SUBJECT TO TAXATION.

On motion of Mr. HAZELTON, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 255) to declare certain lands subject to taxation was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads, and ordered to be printed.

LAMBERT J. WHITELY.

Mr. HUMPHREY, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the salary of Lambert J. Whitely be, and the same is hereby, fixed at the same amount per month as the pages of this House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. No. 789) to regulate the use of the Capitol grounds; and

A bill (S. No. 1158) to authorize the supreme court of the District of Columbia to appoint two additional criers.

ADDITIONAL QUARTERS, ETC.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of War, dated the 9th instant, and its accompanying copy of the telegram from the general commanding the Military Division of the Pacific and Department of California, relative to the construction of additional quarters, barracks, storehouses, &c., within the limits of the Military Department of Arizona.

The Secretary of War recommends that, for the purpose of constructing the additional buildings referred to, the sum of their estimated cost, $205,000, be appropriated during the present session of Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 26, 1882.

ORDNANCE SERGEANT GEORGE L. P. BRADFORD.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting the petition of Ordnance Sergeant George L. P. Bradford, for appointment as captain and storekeeper for retirement as of that grade; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ELIZA H. RAMSAY.

Mr. STEELE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6681) granting a pension to Eliza H. Ramsay; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES RYBACK.

On motion of Mr. ELLIS, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the claims of James Ryback, there being no adverse report.

B. C. BAILEY AND OTHERS.

On motion of Mr. DINGLEY, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of B. C. Bailey and others, owners of the ship Argo.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence was granted, by unanimous consent, in the following cases:

To Mr. BUCK, until Friday morning.

To Mr. SKINNER, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

Then, on motion of Mr. WILSON, (at five o'clock and thirty-seven minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: The preamble and resolution adopted by the senate of the State of New York, relative to the payment of certain claims for services of the militia of that State in the war of 1812—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HARMER: The petition of the operators of Pilling & Madiley Hosiery Mills, Philadelphia, and of the operators of the Crown Hosiery Mills of Philadelphia, asking that Congress take action for the immediate correction of the error in the Revised Statutes relative to duties on woolen knit goods—severally to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MORRISON: The petition of John G. Irwin, for increase of pension of John Gehring, of Madison County, Illinois—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STONE: The petition of the operators of the Ipswich (Massachusetts) Woolen Mills, for change of law relating to the duty on woolen knit goods—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 28, 1882.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting, in answer to a resolution of June 23, certain information in regard to oaths of directors of some of the national banking associations in Richmond, Virginia, with reports of the Comptroller of the Currency thereon. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] to the communication, and inquires what disposition he desires made of it.

Mr. BECK. I think that the communication should be referred to the Committee on Finance; but let it lie on the table for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will lie on the table and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BLAIR. I hold in my hand a petition of the National Federation of Labor in Washington, District of Columbia, addressed to the Senate of the United States. It is not of great length. It is a very careful, moderate, and respectful statement of the views of this national association located in the District of Columbia upon the question of the strikes which are now agitating the country; and in compliance with the desire of the petitioners and my own sense of what I think is proper in this case, I ask that the petition be printed in the RECORD. It will not be burdensome to the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is it lengthy?

Mr. BLAIR. It is not very lengthy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the petition will be printed in the RECORD; and it will be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. FARLEY. If the reading of the petition is asked for I suggest that it be printed in the RECORD without being read at the desk.

Mr. BLAIR. It is the understanding that it is to be printed without being read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition would apparently take at least two pages of the RECORD. It is very long.

Mr. HARRIS. On what subject is the petition?

Mr. BLAIR. I do not think it will take two pages of the RECORD. It may take one page in the ordinary print of the RECORD.

Mr. SAULSBURY. What is it about?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is on the subject of labor strikes.

Mr. HARRIS. I think it a very unsafe and bad precedent to be printing petitions in the RECORD. When the Senator from New Hampshire or any other Senator shall make a report upon the subject, that will be printed. I am inclined to object to printing petitions in the RECORD.

Mr. BLAIR. This, as I stated, is a carefully drawn, methodical, respectful, and, from their stand-point, a necessary statement of the views of the workmen of the country as embodied in this official expression of the national organization in this District. Knowing of the introduction of a resolution by the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. MORGAN,] and that the national Legislature might become somewhat interested in the subject, they have carefully drawn this statement of their grievances.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the Senator from Tennessee withdraws his objection, and the petition will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BLAIR. Then I do not care to say any more.

The petition is as follows:

Petition of the National Federation of Labor in the District of Columbia.

To the United States Senate:

Your petitioners, duly appointed to represent the National Federation of Labor in the District of Columbia, respectfully submit a somewhat cursory statement, (owing to the limited time allowed by the resolution for your report to the Senate,) in regard to some of the causes producing the widespread feeling of discontent which prevails among their fellow-workmen of the United States.

We rejoice in common with all intelligent workmen, organized and still combining throughout the country for the purpose of ameliorating their social condition, in the prospect at last held out of obtaining that amelioration through lawful means at the hands of the legislative power of the nation. They will all feel gratified to learn that your honorable committee have been instructed by the Senate to consider the subject of "labor strikes"—to "inquire into the causes thereof, and to report what measures can be properly provided to modify or remove such causes of disturbance, and to provide against their continuance or recurrence.

This is a most important national question. But there can be no doubt, in the opinion of your petitioners, as to the constitutional power of Congress to afford the remedy required. The organic law of our Government declares in unmistakable terms its purpose to be: "To establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty," equally to the people and to their posterity.

The establishment of justice is the first grand object enumerated, after the formation of government, for which the Constitution was framed by the builders, our common forefathers. That point covered, the remaining injunctions may be easily enforced.

But your petitioners respectfully submit to your enlightened judgment as Senators that the existing relations of capital and labor are not adjusted in accordance with the principles of equity or fair dealing, and so long as these unfair relations are permitted by the law-making power to exist, without some radical modification, all efforts to "insure domestic tranquillity" will be futile; order cannot be enforced where justice is violated, except by a deplorable system of tyranny which would result in wholesale destruction of life and property, perhaps.

The average wage workmen of the nation, owing to the inability of their parents to maintain them at schools and colleges, spend the days of their youth in acquiring the skill and developing the muscle necessary to fit them for their several avocations, rendering them valuable citizens and indispensable auxiliaries to the general welfare of community. When they attain manhood and quit their apprenticeship, commencing life as journeymen mechanics, they find capitalists without mechanical skill (as a general rule) in full possession of all the profitable branches of the trade or business to the mastery of which the unfortunate workmen had previously devoted their entire youth in acquiring. With this cheerless prospect before them the moneyless workmen have no recourse but to sell their dearly bought skill and labor upon such terms as the greedy capitalist aforesaid may see proper to allow them—a rate of wages generally very slightly in advance of the bare cost of subsistence. The hope of acquiring enough money to enter into competition with their employers by saving the scant surplus of their daily wages is exceedingly thin, and the mere contemplation of such an idea is in a great degree demoralizing to a young man of ambitious spirit.

The Government considers a fair valuation of capital invested to be 3½ per cent. per annum. In excess of this rate is illegal usury. The journeyman mechanic usually finds the capital invested in the prosecution of his own business yielding to the investors 40, 80, or 100 per cent. on the sale of the products of his skill and toil, after deducting his scanty wages. When the heat and burden of the day is over, and he returns after nightfall to his humble home, and hears the plaintive cry of his family for the common comforts of life, which his wages cannot afford, is not some manifestation of discontent a natural consequence of the failure on the part of Congress to fulfill the duty enjoined upon it by the Constitution, to wit, "the establishment of justice?" We submit this inquiry with all due respect and humility to the honorable Committee on Education and Labor.

The workmen see but little sympathy manifested for their hopeless condition by the rich employer, grown fat on the unrequited toil of his laborers, and exclusive in his social relations—a great gulf stands between them in the scale of society—and he naturally seeks communion and fellowship with his fellow-sufferers. They organize a trade union, with very limited knowledge of parliamentary or statute law, and endeavor in their humble way to right the wrongs which they feel themselves subjected to by means of a "strike" for better remuneration for their toil. But capital always resists such demands, and imports from abroad, with the surplus means wrung from the toil of the strikers, another hungry crowd of workmen to take their places, driving their old employés out of their homes as despised "tramps." In some cases the defeated workmen, driven to frenzy, are provoked to commit violence, and public indignation is aroused on ex parte statements of the case in that portion of the public press deriving support mainly from employers. Then the strong arm of the Government is invoked by capital. To do what? Do they ask for the "establishment of justice"—the paramount object of the State? No! That is not their petition. They ask you to "insure domestic tranquillity" by crushing out the strike with the bayonet of the militia or the bludgeon of the police, and thus maintain the capitalist in his "time-honored" system of unjust oppression.

It is reported that a law recently passed the Legislature of New York making it a penal offense for workingmen to combine to commit "any" act injurious to trade or commerce, which implies that a strike for higher wages is to be punished as a criminal offense. What will be the natural outgrowth of such legislation in a free government?

Why does the law-making power of the country skip the first injunction of the Constitution and endeavor to enforce the second? is a question naturally arising among workmen. The answer to this is thought by the mass of workmen of to-day to be found in the popular belief that the working majority in charge of the machinery of the Government has been corrupted in all its branches by the more unscrupulous combinations of capitalists controlling vast corporations; so that this grand social superstructure, founded "by the people and for the people," has been converted from its legitimate purpose into an engine of oppression to the poor for the benefit of the rich, as we are taught by the debates in Congress and elsewhere more or less authentic.

Your petitioners are bound in justice to say, however, that the resolutions of the Senate which have been referred to the honorable Committee on Education and Labor indicate a new departure in the conduct of public affairs—a grand stride in the right direction toward a just solution of the labor problem.

With the foregoing outline of the causes which lead to strikes, your petitioners respectfully refer to the next succeeding proposition contained in the first resolution, to-wit: "What measures can be properly provided to modify or remove such causes of disturbance, and to provide against their continuance or recurrence?"

All that the workmen desire to accomplish by their trade unions is an opportunity to pursue their avocations under the eight-hour law and contribute to the general welfare of the nation by their labor and skill, and that they may be permitted to reap their legitimate reward for such labor, thus enabling them to improve their own condition, educate their children, feed, clothe, and comfortably shelter their families, and enjoy the blessings of liberty on a perfect equality with their fellow-citizens engaged in other useful pursuits.

We believe this result can be accomplished by the wise men of the nation assembled in Congress from time to time if they will boldly undertake to "establish justice" in the relations between capital and labor. Precedents in legislation are abundant wherein the credit of the Government has been extended to corporations organized for the "promotion of the general welfare," and if national organizations of workingmen are encouraged to incorporate under the general laws for the prosecution of their legitimate business, if deemed by the Congress to be promotive of the general welfare, it seems practicable to your petitioners that such corporations might be allowed to issue stock or bonds bearing interest at 3½ per cent. per annum to enable them to establish their manufacturing enterprises, and give to the Government a first mortgage on their factories and workshops in consideration of the Government guaranteeing the payment of the interest on such bonds as it falls due. By law the prices of such products could be controlled by the constitutional power of Congress over trade and commerce, so as to yield a fair day's wages for a reasonable day's work to every member of the corporation according to their relative degrees of merit as workmen, and at the same time protect the general community from oppressive exactions. The surplus profits derived from the business of each corporation could be utilized in building comfortable homes for the membership of each, and educating their families, raising them above the social grade which their present enforced poverty compels them to occupy. Under such a "co-operative system," regulated by national law, it is believed capital will reap its legitimate share and honest labor its equitable reward.

This theory, which is perhaps crudely presented, (though we hope your honorable committee will apprehend its drift and formulate it in what may seem to them to be a more practicable shape,) may appear to be an abridgment of the large liberty so long enjoyed by the avaricious capitalist in the employment of labor at his own terms, and selling its products at such enhanced valuation as the community can bear, without let or hinderance by law, making the rich richer and the poor poorer; but your petitioners firmly believe that their fellow-workmen, after their long period of enforced servitude, as the mere thralls of the money-centers of the country and their unscrupulous agents retained as task-masters, would hail such a beneficent measure of protection to the honest laborer as a happy deliverance from poverty, want, and social degradation, and they would speedily realize that the Federal Government in its second century of development is a blessing to the industrious workman, instead of proving, as we are now inclined to regard it, a crushing and extortionate gatherer of taxes from the working elements to be squandered among idle, vicious, and worthless political stipendiaries, who revel in the possession of unearned honors and gains, and look down upon the unrequited laborer with supercilious contempt and scorn. The public officer and the legislator under such a régime will be supported and respected as faithful public servants and benefactors, as they should be under a wise paternal government, seeking by proper measures to make our country the workshop of the world, and attracting to our shores the best skilled labor among civilized mankind.

Hoping the Great Creator will inspire your honorable committee with wisdom to rightfully consider the important subject submitted to you by the Senate for investigation, and that your report will so clearly define the powers and the duties of Congress in the premises that there will be no difficulty in fixing the responsibility for a "continuance or recurrence of these disturbances" in the future, your petitioners respectfully subscribe themselves

Committee.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 26, 1882.

Mr. Alex. M. Kenaday is authorized to submit this petition to the Committee of Education and Labor on behalf of the National Federation of Labor.

G. EDMONSTON, President.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, presented resolutions adopted by a committee representing the various commercial associations of Philadelphia, favoring an increased appropriation for improving the Delaware River and Bay; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WINDOM presented a petition of comrades of Muller Post No. 1, Department of Minnesota, Grand Army of the Republic, praying for the passage of a bill for the erection of an Army and Navy hospital at Hot Springs, Arkansas; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a petition of 85 citizens of Minnesota praying for the establishment of a custom-house at Saint Vincent, Minnesota; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DAWES. I present a petition of internal-revenue gaugers of the third district of Massachusetts, praying that that portion of the Revised Statutes which limits their compensation to $5 per day be so amended that the limitation shall be $6 a day. As there is a bill before the Senate on that matter, I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

SOPHRONIA R. HURLBUT.

Mr. WINDOM. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 75) allowing the widow of General Stephen A. Hurlbut, late minister to Peru, one year's salary, deducting the amount already received, to report it with amendments and recommend its passage. I think there will be no objection to the passage of this and another little measure which I am instructed to report. I ask the Senate to consider the joint resolution at this time.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution (S. R. No. 75) allowing the widow of General Stephen A. Hurlbut, late minister to Peru, one year's salary, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first amendment of the Committee on Foreign Relations was, in line 4, after the word "appropriated," to strike out the words "the sum of $10,000;" and in lines 7 and 8, after the word "Peru," to strike out "said amount being;" so as to read:

That there be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid to Mrs. Sophronia R. Hurlbut, the widow of General Stephen A. Hurlbut, late envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Peru, one year's salary as said minister.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear some explanation of the joint resolution.

Mr. WINDOM. I will explain it in a moment. There is a further amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was read, being to add at the end of the joint resolution:

From August 1, 1881, in addition to all legal allowances, deducting the amount of salary received by said Hurlbut since that date; and also to pay the necessary expenses incurred in the removal of his remains from Peru to the State of Illinois for interment, to be paid under the direction of the Secretary of State.

Mr. WINDOM. That amendment explains itself. The resolution originally provided, I will say to the Senator from Missouri——

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand it now.

Mr. WINDOM. Very well.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUISA V. DE KILPATRICK.

Mr. WINDOM. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report back with amendments the joint resolution (S. R. No. 77) allowing the widow of General Judson Kilpatrick, late minister to Chili, one year's salary, deducting all payments received. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first amendment of the committee was, in line 4, after the word "appropriated," to strike out the words "the sum of $10,000;" and in lines 7 and 8, after the word "Chili," to strike out the words "said amount being;" so as to read:

That there be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid to Mrs. Louisa V. De Kilpatrick, the widow of General Judson Kilpatrick, late envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Chili, one year's salary as said minister.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of the resolution, to add:

From June 21, 1881, in addition to all legal allowances, deducting the amount of salary received by said Kilpatrick since that date.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred a petition of the executors of John W. Forney, praying for the relief of his estate, submitted a report thereon accompanied by a bill (S. No. 2099) for the relief of the executors of John W. Forney.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. FARLEY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1789) providing for a coaling-dock and naval storehouse at Port Royal, South Carolina, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. ROLLINS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1720) authorizing the construction of vessels of war for the Navy of the United States, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1602) for the relief of William H. Powell, reported it with an amendment; and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill

(S. No. 1139) for the relief of the estates of James Vance and William Vance, reported it without amendment; and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CHILCOTT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2317) for the relief of Mary Bullard, reported it without amendment; and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The Committee on the Revision of the Laws, who were instructed by a resolution of the Senate of March 27 to inquire as to what further legislation is necessary, if any, to define the meaning of the words "Indian country," as used in the Revised Statutes and other laws of the United States, have considered the subject, and report a bill to define the meaning of those words, accompanied by a written report. As this is a matter which affects the whole of the Indian tribes, the committee are of opinion that the bill ought to be referred, with the accompanying papers and the report, to the Committee on Indian Affairs for their consideration. I make that suggestion.

The bill (S. No. 2100) to define the meaning of the term "Indian country," as used in the Revised Statutes and other laws of the United States, was read twice by its title.

Mr. DAWES. I seems to me that it should be examined by the Committee on the Judiciary, for it is a matter pertaining to the criminal law and does not affect the management of Indians. The same matter was before the Committee on Indian Affairs in another shape, and they caused it to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I have no objection to such a reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be printed and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MILLER, of California, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the memorial of Rear-Admiral David McDougal, United States Navy, (retired,) praying that he be allowed the pay of rear-admiral on the retired list, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 2101) providing for the pay of Rear-Admiral David McDougal, United States Navy.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAMDEN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1903) granting a pension to Alfred M. Jarboe, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. JONAS, from the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and tributaries, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2013) referring to the Court of Claims the claim of Gallus Kirchner, reported it without amendment; and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. ROLLINS. By direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs I report an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill, with an accompanying document. The document is somewhat lengthy and need not be printed. I move its reference to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

BRIDGES IN GEORGIA AND FLORIDA.

Mr. VEST. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to report favorably the bill (H. R. No. 6519) to authorize the construction of bridges over the rivers Saint Mary's, Satella, Little Satella, and Crooked, in the States of Georgia and Florida, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LABOR STRIKES.

Mr. BLAIR. The Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] on the 15th instant in relation to labor strikes with directions to report within a week, have considered the resolution, and have directed me to report a resolution as a substitute for the one referred to them.

It seemed proper to the committee to recommend to the Senate, if the investigation which was suggested should be made, that the scope of it should be somewhat enlarged; and that a resolution should be reported the terms of which would give to the committee the opportunity of calling in some information which would not be appropriate under the first resolution, and perhaps varying the investigation somewhat further. It seemed also to the committee that it was proper it should undertake the investigation, if it should be ordered by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution reported by the committee will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor is hereby authorized and directed to take into consideration the subject of the relations between labor and capital, the wages and hours of labor, the condition of the laboring classes in the United States, and their relative condition and wages as compared with similar classes abroad; also the subject of labor strikes and to inquire into the causes thereof and the agencies producing the same, and to report what legislation should be adopted to modify or remove such causes and to provide against their continuance or recurrence, as well as any other legislation calculated to promote harmonious relations between capitalists and laborers and the interests of both by the improvement of the condition of the industrial classes of the United States.

Second. Said committee shall have leave to sit in vacation, and by sub-committees to visit such places in the United States as they may deem proper to obtain necessary information under these resolutions; and said committee or sub-committees shall have power to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and examine persons under oath or otherwise, and to cause depositions to be taken and certified under such regulations as they may adopt.

Third. Said committee shall have power to appoint a clerk at a salary of $6 a day, and to employ such stenographic aid as may be necessary, and to appoint a sergeant-at-arms from the officers or employés of the Senate; and the actual and necessary expenses of said committee properly incurred in the execution of these resolutions shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BUTLER. That is an important resolution. Let it be printed and go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be printed and go over, under the rule.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DAWES. I am requested to introduce a bill. I know nothing about the merits of the bill.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 2102) for the relief of Hiram S. Washburn; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2103) authorizing the President of the United States to appoint William F. Pratt, late a second assistant engineer in the United States Navy, upon the retired list of the Navy; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2104) to provide for the construction of a public building at Martinsburgh, West Virginia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HAMPTON asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2105) to empower Robert Adger to bring suit in the Court of Claims for rent alleged to be due him; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CAMDEN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2106) to recognize and pay certain claims due by the State of West Virginia to citizens thereof for services rendered the United States in the late war, and which are properly chargeable to the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOAR (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 86) confirming the call for a peace congress in Washington, District of Columbia, November 22, 1882; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. No. 58) to print Dr. John L. Hayes's pamphlet upon the husbandry of the Angora goat.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. No. 2202) donating condemned cannon and cannon-balls to the Soldiers' Monument Association of Birmingham, Connecticut;

A bill (H. R. No. 3082) granting condemned cannon to Anna M. Ross Post No. 94 of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Philadelphia;

A bill (H. R. No. 3278) to authorize the Secretary of War to loan tents to the Northwestern Missouri and Southwestern Iowa Veteran Soldiers' Association; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6004) making an appropriation to construct a road and approaches from Mound City, Illinois, to the national military cemetery, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3830) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had concurred in some and non-concurred in other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4167) to enable national banking associations to extend their corporate existence.

The message also announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1052) in relation to the Japanese indemnity fund.

The message further announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4166) to divide the State of Iowa into two judicial districts.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 789) to regulate the use of the Capitol grounds;

A bill (S. No. 1158) to authorize the supreme court of the District of Columbia to appoint two additional criers; and

A bill (S. No. 1128) to authorize the Secretary of State to allow for expenditures within named to James Rea, late consul at Belfast, Ireland.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. ALLISON, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Daniel Scott, private Company H Sixty-fifth Illinois Infantry, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate.

PACIFIC RAILROAD SINKING FUND.

Mr. MORRILL. I gave notice yesterday morning that I should this morning call up the bill (S. No. 2090) to further regulate the investment of the Pacific Railroad sinking fund; but not having obtained some facts that I desire, I shall not do so until to-morrow.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no "concurrent or other resolutions," the morning hour is closed.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill will be proceeded with until the hour of two o'clock.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Will the Senator from Iowa give way to me that I may have House bill No. 2592 taken up?

Mr. ALLISON. I will yield if it takes no time.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I do not think it will take five minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The appropriation bill is the order of business until two o'clock, when the unfinished business will come up. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks, the Senator from Iowa consenting, to have the bill indicated by him taken up and considered.

Mr. ALLISON. If it does not lead to debate.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I do not think it will.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be announced.

The ACTING SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. No. 2592) granting a pension to Mary E. Murray.

Mr. HARRIS. There is an adverse report on that bill. I object to its consideration.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I was going to state that the bill was reported adversely, but I think I can make it clear in a few moments that the bill ought to pass.

Mr. HARRIS. The bill being adversely reported, it will certainly lead to debate. There is no question about that.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I do not think it will lead to very much debate; but if there is objection, of course I withdraw the request for the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The appropriation bill will be proceeded with, objection being made to the consideration of the bill indicated by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

LOUISIANA WESTERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT.

Mr. JONAS. With the consent of the Senator from Iowa, I ask the Senate to take up a local bill which will occupy but a moment, a bill reported from the Judiciary Committee.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1963) to attach the parishes of Saint Mary's and Iberia, in the State of Louisiana, to the western judicial district of Louisiana.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, which were, in line 8, before the word "action," to insert "civil;" and to add at the close of the bill:

But all offenses committed in either of said parishes against the laws of the United States before the passage of this act shall be cognizable in the court of the United States held at New Orleans.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act the parishes of Saint Mary and Iberia, in the State of Louisiana, shall be attached to and compose a part of the western judicial district of Louisiana; and all process issued against defendants residing in said parishes shall be returned to Opelousas, in said district; and all civil actions or proceedings now pending at New Orleans against defendants residing in said parishes of Saint Mary and Iberia may, on the application of either party, be transferred to the court at Opelousas; and in case of such transfer, all papers and files therein, with copies of all journal entries, shall be transferred to the office of the clerk of the court at Opelousas, and the same shall proceed in all respects as though originally commenced in said court. But all offenses committed in either of said parishes against the laws of the United States before the passage of this act shall be cognizable in the court of the United States held at New Orleans.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3830) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 11, 18, 19, 20, 21, 32, 33, 34, 38, 41, 45, 51, and 52.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 14, 16, 17, 25, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 35, 36, 37, 39, 40, 42, 43, 44, 47, 49, 50, and 54.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert in lieu of the words stricken out by said amendment the following: "Switzerland, Denmark, and Portugal:" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$25,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the paragraph proposed to be inserted insert the following: "For salary of chargé d'affaires to Paraguay and Uruguay, $5,000:" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 22, 23, and 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 22, 23, and 24, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following: "For the consuls-general at St. Petersburg, Frankfort, and Halifax, at $3,000 each, $9,000," and insert as a new paragraph, after line 10, page 3 of the bill, the following: "For secretaries of legation and consuls-general at Vienna, Rome, and Constantinople, at $3,500 each, $10,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$332,100;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out from the first clause of said amendment the words "fifty-seven thousand four hundred" and insert in lieu thereof "fifty-nine thousand five hundred," and insert after the word "Havre," in line 9 of said amendment, the word "Crefeld;" and after the word "Naples," in line 22 of said amendment, insert the word "Genoa;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, strike out, in line 2, page 13 of the bill, the word "ten" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

W. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,
JAS. B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. C. BURROWS,
GEO. M. ROBESON,
S. S. COX,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6244) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The first amendment in order, reported by the Committee on Appropriations, was, in line 1728, to reduce the appropriation "for postage-stamps for the War Department and its bureaus, as required under the postal union, to prepay postage on matter addressed to postal-union countries" from $4,000 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the clause making appropriations "for additional clerks and other employés in the several bureaus and offices of the War Department," in line 1738, after the words "eighteen hundred and eighty-two," to insert:

And the amounts necessary to pay the said additional clerks and other employés shall be transferred from the respective appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, under such titles of appropriation as shall make them available for payment of the salaries of the clerks and employés hereby authorized in lieu of said "general service" or "detailed enlisted men."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 1750, after the word "year," to insert:

Provided, That the general service and detailed enlisted men herein referred to may receive the rates of compensation and allowances now prescribed by law and regulations, until the Secretary of War shall have adjusted the said force in accordance with the provisions of this act, and that such adjustment shall be effected on or before the 1st day of October next.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of the clause making appropriations for the "office of the Quartermaster-General," in line 1780.

Mr. ALLISON. For the purpose of securing jurisdiction over that paragraph, as I think it may want some rearrangement, I move to strike out "eight," in line 1777, and insert "six;" so as to read:

For one mechanical engineer, $1,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in the appropriations for the "office of Surgeon-General," in line 1785, after the word "four," to insert "one apothecary at $1,800; one assistant apothecary at $1,200;" and after the word "all," in line 1789, to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty-eight;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of the Surgeon-General: For one clerk of class 4; one apothecary at $1,800; one assistant apothecary at $1,200; one messenger-boy at $360; seven clerks of class 1; and fifteen clerks at $1,000 each; in all, $28,560.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "office of the Paymaster-General," in line 1797, after the word "dollars," to insert "and one engineer for building corner of Seventeenth and F streets, $1,000; in all, $2,000; so as to make the clause read:

Office of the Paymaster-General: For one clerk, $1,000; and one engineer for building corner of Seventeenth and F streets, $1,000; in all, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "public buildings and grounds," in line 1806, to increase the item for compensation of "the public gardener" from $1,600 to $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1808, after the word "for," to strike out "a foreman" and insert "foremen;" so as to make the clause read:

For foremen and laborers employed in the public grounds, $26,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Navy Department," in line 1846, to insert:

For compensation of an assistant Secretary of the Navy, to be appointed in said Department, $3,500.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out, in line 1847, the words "in said Department" and in lieu thereof to insert "by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "dollars," in line 1852, to insert "two clerks of class 2;" and, in line 1855, to increase the total amount of the appropriation "for compensation of the Secretary of the Navy, assistant secretary, and the clerks and employés in his office" from $36,900 to $43,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1856, to insert:

For books for Department library, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1882, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for compensation of the clerks and employés in the office of the "Bureau of Navigation" from $7,900 to $8,080.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to this paragraph. There seems to be no addition to any of the items in it, and yet the total amount is increased.

Mr. ALLISON. That is because our clerk discovered a mistake in the computation made by the House.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1932, to insert as a heading to the appropriation beginning in line 1933, "Navy Department buildings."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for the "Naval Observatory," in line 1996, after the word "grounds," to insert "two skilled laborers, one at $1,000 and one at $720;" in line 1998, before the word "laborers," to strike out "nine" and insert "seven;" and in line 1999, after the word "thousand," to insert "four hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Naval Observatory: For pay of three assistant astronomers, $4,900; one clerk of class 4; one instrument-maker, $1,500; four watchmen, including one for new Naval Observatory grounds; two skilled laborers, one at $1,000 and one at $720; and seven laborers; in all, $17,420.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of the Interior," in line 2036, to increase the item of appropriation for compensation of "Assistant Secretary" from $3,500 to $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2040, after the word "building," to strike out "seven clerks" and insert "superintendent of documents, $2,500; six;" so as to read:

Superintendent of documents, $2,500; six chiefs of division at $2,000 each, one of whom shall be disbursing clerk.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2055, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for compensation of Secretary of the Interior, Assistant Secretary, and the clerks and employés in his office, from $117,230 to $118,230.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the office of "Assistant Attorney-General," in the Department of the Interior, after the word "for," in line 2070, to strike out "one law clerk" and insert "two law clerks at;" and in line 2072, after the word "dollars," to insert "each;" so as to read:

For two law clerks at $2,250 each.

Mr. CALL. I wish to offer an amendment, if it is proper at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If it is an amendment to the amendment of the committee, it is proper. The amendment of the Senator from Florida to the amendment will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the word "one," in line 2071, and insert "chief," and in the same line to strike out "two hundred and fifty" and insert "five hundred;" so as to read:

For chief law clerk, $2,500; and strike out, in line 2072, the word "three" and insert "four;" so as to read:

Four clerks at $2,000 each.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator also proposes to strike out "each," in line 2072, so as to provide for a chief law clerk at $2,500 and four clerks at $2,000 each. The Chair understands the Senator from Florida to move to amend the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations as just stated.

Mr. CALL. Yes, sir. It has come within my observation in the course of my duties here that the person performing the duties of chief law clerk in the Assistant Attorney-General's Office in the Interior Department is a man of extraordinary capacity, fully qualified to perform any judicial duty or any legal or professional duty that may be imposed upon any man in any position. It has also been made known to me by actual experience in that office, the people of my State having had many subjects of interest to them connected with the public lands before the law officers of that Department, that he is one of the most industrious men whom I have ever seen in any position, either public or private. He is thoroughly familiar with the general laws upon subjects relating to his Department, and is conversant, by an experience of many years, with all the decisions of the Department. I am informed that he stands very high in the esteem and confidence of those who have been at the head of the Department.

I made the inquiry what his compensation was. That compensation this bill proposes to make, in common with another appointee, $2,250. There is no question that in any pursuit connected with the law outside of this Department he would be able to command at least $5,000 a year. I am informed that he is a man of large family, and that he has been in this office for many years; he has no hope of increasing his compensation by any effort or any occupation in any other pursuit. It is manifest to any one who knows anything about the necessities of life and the expense of living in Washington that this amount is not adequate compensation for such a man as I have described, and that it will not afford to a man and his family more than a bare and meager support, without anything for the education of his children or as a provision against sickness and age or discharge from office.

Now, sir, I have but little personal acquaintance with this gentleman. All that I know I have learned in the course of my official relations with his Department; but I submit to the Senate that a man who has been in the service of the Government for so many years, of such eminent qualifications, every day passing upon questions involving large amounts of money, every day saving to the Government large sums of money and performing duties equally as important as those which the judges of the Supreme and the circuit courts perform in many cases, should receive a larger compensation than $2,250. I therefore submit this amendment, and I trust the Senate will give it favorable consideration.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I take it from my examination of the Book of Estimates that the amendment is out of order. I find no estimate for the additional pay asked for by the Senator from Florida for this clerk, and as it must be recommended by a standing committee or recommended by the head of a Department or in the Book of Estimates, I think the amendment is out of order. I submit that point to the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It provides for the same number of clerks, but the Senator from Florida wants one chief law clerk at $2,500 and then four clerks at $2,000, leaving the total amount the same.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. But the rule expressly says that any amendment which tends to advance or increase the amount—and this does tend to advance and increase the amount—is not in order.

Mr. CONGER. This does not increase the amount a particle.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I beg pardon.

Mr. CONGER. It leaves the amount just the same. It provides for a chief law clerk at $2,500, instead of two law clerks at $2,250 each, and makes one additional clerk at $2,000, leaving the amount appropriated just exactly the same as in the bill as reported.

Mr. CALL. I think myself that the officer who acts as chief law clerk in the Department of the Interior should have a higher salary and one corresponding to that paid in other Departments. He has more duties to perform than any other officer there, and still is paid as a common clerk. My amendment leaves the amount just the same, and it is a very proper change in the appropriation, leaving one clerk at $2,000, and a chief law clerk at $2,500. If gentlemen are aware of the responsibility and the vast duties performed by this officer, I think they will see the propriety of this change.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The amendment certainly does increase a salary, and that comes under the rule.

Mr. CONGER. It increases the salary of this officer, but does not increase the amount appropriated altogether.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That does not make any difference. It increases the salary of a particular man, and therefore comes under the rule. The Senator might take the entire salary from one and give it to another, but surely that would be out of order under the rule.

Mr. CONGER. The committee has proposed to increase the salary of one clerk. We propose to reduce that salary to $2,000, and put the other salary at $2,500. It is just and right that it should be done for the services rendered.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. This subject was considered by the committee with the information the Department had; and I believe the rate was fixed to suit it; but I insist on the question of order.

Mr. CALL. I should like the Senator from West Virginia to refer us to the rule which prohibits our increasing salaries.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Rule 27.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Rule 27 speaks of an amendment, "the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation." One law clerk at $2,500 does not increase the appropriation at all, because there are two law clerks here at $2,250. There is no objection to that on a point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Chair decide that the point of order is not well taken?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair cannot see that the point of order applies.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Take the next rule, Rule 28. It certainly provides that the Committee on Appropriations shall have notice one day in advance of proposed amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was not the point made. When was this amendment submitted to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. CALL. This amendment was proposed to the House bill on the 19th of June and referred to the committee on that day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the amendment been sent to the Appropriations Committee of the Senate?

Mr. CALL. Yes sir, on the 19th of June this amendment was submitted and referred.

Mr. CONGER. That gives the notice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Of course.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The rule reads:

All amendments to general appropriation bills moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate—

This has not been moved by a committee—proposing to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill or to add new items of appropriation shall, at least one day before they are offered, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rule reads:

All amendments to general appropriation bills moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, proposing to increase an appropriation, &c.

The Chair would like to be pointed to the place where a Senator cannot move to change an item without increasing the appropriation.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. In the first place, Rule 27 provides that no amendment shall be received unless it comes from a standing committee or is estimated for, &c. Rule 28 then goes on and says that even under these circumstances it shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations one day in advance.

Again, according to the claim of the Senator from Michigan, there might be twenty clerks provided for in one paragraph, and you could give all their salaries to one. Surely that was never contemplated. It is where the salary of any particular person is proposed to be increased that the rule applies. You cannot reduce one and add to another and keep within the rule. You must confine yourself to what the bill provides for, and that is the salaries as provided by the bill. The Senator might say as to a paragraph for twenty clerks, "I propose to strike down ten of them and leave one or two or five." The rule expressly applies to an amendment "to increase an appropriation" for anything.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair simply decides that to provide for one clerk at $2,500 and one at $2,000 does not increase the appropriation for two clerks at $2,250.

Mr. CALL. The rule is perfectly plain I submit. It has nothing of the interpretation the Senator from West Virginia puts upon it.

Mr. CONGER. It would be a rule that ought to be changed very soon if it was impossible for the Senate to change a recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations. That is all there is about this. The Committee on Appropriations have changed the bill and put in two law clerks at $2,250 each. If in the opinion of the Senate one chief law clerk should be paid a larger sum, as in my judgment he ought to be, and I believe it is admitted he ought to be, and the other clerk put in with the general class of clerks, instead of putting two law clerks at $2,250 and have no head to that branch, the Senate ought to have the right to do it. I hope there will be no objection to this change.

If the chairman of the committee is acquainted with the services of this clerk and the duties he has been performing in the examination of all the questions of trespass on public lands and legal opinions upon them and things of that kind within the last few years, he would say himself that a man so eminently fitted for that place should have a higher salary than the common law clerks in that Department, and he should be the chief. I do not propose to increase the appropriation or the expenditure at all, but to have a man suitable for that position to receive something like proper pay, and the other clerks under him receive the usual pay for such services.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is a rearrangement of the clause; that is all.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I know the officer for whom this provision is moved, and I agree that it is important to have a first-class set of men in the assistant attorney-general's office having charge of these great questions; but the committee did not feel authorized to increase the compensation of the present law clerk, he now receiving $2,250. I know he is a very worthy man and a very faithful man and very competent in every respect; but the Secretary of the Interior wants another law clerk. Now, I submit that you cannot get law clerks of the character and the ability necessary to discharge these duties without paying them the sum named in the amendment of the committee. Now, if you propose to increase the compensation, let the Senate understand perfectly what this is. If the Senate is in favor of increasing the compensation of this law clerk, then I suggest that instead of keeping the amount as it is the next law clerk authorized here should have a salary of $2,250. I do not believe you can get a law clerk competent to discharge the duties there for $2,000.

Mr. CALL. Let the chairman propose that.

Mr. ALLISON. I would therefore suggest "two law clerks, one at $2,500 and one at $2,250."

Mr. CONGER. Let that be done.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Does the chairman suppose that is in order under the rule?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That increases the appropriation.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Certainly it does. I have made the point of order, and I think it is well taken. I have consulted with the Senator from Florida, and there is great justice in his proposition. If it can be done within the rules, I propose to withdraw the point of order. I was surprised that my chief and leader, whom I like to follow, when he found that I had made the point of order, should attempt to raise the amount here without first considering the point of order. I like to follow him, and will follow him in trying to protect the bill; but at the same time, when I think a point of order is well made, the chairman ought not to take it from me and make a proposition in another direction.

Mr. ALLISON. I apologize to my friend for any indiscretion.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. No apology is necessary.

Mr. ALLISON. I only want to say that if a law clerk is to be appointed at all, I think we ought to appropriate enough money to secure the services of a competent man. It is said that the man who is there now is worth $2,500; if he is, I shall be glad to get another man worth equally as much.

Mr. CONGER. When the other man has had the legal experience he will deserve more than the sum now proposed for him.

Mr. ALLISON. Very likely. Therefore I suggest that the other law clerk receive the compensation we propose here, $2,250. I trust my friend from West Virginia will not make any point of order.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It may be all right, and I will not raise the point on the chairman.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the clause read:

Two law clerks, one at $2,500 and one at $2,250.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That I accept. I think it right and just.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will regard the question as on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, without putting the question on the others.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 2073, after the word "each," to insert "one stenographer at $1,600."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Now the footing in line 2075 must be changed so as to make the total $13,550, instead of $9,450 as proposed in the House bill, and $13,300 as proposed by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 2092.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to move an amendment at that point. I move to amend that paragraph, so as to make it read down to that point:

For the rent of a suitable building or buildings for the use of the Pension Bureau, to be selected by the Secretary of the Interior, $16,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the Senator the amendment in writing?

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be sent to the desk and read by the Secretary.

The ACTING SECRETARY. Beginning in line 2088, it is proposed to strike out "portion of the building on the northeast corner of Twelfth street and Pennsylvania avenue, Washington, District of Columbia, occupied by the Pension Office, or any other fire-proof building or buildings that the Secretary of the Interior may select, $20,000," and to insert "suitable building or buildings for the use of the Pension Office, to be selected by the Secretary of the Interior, $16,000;" so as to make the clause read:

For the rent of a suitable building or buildings for the use of the Pension Office, to be selected by the Secretary of the Interior, $16,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The agreement was, as the Chair understood, to go through with the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations, and then to allow any other amendments to be moved.

Mr. ALLISON. I prefer that that should be the rule, but as my associate on the committee now offers this amendment, I will not make that point on him. I am very sorry he did not call the attention of the committee to any facts he may have bearing on this point.

Mr. BECK. I suggest to the Senator from Kansas the propriety of letting us go through with the committee amendments first. There are quite a number of amendments that I wish to suggest after the committee's amendments are through. He will not be precluded by allowing the committee amendments to be gone through with; and he had better let the rule be adhered to.

Mr. PLUMB. I have not any preference about the time, except as a matter personal to myself, which I will make no point about; but I want to say a word in regard to the suggestion of the chairman of the committee, courteous as he always is, that the facts I have should have been brought to the attention of the committee. If I proposed to say anything about that point, I might speak about some amendments put in as coming from the committee that were agreed on after the committee adjourned, and of which I had no notice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If it is more convenient to the Senator——

Mr. PLUMB. I withdraw the amendment for the time being.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will withdraw another statement, and that is, that amendments have been put in here that have not met the approval of the committee. I will say to the Senator from Kansas that no amendment has been suggested or offered by me as from the committee where the committee had not agreed to it.

Mr. PLUMB. I say that amendments have been put in here as from the committee which were voted down by the committee when in session and afterward put in by the suggestions of individuals who voted against them, without notice to the remaining members of the committee. That is all I have to say about that.

Mr. ALLISON. We may as well have this matter understood now as at any other time. No amendment has been suggested by me to this bill that has not been considered by the committee in the committee-room, except the amendment which this morning was suggested on the floor. The Committee on Appropriations had a meeting, at which the Senator from Kansas was not present, nor was the Senator from West Virginia, and rearranged this bill somewhat, and at which various changes were made. Of course I do not desire an imputation of that character to go against the person in charge of this bill, or any other, without resenting it as it deserves to be resented.

Mr. PLUMB. I will say that the amendment putting in an assistant Secretary of War was voted down when I was present at the committee meeting, and I was never notified of any further meeting. I was informed this morning—I may be mistaken—that that was done by passing the thing around, as the hat is passed around sometimes. I only mentioned that, not as a matter of complaint but in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa that I had not been courteous to the committee in not stating to it what I knew about this matter as to renting a building for the Pension Office.

Mr. BECK. I was not aware till the suggestion was made by the Senator from Kansas that anything improper had been done by any member of the committee, and I did not know to what he referred; but I think I know now; and I desire to say in behalf of the committee that on Saturday, before we adjourned, the chairman of the committee distinctly called the committee together for eleven or half past eleven o'clock on Monday morning for the purpose of hearing any additional suggestions that the heads of Departments and officers of bureaus might have to make, and for consultation among ourselves as to what ought to be done. At eleven or half past eleven on Monday morning the meeting was held. The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy appeared before the committee—the Senator from Kansas, a member of the committee, not being present—and told us the reasons why they ought to have an assistant secretary, and they told them in a way that impressed themselves on all the members of the committee who were present. I remember the Secretary of the Navy particularly saying he would write a letter and send all the facts as to the force he has and the reasons why he ought to have an assistant secretary. The Secretary of War was equally pronounced. After they had given their reasons fairly and fully to the committee called together regularly by the chairman, all the members of the committee present agreed that each of these two Secretaries ought to have an assistant, and it was not the fault of the committee or any member of it that the Senator from Kansas was not present at that meeting. It was regularly called, and the two Secretaries were regularly heard and the reasons they gave could not have been answered and cannot be now. If the Senator from Kansas undertakes to say that the committee was wrong in giving these two assistants I desire to hear him, and then I want the letter of the Secretary of the Navy, if it is here, read in reply to whatever he may say. I do not propose to hold myself responsible for the action of the Committee on Appropriations; but I do propose to resent in any proper manner I can any suggestion from any member of the committee that the other members of that committee are not as true to their duty as he is.

Mr. PLUMB. Well, Mr. President, perhaps I have been under a misapprehension of facts; perhaps I have been mistaken as to the facts of the case. What I said was in direct reply to what I deemed a reflection on me made by the Senator from Iowa, that I had moved this amendment without having consulted with the committee about it. I was not aware myself of the meeting referred to having been called. I could not have been there if I had been notified, because I was sick in bed; I was not out of my bed that day at all, as I had not been for many days previous, except on Saturday. I did not care anything about the matter; but the statement made to me in response to my inquiry, by a member of the committee, I understood to be to the effect that the matter had been passed upon, and one or two members who had voted against making an assistant Secretary of War concluded to change their minds, and it had been done in that informal way.

If I misapprehended the facts, of course I withdraw any statement based upon that misapprehension. It was not with a design of reflecting on anybody, but I conceived it my duty to defend myself against what I considered the aspersions of the chairman of the committee that I had moved an amendment here on facts which I had not chosen to disclose to the committee, and therefore I had been guilty of a dereliction of the duty which I owed to my brother members on the committee. I stated in reply to that simply that the facts had not come to me in time to be communicated to the committee, but I would communicate them to the Senate. I conceived on the whole, upon the facts as I understood them, that I was as much relieved from blame as the other members on the committee. Probably in regard to that I was mistaken. I undoubtedly was mistaken, according to the statement of the Senator from Kentucky, and to that extent I withdraw what I said about it. But so far as this matter is concerned, the facts that have come to my knowledge only came to me yesterday, and it was with the simple design of saving to the Government $4,000 a year, which I believe we can save in the renting of a building by changing the phraseology of this paragraph, that I moved the amendment I rose to propose.

Mr. BECK. After the statement of the Senator from Kansas I regret very much if I have said anything that may sound harshly to his ear. He is a very attentive member of the committee, and on Saturday staid with us five or six hours when I know he ought to have been in his bed, and, he having been sick before, I suppose he was sick on Monday.

We met on Monday, and those two Secretaries advised us that they were about the sole representatives of the people of the United States in their respective Departments, and when their backs were turned, and they had to be away time and again, all the business of the Departments had to be transferred to the organizations over which they presided; a naval officer took charge of the duties of the Secretary of the Navy and all the matters connected with his office, and all matters pertaining to naval affairs; when the Secretary of War was absent some bureau officer had to take charge; and we found we could not make a law that would enable him to attend to the duties carefully unless we gave him an assistant secretary. The argument made was so overwhelming that every member of the committee—the Senator from Missouri was there, I was there, a majority were there—saw at once that it was the proper thing to do. That is all there is of it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. There is a rule of the Appropriations Committee that whenever the hour appointed for a meeting comes there is considered to be a quorum present; and when the committee adjourned on Saturday, I would say to my friend from Kansas, it was understood that it would meet on Monday morning. Then neither he nor I was there, it being impossible for us to attend; but the chairman of the committee on my return told me what had occurred. It was perfectly satisfactory to me, and would have been no doubt to my friend from Kansas if he had been able to be present. I think the committee acted under its general rule on Monday and made these changes. I knew nothing of them until I saw them in the bill, and I thought they were proper.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I think I ought to say one word. I regret to have any difference with the Senator from Kansas, my associate on the committee. I did say that I thought in a matter of so much importance as the renting of a building used for the Pension Office, that if there was any light on the subject it ought to have been communicated to the committee. Of course I made no reflection upon the Senator from Kansas in that regard, although he has communicated to me several other things that he desired to put on this bill.

But when the Senator from Kansas puts upon me the imputation of rising here in my place representing the committee and suggesting amendments that have not been agreed to by the committee, feel it my duty to resent it, because that would be the perpetration of a fraud upon the Senate, and I am not guilty, and never have been, of any such fraud as that upon the body with reference to the business of the committee which I represent.

Mr. PLUMB. I did not put any such imputation on the Senator at all. He entirely misapprehends me. What I did say was that I understood amendments had been agreed upon informally in committee of which I had no chance to be informed, and that they had been put into the bill as committee amendments; not that the Senator from Iowa had put them in in any way. That is where his misapprehension started. That was said in response to his suggestion that I had not been courteous to the committee. I thought the committee had not been courteous to me.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] was pleased to remark to me a moment ago that disagreements between friends generally grew out of a misapprehension of facts, and that if I understood the Democratic party as he does and saw things as he sees them, I should be as good a Democrat as he. I admit very freely that I misunderstood the facts. I understood from a statement made to me by a member of the committee that this had been done in that kind of way which I stated, and I thought on the whole, inasmuch as it was made the subject of affirmative action and voted down when I was present in the committee, there was something peculiar about it; but it seems now that a meeting was called of which I did not know.

As far as the Senator from Iowa is concerned, I will say to him that if he does not know me well enough, perhaps he will some time, if he and I shall have the good luck to come back here, learn that I would not impute anything to him personally of any kind or description which he would not be perfectly willing to bear. That is the end of that.

I admit that the Senator from Iowa had the right to lecture me in regard to the courtesies of the committee. He is the chairman. I have asked him repeatedly about things which I wanted to know in regard to courtesies that prevail among members of the Committee on Appropriations. I thought on the whole he intended to impute to me the purpose of concealing from the committee some information which I had myself personally. The information only came to me yesterday. Of course I might have mentioned it to him; but I thought on the whole I had better mention it to the Senate. I was absent until just the moment that this paragraph came up, and recalling then a communication made to me yesterday privately by the Secretary of the Interior, I thought I would move an amendment which would save the Government $4,000, which ought not to be considered a very great thing, of course.

Mr. BECK. In regard to the amendment now suggested by the Senator from Kansas, I ask that it be passed over, and for this reason: the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, through the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] has been anxiously endeavoring to reduce the rents of our rented buildings, and has got them down to a point where perhaps they are as low as they can be had; and I desire before an amendment of that sort is brought up to have a consultation with the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. VEST,] the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. ROLLINS,] and the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] to see if anything better could be done than the House has done. That was all that I desired. I know that committee has carefully considered the matter of the renting of buildings, on an occasion when I happened to be before them on other business, and I know that they are advised exactly of what is the least we can get buildings for. I wanted to have a consultation with them before any other amendment was made on that point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Kansas is withdrawn for the present.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the General Land-Office, in line 2108, after the word "dollars," to insert "one assistant commissioner, $2,500."

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend that amendment by adding:

To be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall perform such duties as may be assigned him by the Secretary of the Interior or provided by law.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of my honorable friend from Kansas whether it is customary to appoint the assistants of the heads of bureaus with the advice and consent of the Senate? There are certain officers whose duties——

Mr. PLUMB. I understood that part of my amendment to be in accordance with what had been done by the Senate in regard to other places. If not, I will withdraw that part of the amendment.

Mr. HOAR. Allow me to finish what I was saying.

There are some officers whose duty is so intimately connected with the duty of other public officers that it seems reasonable that the latter should practically have the selection, and therefore that the Secretary of the Interior, without being obliged to have the President applied to from outside, should have the power of appointing the assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office, who is to act in harmony with the Commissioner. I merely suggest that.

Mr. PLUMB. I accept the suggestion, and am willing to modify the amendment accordingly.

Mr. SHERMAN. My impression is that officers of this grade ought to be appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The assistant has the full power of the Commissioner, and I know that in other Departments that is the custom.

Mr. PLUMB. Is that true as to the heads of bureaus?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is true also as to heads of bureaus.

Mr. FRYE. But this is not the head of bureau.

Mr. SHERMAN. The assistant head of a bureau exercises the full powers of the head of the bureau during his absence.

Mr. HOAR. But I am asking now not for opposition to any suggestion of the Senator from Ohio, but simply for information, is there a single assistant head of a bureau under the Government whose appointment is not left to the head of the Department where he belongs? I do not remember any such case. Take for instance the first deputy commissioner of pensions, which office strikes my eye on a page of this bill. Is the first deputy commissioner of pensions appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or is he appointed by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. SHERMAN. My impression is that all deputy heads of bureaus ought to be appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I withdraw the suggestion. I will concede to the greater experience of my friend from Ohio.

Mr. CALL. I understand the Senator from Massachusetts to withdraw his amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He withdraws his objection to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CALL. I desire simply to say that it is very evident that an officer who is sometimes to be a commissioner ought to be confirmed by the Senate; and as this officer by this law will at times become the Commissioner of the General Land Office he ought to be confirmed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 2110, it is proposed to insert:

To be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall perform such duties as may be assigned him by the Secretary of the Interior or provided by law.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 2111, after the word "dollars," to insert "three inspectors of surveyors-general and district land offices, at $2,000 each."

Mr. MILLER, of California. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee the reason for this amendment, which creates three officers now unknown to the law, "three inspectors of surveyors-general and district land offices."

Mr. ALLISON. The Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office stated to the committee—and I believe there are letters from them to that effect—that there were a great many irregularities in the land offices and in the offices of the several surveyors-general that could only be cured by careful inspection by competent officers, and they asked for this force in order to enable them to reach this class of frauds or irregularities, and they made a good case so far as the committee could see, and we thought it was the interest of the public service to allow them these inspectors for this purpose.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I see that this has been inserted by the Appropriations Committee of the Senate. I was about to ask the chairman of that committee whether the request of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office had been made to the House committee before this bill was considered there.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no doubt the request was made, because these officers are regularly estimated for in the Book of Estimates. So the House committee must have had their attention called to the matter.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I notice that there is a bill before Congress, House bill No. 4697, which was introduced on the 1st of March, which provides for the creation of the offices of these three inspectors. It seems to me rather a novel proceeding to create new offices in an appropriation bill, and I should like to be convinced that there is some good reason for doing this before I can vote for it.

Mr. BECK. I can only state, as one member of the committee, the information I have. The Senator from California is aware that we have inspectors appointed now over the Indian agents, because it was said that at the Indian agencies a great many irregularities had occurred, and if men were appointed inspectors to go through from time to time, without the agents knowing when they would come, many irregularities perhaps would be stopped. They were appointed, and I believe their work has been beneficial.

Now, it is said that there are many irregularities in the sixty-five or sixty-eight land offices in the United States. Without some examination into them it is extremely difficult to detect any irregularities, or prevent frauds being perpetrated. This was said, among other things, and I believe it—the Senator from California may not be aware of it, but it is said to be a fact—that what they call "soldiers' scrip" is a very fashionable way in many of the Territories of the United States of locating land and fixing them so as to get what lands people want, and control thousands of acres in a Territory that has little water, located along the streams. A man will go with a one-hundred-and-sixty-acre land-warrant, bought for $160, and locate one tract of forty acres. He does not really want the forty acres, but he will locate forty acres and get scrip for one hundred and twenty acres after he has located his forty acres in the land offices, and then he will locate those one hundred and twenty acres in forty-acre tracts along the streams, so as to control ten miles square of land. It is suspected that some of the persons in the local land offices may be in collusion with the men who thus obtain the scrip; but there is no way of detecting it and showing the irregularities of it unless there are inspectors to examine the land offices and see how these things are done.

That is one of the difficulties. There are a great many other things. When sixty-five or sixty-eight land offices all over the United States find they can run without examination or inspection, without anybody making any inquiry into them, and with nobody ever to examine their books, knowing that the Commissioner of the General Land Office cannot go there, they may go into combinations with men in the Western Territories and let them do pretty much whatever they please.

It was thought by the committee, and certainly thought by me after I heard what was said, that it was very desirable that some check, some curb, some examination, some investigation should be had in regard to a great many things that were done that were said to be bad.

Mr. MORGAN. There is no more important provision in this bill relating to the public lands than the one put in by the Committee on Appropriations for these three inspectors. I regret that the Secretary of the Interior did not estimate for five, instead of three, because there is a very strong, urgent public necessity for having these inspectors. It grows out of two facts: first of all, the survey is at the foundation of every title to public lands, and difficulties in surveys are frequently occurring which delay the issue of patents and bring up questions of controversy that last for a long time.

The survey of the public lands is not made by official surveyors. It is all done by contract. Surveyors-general are appointed in various surveying districts, and they have the general official supervision of all the surveys; but when you wish to have a survey made, either by the order of the Government or by private arrangement, you hire your surveyor. He passes under some sort of an examination to see whether he is competent to make a survey or not, to lay out lands in townships and subdivide them. He goes out into the public domain, makes surveys, and reports back what he has done with his plats, many of which need correction.

In consequence of the fact that this surveying must be done—for that has been the experience of the General Land Office—by private contract and not by official surveyors sent into the field, it becomes very necessary to have inspectors of surveys to go actually into the field to see if this work is properly done. It is indispensable, and the Government has suffered very much and private individuals very much more for the want of these very inspectors to look after the surveys.

Now, we have another system. Under the law as it exists a person who wishes to survey a township of land distant, I will say, two hundred miles from the outer verge of the actual surveys made by the Government, can get on the meridian lines, run out his lines to the corner of the township that he proposes to survey, take his private surveyors with him and pay the expense of that survey, or he can make a deposit of money in the Land Office and have the surveyors that are employed by the Land Office to go out there and make the survey and return the plat, and after he has made this survey he gets scrip for the amount of money that he has expended in making it, which scrip stands good for the entry of land in the local land office.

It has been found on a close investigation of this subject by a committee of this body, the Committee on Public Lands, who examined the chiefs of divisions on oath, that very serious embarrassment and difficulty had occurred in regard to these surveys. It is impossible for the surveyors-general to go into the field and examine the surveys personally. They have just as much as they can attend to at their offices, and it turns out that this is the only Department of the Government where the transaction of public business is in unofficial hands, and there is nobody to superintend the transaction of this work.

I hope the Senator from California will be satisfied that we are entitled to at least three inspectors of the public lands. I think we should have five; I have no question but that we should have five. But let us try it awhile with three and see how we get along. Perhaps after awhile the Congress of the United States will find itself adequate to the duty of providing sufficient means for conducting the public business, especially in reference to the public lands. There is no department of this Government that has suffered so much as that of the disposal of this vast trust of the public domain for the want of Congressional attention, and for the want of Congressional, I will not call it liberality, but justice, toward the men who are engaged in the disposal of the public lands.

We have never supplied them with an adequate force, and the result is now that we have 150,000 cases remaining undecided in that department. That great law court has 150,000 cases in it undecided, and of those 150,000 at least one-third are in severe litigation. Some of the divisions are fifteen or twenty years behind the business of the country. Men are living upon lands now who have been entitled to their patents, to a decision of their causes, fifteen or twenty years ago, who have not been able to get it because the Government of the United States has not supplied clerical and legal force sufficient to adjudicate the cases. I do not believe there is a more faithful set of men in the United States Government than are in the Land Office, and you will scarcely find a more intelligent set of men anywhere. It is wonderful to me that men can be obtained for the small amount of money we pay them who render the service that is rendered there.

If Senators will put themselves to the pains of looking at the sworn testimony in the report which I hold in my hand, I think many of them will be astonished at the condition of the public land system of this country, that thing in which the people have more interest than in any other you can mention, that branch of the public service upon which rests the very foundation of the titles of thousands to their homes. Congress lingers along here in a parsimonious spirit afraid to do justice to the country, and allows these cases to hang back until witnesses are dead, papers are destroyed, moth-eaten, eaten up by rats and other vermin, molded until they cannot be read, hid away in vaults that are damp where the natural decay that falls on these papers is daily wiping out the most important records of title.

I am very glad that the suggestion is made by the honorable Senator from California, because it will give us some opportunity to bring to light a little of what is going on in that office.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Mr. President, I consider myself fortunate to have been the means of bringing out the remarks of the Senators from Kentucky and Alabama, and I am very much gratified to find so high an authority in favor of the appointment of these inspectors. I believe that the surveyors-general and the officers of the different land offices ought to be brought under a rigid surveillance, and I think that if this amendment shall be adopted proper persons to perform this duty of inspection will be appointed.

I am inclined to think there ought to be an amendment to this amendment adopted requiring that these inspectors shall be persons skilled in surveying and having knowledge of the land laws of this country. If you appoint inspectors from the ordinary walks of life, men having no skill or technical knowledge of this peculiar department of public business, they will amount to nothing. You will simply have three inspectors traveling about the country at Government expense and on Government salary who will know nothing of the duties which they are expected to perform, and will not be able to make a satisfactory and intelligent inspection of these different offices.

I will therefore offer an amendment to the amendment to insert after the word "officers," in line 2112:

Who shall be persons skilled in surveying and having knowledge of the land laws of the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. That I think is a very excellent amendment. I do not object to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. VOORHEES in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. MILLER] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I ask if this extends to all land States?

Mr. ALLISON. All the land offices in all the land States.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Land inspectors?

Mr. ALLISON. They are authorized to inspect all the land offices.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Three inspectors?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Now I move to amend the clause by inserting "to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior" after the words put in by the Senator from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 5664) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. No. 1020) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River at the town of Van Buren, Crawford County, Arkansas; and

A bill (S. No. 1810) to authorize the Rock Island and Southwestern Railway Company to construct a bridge over the Mississippi River at New Boston, State of Illinois.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 27th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 1218) to restore to the pension-roll the name of Frederick A. Garlick;

An act (S. No. 1301) granting an increase of pension to George Gans;

An act (S. No. 251) granting a pension to Alice McMahon;
An act (S. No. 832) granting a pension to Simeon Crain;
An act (S. No. 1409) for the relief of Mrs. Jennie S. Mitchell;
An act (S. No. 1608) authorizing the Texas and Saint Louis Railway Company to build certain bridges in the State of Arkansas;
An act (S. No. 165) granting a pension to Mrs. Rosa M. Wood;
An act (S. No. 102) to provide a building for the use of the United States circuit and district courts and post-office at Erie, Pennsylvania; and
An act (S. No. 1673) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to examine and report to Congress the amount of all claims of the States of Texas, Colorado, Oregon, Nebraska, California, Kansas, and Nevada, and the Territories of Washington and Idaho, for money expended and indebtedness assumed by said States and Territories in repelling invasions and suppressing Indian hostilities, and for other purposes.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask consent to make a report from a conference committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will receive the report.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 5664) "making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1 5 22, 23, 24, 25, 32, 33, 37, 38, 40, 41, 57, and 65.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 34, 36, 39, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 49, 50, 51, 52, 55, 56, 59, 60, 61, 63, 64, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, and 81, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$485,000;" and strike out, in lines 20, 21, and 22, page 1 of the bill, the following: "On page 265 of the Book of Estimates for 1883;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$17,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 54: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$426,825;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 58: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "Architect of the Capitol and the commissioners of the District," and strike out in line 3, page 19, of the bill the following words: "the Architect of the Capitol and;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 62: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Make the sum in the amended clause $3,318, in lieu of $3,000, in line 22, page 19 of the bill; and strike out, in line 8 of said amendment, the words "fifty-eight" and insert in lieu thereof "fifty-seven;" strike out, in line 10 of said amendment, the word "twelve" and insert in lieu thereof "thirteen;" and strike out, in line 12, the word "five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "six;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 74: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out from said amendment the words "and so forth" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and of like character;" and the Senate agree to the same.

P. B. PLUMB,
H. L. DAWES,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
J. H. KETCHAM,
FRANK HISCOCK,
WM. H. FORNEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CONGER. I should like to have some member of the conference committee give some explanation of the larger items in that report. Of course I have no means of knowing what changes are made, especially as we have no bill before us to judge by.

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator will indicate anything he has an interest to know about I shall be glad to advise him on that point.

Mr. CONGER. There are two or three large items, three or four hundred thousand dollars or more, stated in the report.

Mr. PLUMB. That was simply in regard to the totals, the change of which was made necessary by the change in the items comprising them.

Mr. CONGER. Does this have any reference to the water-works?

Mr. PLUMB. Not at all; there was no increase in the appropriation for water-works. On the contrary, we abolished the office of superintendent of the water-works.

Mr. CONGER. Does this bill provide for the extension of the water-works?

Mr. PLUMB. It has nothing at all about that. The chief points of difference about which the committee of conference concerned itself was an item of $10,000 which the Senate struck out for the repair of streets, and which striking out the Senate has receded from; an item of $50,000 for the commencement of a sewer in the northwestern portion of the city, which the Senate struck out and which the House has concurred in; an item in regard to the number of school directors, the House having made the number nine and the Senate having made it thirteen, and the Senate recedes, leaving the number at nine as fixed by the House.

On the question of the salary of the engineer District commissioner the Senate recedes from its amendment, and the Senate yields upon the point in regard to the appropriation for the extension of Fourteenth street, making the sum $6,000, as provided in the bill as it came from the House, and restores the amount of $25,000 for the repair of country roads and suburban streets, as it came from the House. There were no serious points of difference in regard to sums of money between the two Houses. The House yields upon the point of the abolition of the water registrar, and the office of assistant inspector of gas-meters, and various things of that kind. The control of the water of the city is transferred to the Engineer Bureau, and the office of water registrar is abolished.

Mr. CONGER. I should like to have some explanation why the appropriation of $40,000 for a sewer is stricken out of the bill. I wish to know why the committee of the Senate assented to having any less appropriation for such a purpose, so absolutely necessary to the health of the city.

Mr. PLUMB. That was done by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate and was concurred in by the Senate after debate, upon reasons which I stated then as reflecting the sentiment of the committee, and which I will restate.

In the first place, it was not deemed necessary, by comparison, that that work should be undertaken this year. In the next place, it was an appropriation for a portion of the city which by common consent had received much more than its share of appropriations heretofore made for improvements. Thirdly, and most important, it was not designed or expected that the appropriation provided for in the bill as it came from the House would complete the sewer. It was firmly believed by the committee, and acquiesced in by the Senate after debate, that to make the appropriation next year would result in giving the city the sewer completed for operation as quickly as it would if we made this appropriation now.

Mr. CONGER. In the examination of the question of sewerage and the health of the city by a committee appointed by the Senate, the testimony of a large number of residents and experts in regard to the health of the city (which has been printed for the use of the committee and which has perhaps been seen by other members of the Senate) shows very conclusively that a large part of the unhealthiness of the city arises from imperfect and insufficient sewerage, and, the necessity of the sewer referred to here for the part of the city requiring sewerage was specially dwelt upon. Congress is asked to appropriate hundreds of thousands of dollars for improving the health of the city, and here is a bill which, by the concurrent testimony of all, contains an item which is necessary for the immediate present health of a considerable portion of the city and the District.

I had hoped that there would be no diminution in appropriations for that branch of the service which would restore somewhat health to the city of Washington. I regret very much, although I do not propose to change this action, that a committee of the Senate, or a conference committee of the two Houses, should have seen fit to diminish these appropriations which look more particularly to the health of all the residents of this District.

Mr. PLUMB. I move the adoption of the report.

The report was concurred in.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6242) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

The Acting Secretary continued the reading of the bill to line 2113, in the appropriations for the General Land Office, as follows:

Three principal clerks at $1,800 each.

Mr. MORGAN. I move to amend that clause by striking out "$1,800" and inserting "$2,000." However, if the committee prefer that I should wait——

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator to give way until we get through with the amendments of the committee.

Mr. MORGAN. Then I will simply give notice of that amendment; and I also give notice of another amendment which I shall move, that the six chiefs of division at $2,000 each shall be taken out of the thirty-two clerks of class 4. I will not offer the amendment now, but will wait until we are through with the amendments of the committee.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 2121, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for compensation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, assistant commissioner, and the clerks and employés in the office from $360,400 to $368,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2129, after the word "indemnity," to strike out "one clerk" and insert "three clerks;" in line 2130, after the word "three," to insert "two of class 2;" and, in the same line, after the word "and," to strike out "seven" and insert "two;" so as to make the clause read:

From appropriation for "settlement of claims for swamp lands and swamp-land indemnity," three clerks of class 3, two of class 2, and two clerks of class 1; in all, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 2137.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 2134 I move, not from the committee, but as I believe it is necessary to carry out the provisions of the bill, to insert, after the word "expenses," the words "of inspectors while on duty and;" so as to read:

For diagrams, parchment paper for land-patents, furniture and repairs of the same, miscellaneous items, for the actual expenses of inspectors while on duty and of clerks detailed to investigate fraudulent land entries, trespasses on the public lands, and cases of official misconduct, and for advertising and telegraphing, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 2137, I move to increase the appropriation from $25,000 to $40,000, which is the sum estimated for by the Secretary of the Treasury and by the Auditor for the Land Office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the "Indian Office," in line 2144, to increase the appropriation "for compensation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs" from $3,500 to $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2145, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Assistant commissioner, $2,500.

Mr. ALLISON. After the words "assistant commissioner" I move to insert "to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," and also that the provision relating to his duties may be inserted which was made with reference to the assistant commissioner of the General Land Office.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2147, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Two chiefs of division, at $2,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2150, to reduce the number of "clerks of class 4" from four to three.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2151, after the word "three," to insert:

One stenographer at $1,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2152, before the word "clerks," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "sixteen," and after the word "two" to insert "one of whom shall be a draughtsman;" so as to read:

Sixteen clerks of class 2, one of whom shall be a draughtsman.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2154, to increase the number of "clerks at $1,000 each" from six to eight.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2156, after the word "and," to strike out "one laborer" and insert "two laborers."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2157, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for the compensation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, assistant commissioner, and the clerks and employés in his office from $82,320 to $93,180.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the Pension Office, in line 2167, to increase the item for the compensation of the "second deputy commissioner" from $2,400 to $3,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2168, to increase the item of appropriation for the compensation of the "chief clerk" from $2,000 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2169, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Assistant chief clerk, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2170, to increase the item of appropriation for the compensation of "medical referee" from $2,250 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2171, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Assistant medical referee, $2,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2172, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

Twenty examiners at $2,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2173, after the word "four," to strike out "clerks of class 4" and insert "qualified surgeons;" in line 2174, after the word "be," to strike out "qualified surgeons and;" and in line 2175, after the word "profession," to insert "at $2,000 each;" so as to read:

Four qualified surgeons, who shall be experts in their profession, at $2,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2176, after the word "fifteen," to strike out "clerks of class 4" and insert "medical examiners;" and in line 2178, after the word "profession" to insert "at $1,800 each; twelve chiefs of division at $2,000 each; law clerk, $2,000; thirty-five principal examiners for review board at $2,000 each; twenty-four assistant chiefs of division at $1,800 each;" so as to read:

Fifteen medical examiners, who shall be surgeons of education, skill, and experience in their profession, at $1,800 each; twelve chiefs of division at $2,000 each; law clerk, $2,000; thirty-five principal examiners for review board at $2,000 each; twenty-four assistant chiefs of division at $1,800 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2184, to reduce the number of "clerks of class 4" from "one hundred and nineteen" to "sixty-five."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2186, to reduce the number of "clerks of class 1" from "three hundred and ninety-nine" to "three hundred and ninety-eight."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2188, after the word "each," to insert:

One superintendent of buildings, $1,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2192, after the word "each," to strike out "twenty copyists at $840 each, twenty" and insert "forty;" so as to read:

Forty copyists at $720 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, before the word "messengers," in line 2194, to strike out "ten messengers and ten assistants" and insert "twenty;" so as to read:

Twenty messengers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2197, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for the compensation of the Commissioner of Pensions, deputy commissioners, and clerks and employés in the Pension Office, from $1,949,150 to $1,957,150.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2208, after "eighteen hundred and seventy-eight," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the duties of first and second deputy commissioners shall be such as are now fixed by law for the deputy commissioner of pensions; and in case of death, resignation, absence, or sickness of the Commissioner his duties shall devolve upon the first deputy commissioner until his successor is appointed, or such absence or sickness ceases, and in case of the like absence of the Commissioner and first deputy commissioner, the second deputy commissioner shall act as commissioner in like manner.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "United States Patent Office," in line 2238, after the word "each," to insert:

Twenty-five assistant principal examiners, at $2,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2243, after the word "each," to strike out:

Twenty-five fourth assistant examiners, at $1,200 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2265, to increase the total amount of appropriation for compensation of the Commissioner of Patents, assistant commissioner, and clerks and employés in the office from $548,800 to $568,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2276, after the word "ice," to strike out "advertising moneys" and insert "advertising, moneys;" so as to make the clause read:

For contingent and miscellaneous expenses of the Patent Office, namely: For construction and repair of model-cases, stationery, portfolios for drawings, furniture, carpets, ice, advertising, moneys refunded, printing engraved patent-heads, paper for the same, international exchanges, and other necessary office expenses, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 2297.

Mr. HOAR. I think it will be more convenient, as the paragraph has been read, to allow me to make a motion to amend now, which, I understand, will not be objected to. This paragraph I move to amend by inserting after the word "and," in line 2293, the words:

The producing of copies of the weekly issues of drawings of patents, designs, and trade-marks to be done.

So as to make the paragraph read:

For photolithographing or otherwise reproducing copies of drawings destroyed or damaged by fire or otherwise exhausted, $34,720; the work of said photolithographing, or otherwise producing plates and copies, referred to in this and the two preceding paragraphs, to be done under the supervision of the Commissioner of Patents, and the producing of copies of the weekly issues of drawings of patents, designs, and trade-marks to be done in the city of Washington, if it can be there done at reasonable rates; and the Commissioner of Patents, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, is authorized to make contracts therefor.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I was going to suggest to my friend that the chairman of the committee who has charge of the bill is out of his seat at this moment.

Mr. HOAR. I have the assent of the chairman in a letter stating that these words were omitted by a mistake of the engrossing clerk in a former Congress. I will state the point. The Senator from Iowa has now returned. The statute requires that all the photolithographing or making copies for the Patent-Office shall be done in the city of Washington, if it can be done at reasonable rates. It may be done here at reasonable rates, and still the rates be much greater than those asked anywhere else in the country, so that the Government may be a great loser.

The reason for that is that it would be a great risk to the drawings accompanying specifications for patents to have them conveyed by express away from this city to be photolithographed elsewhere, and they do not therefore want to expose those drawings to the risk even for the sake of getting the advantage of competition in other places. That is a very good reason; but the photolithographing and reproducing the copies of drawings which were destroyed by fire, partly or wholly, all the old mass of the records of the Patent Office, are not affected by that risk, and there is no reason whatever, if Mr. Osgood, in Boston, or a gentleman in New York, or anybody else may do that work cheaper than it can be done in Washington, why they should not have an opportunity to compete.

My amendment therefore limits this prohibition to go out of Washington to the copies of the weekly issues of drawings of patents, designs, and trade-marks, and leaves the Commissioner of Patents, with the assent of the Secretary of the Interior, to make the contracts out of the city if he chooses. He will never do it then if there is any possible risk or objection.

As I said, the matter got into the bill by an accident of the engrossing clerk; it did not pass in this shape when the appropriation act was passed some few years ago, and it has been kept on from year to year.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. As I understand the paragraph, the objection to having the matter leave Washington is time more than anything else. It takes time for the examination. For instance, work is going on, the proof must be seen several times probably during its progress, and if it should be sent away a thousand miles or five hundred miles, or any other distance, it consumes very much time; and in addition to that explanations cannot be made between the Patent Office and the photolithograph office. Consequently it would require so much time and be such a disadvantage as to make it almost impossible to send the work elsewhere to be done.

Mr. HOAR. Is not the Senator willing, in the matter of copying the old mass of ancient records in the Patent Office which were affected by the fire, to leave that to the combined discretion of the Commissioner of Patents and the Secretary of the Interior, both of whom must agree under the bill as I leave it before any part of it could be sent out? Let the Senator from West Virginia look at the amendment. The provision as it now stands is that all the photolithographing shall be done in the city of Washington. My amendment limits that photolithographing by inserting after the word "and," in line 2293, the words:

The producing of copies of the weekly issues of drawings of patents, designs, and trade-marks to be done—in the city of Washington. Then it goes on as the original paragraph reads:

And the Commissioner of Patents, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, is authorized to make contracts therefor.

So that the work cannot go out of Washington, even if my amendment is adopted, except in the case of the old copies and in cases where both these officers concur.

As I said to the Senator, what I propose now is just what the committee agreed on three or four years ago, but by a mistake of the engrossing clerk that appropriation act was engrossed in the way it now stands in the bill. I have a letter from the chairman of the committee stating the fact.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Suppose that to be so, has it not worked very well for the last three or four years? As the bill now stands, has it not worked very well for several years past?

Mr. HOAR. My colleague says he understands that the Commissioner of Patents has disregarded it all this time. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. DAWES. My impression is that it is the fact that this mistake was never brought to the attention of the Department until now. I think that if the attention of the committee had been drawn to the phraseology of the original amendment they would have inserted it. I have a recollection of the debate under which this particular branch, it was thought, ought to be done in Washington. Then the objection was raised that that would make a monopoly; and the qualification as to this particular branch of the work was that if it could be done at reasonable rates, everybody admits that it ought to be done here, if possible; but still that qualification is necessary to prevent a monopoly here in Washington. However, by a mistake of phraseology it has come to apply to other things which nobody ever supposed it would apply to. The attention of the Department has been called to it. That is the way I understand the position of the matter; that it never was intended to apply to anything but this particular branch. I think the Senator from West Virginia will see that it would be a dangerous monopoly to have every part of it forced into the city of Washington.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Yes; but my colleague on the committee will well remember that nothing was brought to the attention of the committee.

Mr. DAWES. I understand that they never observed it until since this bill came from our committee, that their attention was drawn to this phraseology since the bill came from the committee, and they traced it back and found that it originated as my colleague has stated.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President——

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I should be glad to hear from the chairman of the Committee on Patents on the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. VOORHEES in the chair.) The Senator from Connecticut has the floor.

Mr. PLATT. I have been trying to understand this amendment for a long time, and I rose to ask that it might be reported at the desk. I cannot in the confusion which is existing here understand anything about it.

The Principal Legislative Clerk read the amendment of Mr. HOAR.

Mr. HOAR. Let me repeat in simply a sentence, for the information of my honorable friend, the chairman of the Committee on Patents, that the bill as it now reads requires all photolithographic work to be done in the city of Washington, if it can be done here at reasonable rates, although it might be done at much less rates elsewhere.

The reason for that, which applies to a good deal of the photolithographing, is, in the first place, that it is dangerous and improper to carry the plates to be copied in this way, the drawings of specifications and patents on which great property rights depend, out of the city and expose them to loss in expressage. In the next place, as the learned Senator from West Virginia so well stated, you want to have the work done under the eye of the office, where explanations may be prompt and clear and rapid; but that reason does not apply to "photolithographing or otherwise reproducing copies of drawings destroyed or damaged by fire or otherwise exhausted," mentioned in lines 2287, 2288, and 2289.

There is no reason why those should not be sent to Boston or New York or elsewhere if the work can be done cheaper.

My amendment therefore limits this absolute prohibition to the patentees' drawings, which are to be copied for the Weekly Gazette, which are not to be taken out of Washington, and to the designs and trade-marks, on the true recording of which important property rights depend, leaving the other work to be contracted for out of the city, if the Commissioner of Patents and the Secretary of the Interior both concur that it is expedient to do so. It is a very plain and simple matter.

Mr. CONGER. The work of preparing for photolithographing properly any such matter is very expensive. It cannot be carried on or the plant for such an office furnished without very great expense, wherever it may be. It is absolutely necessary that there should be for the different Departments of this Government such an office in Washington or else the Government must establish such offices for itself.

This is not a new question. My friend from Massachusetts as long ago as when he honored the House with membership there, desired that this photolithographing should be done in Boston; other gentlemen desired that it should be done in New York, and this question came up. It became apparent that to have a proper office for doing the work not only of the Patent Office but of the other offices in photolithographing there would be great expense incurred by whoever could do that work, and the office should be furnished with all the material for doing it thoroughly and well. There is such an office in this city. Under this system the work has been done cheaper than it has ever been done by contract abroad.

It came to the knowledge of the committee in the House (and I refer to that as being the place where I examined the subject more) that the sending away of this lithographing business cost far more in keeping messengers and proof-readers running back and forth to the offices and in transporting from hour to hour and from day to day the material to be photolithographed and the proof returned than the expense of the photolithographing each item by itself.

It was thus that the House and Senate some years ago adopted this system. I have never heard a complaint of it except from gentlemen who desired to break up the office in this city by taking away so much of the work as would leave it with the vast amount of machinery and plant and expense unable to perform the smaller amount of work which would be left here, if so much was sent away.

Mr. HOAR. On what ground does the Senator impute such a motive as that to the person who proposes this amendment?

Mr. CONGER. What motive?

Mr. HOAR. A desire to break up the office in Washington.

Mr. CONGER. I have not imputed any such motive.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator said he never heard a complaint of this arrangement except from persons who desired to break up the office in Washington. I think he probably was not aware of the force of what he said.

Mr. CONGER. I did not apply the remark to the Senator, and if other gentlemen outside of the Senate are interested in my remarks they will call me to account. I made no such remark about the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. I was merely proposing to amend the paragraph, and made no complaint of the present system.

Mr. CONGER. I have seen complaints frequently in the papers of Boston and New York, but I did not suppose they emanated from the Senator. I should hope not.

These are the reasons why this system was changed. In years past this business was transferred to different offices in different parts of the country, some at one point and some at another, according to their contract, and the business, as the Commissioner of Patents reported at that time to Congress, was in such a condition that the work could not be properly done; that it could not be done, as the law required, under his supervision. This very bill says it shall be done under the supervision of the Commissioner of Patents, but if the work be distributed around among the different cities where there are lithographic offices, it could not be done under his immediate supervision and his control.

When I say I have heard no complaint of the present system I mean to say that in the Patent Office and by the officers in that office who have charge of this business the work is reported to have been done uniformly well and for moderate prices. It seems to me the Government ought either to establish here in Washington a lithographic office for itself or keep here those who do the business for the different departments of the office, so that more work may be done, and therefore cheaper work done for the Government.

Mr. HOAR. If the portion of the photolithographing to which I have referred can be done better out of Washington than in it, or is to be done better in Washington than out of it, the Commissioner of Patents and the Secretary of the Interior certainly will know that. There is no vast burden to be imposed upon them. The law as it will be if this amendment passes only permits arrangements to be made which have their approbation.

I shall not undertake to follow the Senator from Michigan into his accurate knowledge of the motives of persons who make a complaint or seek by an amendment to perfect an existing arrangement which got into the law by a mere accident or mistake of the engrossing clerk.

Mr. CONGER. I understood the Senator to say that this was a mere accident of the engrossing clerk; but after the fullest discussion in the House and in the Senate this form of it by an overwhelming vote was carried and made the law of the land. I disagree with the gentleman in stating that it was a mistake of any clerk.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that, but I disagree with the Senator. I suppose the disagreement will pass for what it is worth.

Mr. CONGER. It is a mutual disagreement.

Mr. HOAR. But my particular exception was to the vast knowledge of my honorable friend from Michigan, who knows what is passing in everybody's mind who has an opinion upon a question of public policy which he supports by public reason. The Senator says that nobody complains of the existing law which I seek to amend, except persons who want to break up the national office here. I think he is mistaken in that also. I do not think he knows what the motives of persons are. He certainly does not know what mine are. It is a very simple and plain matter, it seems to me.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Massachusetts says that this phraseology was inserted by a mistake of the engrossing clerk, and gives as authority for that statement, I believe, some old letter of mine, written some years ago. Of course I do not remember the exact circumstances in reference to the phraseology of this paragraph. I know that from year to year there have been debates and controversies about it in both Houses in various ways. Finally, I think some four or five years ago, the phraseology which is now embodied in the bill was agreed upon, and it has remained in that language.

I do know, however, that the Commissioner of Patents and a former Secretary of the Interior thought it unwise to allow the originals to go out of the city and to be returned by express, being carried backward and forward. They thought it wise that the originals should be under the control and direction of some proper officer here, and that the work should be done here.

I have no particular objection to any amendment which will bring this matter into a committee of conference so that we may look into it further and see whether or not some modification ought to be made. That is all I desire, and I think it ought to be satisfactory to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. Entirely so.

Mr. ALLISON. If it shall turn out that it is a wise thing to send the originals to Boston, which is a very good place to send them to, of course, if they go out of the city, or to New York, so be it; but I should not like to assent to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts as a substantive amendment without consulting the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Patents. This is a matter that so intimately relates to their work and to the detail of administration in those offices that I would not undertake here in a sort of perfunctory way to put in an amendment making the change that this amendment proposes.

Mr. HOAR. The paragraph cannot go into a committee of conference without an amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. So I understand.

Mr. HOAR. This amendment only proposes to allow the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Patents to do what they think is right about it.

Mr. ALLISON. So I understand. I understand that the Senator from Massachusetts proposes what he considers to be a wise amendment here, with all these things lying before us for weeks, coming in at the tail-end of a discussion, after the bill has been reported, and presenting to us an amendment and asking us to adopt it without understanding how it will affect a great Department of the Government. That is what I object to about these amendments.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the chairman of the committee if he has heard any complaint of the way in which the work has been done, or that it has not been done at proper prices?

Mr. ALLISON. I have heard no complaint of the manner, the method, or the price paid for the work.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. So I have understood.

Mr. ALLISON. The suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts is the first suggestion I have heard, made here on the floor of the Senate yesterday, and we have run over the bill, and spent a whole week at it last week. The printed copy has been given out for three, four, or five weeks; and yet we have presented here, at the last moment, an amendment which may or may not affect seriously a great Department of the Government.

Mr. HOAR. I think the complaint is a little unreasonable.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not make any complaint; I merely state the fact. I know the Senator from Massachusetts is not responsible for this.

Mr. HOAR. This point was brought to my attention for the first time this morning. The bill has been before the Senate in print for two days.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I beg to remind the Senator of the fact that the bill has been here ten days from the House.

Mr HOAR. That is another point. I am making my statement. This bill has been reported from the committee two days. A gentleman comes on here and brings in his pocket a letter, which he has shown me, from the present chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who reported the bill and called it up yesterday morning for the first time, the letter stating that the phraseology of the bill as it now stands is not what was agreed on by the committee or the two Houses in a former Congress, but that it got into the bill by a mistake of the engrossing clerk. That of course does not affect the right or wrong of the question one way or the other, but I think it does relieve this gentleman from the charge of laches. He supposed that probably the chairman of the committee might bear it in mind and make the correction himself.

The question on the whole is whether it is right and proper. If that be true, it does seem to me that if the amendment shall seem reasonable to the Senate, (if it shall seem unreasonable, as it does to my honorable friend from Michigan, of course it ought not to be adopted,) then it ought to go into the bill, and if the committee of conference find there is any objection to it they will withdraw it.

I repeat, the amendment proposes only to leave this part of the work to be done outside of Washington if the Commissioner of Patents and the Secretary of the Interior concur in the opinion that it should be done outside of Washington; that is all.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question, and that is, how did this gentleman get the knowledge or information that the law was not what the Congress that passed it intended it should be?

Mr. HOAR. I have stated that three or four times.

Mr. ALLISON. I will explain that to the Senator. It seems that I had some time in the past written a letter, I do not know when, although the Senator from Massachusetts casually exhibited to me a letter that I had written from my home in Iowa in answer to a letter received from somebody in Boston, in which I wrote him as to the phraseology which he suggested had been put in a bill either by a mistake of some enrolling clerk or by a change made by a committee of conference.

Mr. HOAR. I do not think the Senator wrote that it may have been changed in conference.

Mr. ALLISON. Changed by the engrossing clerk or in a committee of conference, I think. What I complain of is not of the Senator from Massachusetts, but of a gentleman coming on here from Boston and pretending that he has been indulging in a Rip Van Winkle sleep for four or five years and suddenly resurrecting an old letter of mine, written from my home, merely stating what had occurred, and making that the basis here of an important change in an important paragraph of the bill. That is what I complain of.

Mr. HOAR. I supposed, I will tell my friend, that this proposition would be assented to with the most absolute unanimity by every member of the Senate, it struck me as being so reasonable. I was mistaken. I supposed that when I proposed it the Senator from Iowa would get up and say that it ought to be done as a matter of course. I had no idea that it would excite an opposition or a question or a suggestion.

Mr. ALLISON. So it seemed to me at the first suggestion, but when I came to ascertain that the basis of it was some old letter of mine I rather looked into the phraseology, and I do not know now how it would affect the bill. I am a little afraid of gentlemen from Boston or from any other part of the country who come here for this purpose at this late day, after this has been the law for five years, and after this bill has been reported and passed in the House, and after it was considered by a sub-committee of the Senate Committee on Appropriations for a week, and then considered in full committee. I will say in addition that one of the members of the sub-committee on this very bill was the colleague of the Senator from Massachusetts, and we never heard a lisp about this matter; we were told this clause was perfectly satisfactory, and yet this gentleman from Boston turns up yesterday with a remarkable letter from me, written from my home from memory, and upon that makes a basis for this change of phraseology. That is all I complain of.

I complain that this gentleman from Boston slept so long. He should have come here a week ago and said to me "Mr. ALLISON, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, here is what you wrote to me some time ago, and I want this phraseology changed," but he conveniently waits until the bill is reported to the Senate, until he can have an opportunity of consulting with the distinguished Senator, and then presents it here.

I do not know but that the amendment may be correct enough, and I am perfectly willing to make such an amendment in the paragraph as will place this business in the hands of a committee of conference.

Mr. HOAR. That is all I want.

Mr. ALLISON. But I do not want to commit the Senate to the proposition made by this gentleman from Boston that I know nothing or very little about.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. Let the amendment be again read, so that Senators may understand it.

Mr. HOAR. I will state what it is.

It strikes me that my honorable friend from Iowa is a little unreasonable. The appropriation bills come in here by the dozen—thirteen of them I think there are in all—and there is not one of them in regard to which the committee who are in session while the bill is going on, in the interval of our sessions, do not come in with amendments by the dozen. I will venture to say that the Senator from Iowa has in his pocket or desk now amendments to this bill that the committee have agreed on since they authorized him to report the bill. If they have not agreed on such amendments, it is a very remarkable and exceptional case.

To say that the gentleman from Boston is guilty of any impropriety because he did not get here until the bill was taken up and until he saw in the newspapers that the bill was taken up, strikes me as a little, I will not say ridiculous because nothing can be ridiculous that comes from my friend from Iowa, but if it came from me it would be exceedingly ridiculous; I will say that.

The amendment does not stand on the question whether it is brought on at one time or another, or whether somebody in one part of the country or another is unreasonable. It stands on its merits. I have not heard a suggestion against its merits. If the amendment cannot commend itself to the sound judgment of the Committee on Appropriations, to that committee and nobody else in the Senate, I shall not press it.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator to strike out, in line 2292, the words "and the two preceding" before "paragraphs," and to change the word "paragraphs" to "paragraph." That will give us jurisdiction to examine the matter in conference.

Mr. HOAR. Very well, I will consent to that. I am willing to stand by the Senator's own examination and that of the Senator from West Virginia. Let the committee simply consult the Commissioner of Patents, and if as an expert and a man of practical sense he thinks it ought not to be done, they will not do it; if he thinks it ought to be done, they will consider it further. That is all I ask.

Mr. CONGER. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Iowa takes out all the appropriation of any account, and if that amendment is made, we might as well require all the work to be done abroad. It only leaves about a quarter of the appropriation to come within the provisions of this bill. If it is not desirable to keep up such an establishment in Washington, let us have no law at all about it, but let the work go wandering around all over the country. I object to the amendment now suggested more than to the other amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; I withdraw the amendment. I do not care anything about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONGER. I might make the point of order that the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts changes existing law. I have saved that point of order for the last, if it should become necessary.

Mr. HOAR. This appropriation act is only a law running from year to year. It is not a permanent law.

Mr. CONGER. Still it is the law until it is changed.

Mr. HOAR. Every year there is this particular condition or limitation upon the appropriation, and now when it is proposed to renew it I propose to modify that part of it, and it cannot be said that it is a change of existing law by striking something out of the bill.

Mr. CONGER. The bill merely leaves the law as it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is done by appropriation committees from year to year can be changed.

Mr. HOAR. I renew the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the Senator withdraws his other amendment?

Mr. HOAR. I withdraw my former amendment, and on the suggestion of the chairman of the committee, in line 2292, I move to strike out the words "and the two preceding," before "paragraphs," and to change "paragraphs" to "paragraph."

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That I understand is to give jurisdiction over the matter in the committee of conference.

Mr. HOAR. That is all.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not commit myself, of course, to the language one way or the other.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The object of the Senator from Massachusetts, I understand, is not to commit the Senate to his amendment.

Mr. HOAR. It does not commit the Senate. It is so understood. If the committee do not find it reasonable, I shall not press it any further.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I want it understood that the Senate is not committed to the amendment.

Mr. HOAR. That is so understood.

Mr. CONGER. That leaves out of the provisions of the bill the paragraph in regard to producing plates for the Official Gazette, and the main reason given for all this is that the photolithographing for the Official Gazette should be done here. To adopt this amendment leaves that to be sent off wandering around the country, if anybody desires it. It is worse than the other amendment a good deal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. With the consent of the Senator from Iowa, the Chair would like to lay some formal business before the Senate, so that it may be journalized.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which, on motion of Mr. DAWES, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, of the 22d instant, with accompanying papers, submitting the draft of a proposed clause for insertion in one of the pending appropriation bills to provide for the payment for improvements made by certain settlers on the Jicarilla Apache Indian reservation, in New Mexico.

The subject is presented for the consideration of Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 28, 1882.

NATIONAL BANKING ASSOCIATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives concurring in some and non-concurring in other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4167) to enable national banking associations to extend their corporate existence.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a conference with the House.

Mr. BECK. I desire to hear what the motion is. I think the bill had better be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is that the Senate insist on its amendments disagreed to by the House and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator from Kentucky object to the motion?

Mr. BECK. My idea was to let the bill go to the Committee on Finance, because there are several matters connected with the subject that I hope to be able to get the Committee on Finance, either through a conference or in some other way, to add to the bill. The House has rejected quite a number of important amendments, and there are other amendments which I hope may be so arranged that when the bill goes to a committee of conference they can be examined.

For example, we received a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury to-day by which it appears that the provisions of the law have been violated requiring directors of national banks, whose charters we are about to extend for twenty years, to take an oath to comply with the provisions of the law that they will not charge more interest than is allowed by the laws of the States in which they are located, and those oaths have to be filed with the Comptroller of the Currency and kept by him. If the oath is not taken, or if the provision of law is violated in regard to it, the charters of the offending banks are required to be forfeited.

Having information that the Comptroller of the Currency was allowing oaths to be taken varying from those prescribed, especially in the city of Richmond, and I suppose all over the United States, but having the information about the city of Richmond, I made the statement that it was alleged that those things were being done and I sent for the information and have before me now the oaths of the directors of the National Bank of Virginia, in the city of Richmond, and of the Merchants' National Bank, in the city of Richmond, filed year after year, taken for four or five years. I want to see if we can arrange the bill so as to prevent such violations of law by the Comptroller. This is a specimen of the oaths they take:

Oath of directors.

STATE OF VIRGINIA, City of Richmond, ss:

We, the undersigned, directors of the National Bank of Virginia, of Richmond, of the State of Virginia, do each of us solemnly swear that we are citizens of the United States, and residents of the State of Virginia, and that we will severally, so far as the duty devolves on us, diligently and honestly administer the affairs of said bank; and that we will not knowingly violate, or willingly permit to be violated, any of the provisions of the Revised Statutes of the United States under which this bank has been organized—except as to the present law of this State with regard to the rate of discount, and that each of us is the bona fide owner, in his own right, of the number of shares of stock subscribed by him or standing in his name on the books of the said bank, and required by said Revised Statutes; and that the same is not hypothecated, or in any way pledged as security for any loan or debt.

Then here is an interpolation—

For five years, under a provision of law requiring them to take an oath that they will not allow any of the provisions of that title of the Statutes to be violated, the Comptroller has accepted—and I have the proof in my hand—from 1876 up to 1881, from all the directors of the Merchants' National Bank, in Richmond, and the National Bank of Virginia, in Richmond, oaths excepting therefrom the obligation not to charge more interest than the law requires; and that is in the face of section 5147, which requires that every director shall take a certain oath; of section 5197, which limits the rate of interest to that provided by law; and in the face of section 5239, which requires the Comptroller, if any of these provisions are violated, to proceed in court to forfeit the charters of such banks. Those sections of the Revised Statutes are as follows:

SEC. 5147. Each director, when appointed or elected, shall take an oath that he will, so far as the duty devolves on him, diligently and honestly administer the affairs of such association, and will not knowingly violate, or willingly permit to be violated, any of the provisions of this title, and that he is the owner in good faith, and in his own right, of the number of shares of stock required by this title, subscribed by him, or standing in his name on the books of the association, and that the same is not hypothecated, or in any way pledged, as security for any loan or debt. Such oath, subscribed by the director making it, and certified by the officer before whom it is taken, shall be immediately transmitted to the Comptroller of the Currency, and shall be filed and preserved in his office.
